62-acre Route 3A site is back on the market

But according to William Richey, vice president of the Richey Marketing Group of Boston — the exclusive agent for the property, the expansive parcel offers ocean views and with zoning changes would be suitable for up-scale residential development.

"I'd really like to see a nice upscale development or a mixed-use development," said Richey, noting "there is a demand for housing in Cohasset."

Retail or corporate use or elderly and assisted living are some other options for the site, said Richey who noted that while the property has only been on the market for a month, interest has been raised by residential developers.

"It's a prime piece of property. One of the nicest we've handled lately," Richey said.

But Cohasset developer Wayne Sawchuk said there are serious limitations to the parcel that would make residential development unlikely.

"The biggest problem is the lack of septic facilities," said Sawchuk who maintained that any additional development would require the construction of a separate septic treatment facility.

"It's going to be a very difficult site to develop and they're asking too much to encourage manufacturing or industrial use," he said.

The land's location next to the controversial Cohasset Heights Landfill and its proximity to surrounding conservation land, provide additional pitfalls for a developer, Sawchuk said.

A golf course or a new, more expansive South Shore Music Circus were two development notions Sawchuk offered for the former Webb-Norfolk property. By moving the Music Circus, the existing site on Sohier could be used for school playing fields or an MBTA commuter parking lot when the Greenbush train returns, he suggested.

Selectman Peter Pratt said he also had concerns about residential development because he fears it will have not only and economic impact on the town's budget but also an environmental impact on surrounding conservation land.

"Clearly, anything on the backside of that property is within the watershed protection zone," said Pratt, who would like to see some light industrial use of the site rather than residential use.

"This land should remain zoned industrial," said Pratt, who maintained he would "fight against any down zoning to residential use."

Activists want town action

"It's not right," she said. "Somebody's got to pay attention. Think of the water people drank."

For eight months or so, the two local activists have waged a tireless battle to convince taxpayers to subsidize the installation of sewers to the 345 homes in North Cohasset.

While that fight has not yet been won and will certainly ignite again during the annual town meeting season next spring — the women are pushing the water rate issue now.

The combined impact of sewer betterments, sewer maintenance and operational costs, and the water-rate hike will make a large dent in North Cohasset homeowners' wallets.

About $400 annually will go toward Mass-American's 156 percent rate hike approved last spring by the state Department of Public Utilities. The average homeowners' bill will go from about $250 to $650 a year, officials say.

Sullivan and Plante suggested having the town buy out Mass-American in North Cohasset or have the town buy the water and sell it to the homeowners at the same rate as residents on town water pay. About 10 percent of Cohasset homes and all of Hull and Hingham are served by Mass-American.

Selectman Peter Pratt, a former water commissioner, said the town did not buy the water system in North Cohasset 45 years ago along with the rest of the town for engineering reasons.

But he said the town should see if there is any benefit in getting involved in the appellate process launched by Hingham and Hull. Those towns are appealing the rake hike in Supreme Judicial Court.

The century-old pipes in North Cohasset could provide the key to relief, Pratt said.

"Maybe rate relief is tied up in the decrepit nature of the pipes. I think North Cohasset in a per subscriber basis is the most decrepit part of the distribution system," he said.

Selectman Ronnie McMorris suggested that town counsel look at the DPU rate decision to see if the rate hike is based on quality of service.

Selectmen agreed to have the health agent obtain water samples from 10 North Cohasset homes this week and have the samples tested at the Cohasset Water Department. Selectmen also want to talk with officials in Hingham and Hull to see if there is any benefit to Cohasset joining the appeal.

They also suggested North Cohasset residents call the selectmen's office with complaints which will be logged in and reported to the D.P.U.

Much of the increase approved by the D.P.U. covers construction and operational costs of Mass-American's new $40 million water treatment facility on Main Street in Hingham. Plante and Sullivan argue that in North Cohasset, they are not getting any benefit from the new facility and therefore should not have to pay for it.

AROUND TOWN/Sallyann Chatterton

Mark your calendar for Grandparents' Day!

We must begin the column this week with a welcome back special — two lovely families have "come home," and we're so glad!

First of all, our new neighbors, Kathy and Dave Marks Jr. just moved in at 1 Red Gate Lane. We are sure most of Cohasset knows that already. The wonderful improvements they've made on the outside are surely causing heads to turn when people drive by. Dave and Kathy's two daughters, Lisa, 13, and Laura, 11, got a huge Cohasset welcome at their respective schools, and they are right at home already. As Dave says, "It is nice to be back home." Be sure to tell them how nice it is to have them here when you see them!

Then, another well-known family made a wonderful return, and Cliff and Peg Dickson couldn't be more pleased. Lee traveled all over the country before deciding Cohasset was the best. She and hubby Jim, along with their son, Andrew, 4, bought a house right next door to Cliff and Peg! So, when you see Cliff in his truck and there is a dear little boy sitting next to him instead of the trusty Golden, you'll know that's Andrew. We are pretty sure the dog will still get the window seat, though! Anyway, welcome to all!

And happy birthday greetings to same — Lee and Jim both just turned 40! A great celebration, we're sure!

On the subject of birthdays, our little Kelsie turned 7 yesterday, Sept. 11, can you believe it? Kelsie is really a big girl now, in first grade, and her teacher is none other than Fran Drago, one of Cohasset's finest ladies! Small world, huh? Happy birthday, Kelsie!

Erin McAllister

Erin C. McAllister is quite a gal! She made the dean's list for the spring semester at UMass, Amherst, with an average of 3.91! Erin is entering her senior year as a communications major; for the past two summers, Erin has been employed as the marketing assistant at South Shore Music Circus, a challenging job to be sure! In fact, last fall Erin was declared the winner of the South Shore Music Circus annual scholarship of $1,500 toward her college degree.

Needless to say, everyone who knows her knows what a great, hard-working person she is, and is very proud of her and her efforts. Also a little bit in awe — how does she do it all?

We went to the Farmers Market again last week, and honest, it's great! There's wonderful produce, beautiful flowers, yummy Zinnia's food — anything and everything you could want! Plus, the people you haven't seen in ages are there — all of that and one more detail that we'll bet you don't know! All of us know Louis and Jean Bailey and their wonderful gardening prowess. Well, they have a stand there, with veggies and homemade muffins (using their veggies). All of their proceeds go to the South Shore Association for Retarded Citizens! So when you go today, support them and their efforts, and give them a hug for being who they are — two wonderful people!

Congrats to Ann Dane, a freshman majoring in biology at the University of Rochester. She was named to the spring 1996 dean's list for academic achievement. Ann is a CHS grad — one more to be proud of. Gosh, our educational system is good!

Here is a unique something to do this Sunday, Sept. 15. South Shore Community Center is honoring Grandparents Day! From 1:30 to 2:45 p.m., they are having a magic show and ice cream social, and it is an intergenerational event. Adults are free, and children are $1.50. Everyone must have a ticket because of limited space. The show promises to be awesome — balloon sculpturing, paperfolding and lots of laughs for young and old alike. To round out the day, you make you own sundae with Ben and Jerry's Ice Cream! Call 383-0088 for more info. Sounds super, huh? Glad I'm a grandparent!

Had a nice chat with Glenn Pratt last week. He wanted to be sure everyone knew to save the date Sunday, Nov. 10, at noon. It will be a memorial day of sorts. All squares will be dedicated to veterans of Vietnam and Korea — at Parker Ave. and Elm Street — then wind up at 4 p.m. at the Senior Center at South Shore Community Center. More details will follow. We want you to be aware of the date now — careful planning! With Glenn in charge, you know it will be great. Stay tuned. . . .

Congrats to Cohasset's Lynn Cornelius, who finished first in the 35-39 age group in the Mass Triathlon in Sharon Aug. 4. Lynn, a senior communications associate at South Shore Hospital, completed the grueling event in one hour, 25 minutes. She competed in the New England Triathlon Tour in Hyannis on Aug. 24, no word on how she did — we can guess — fantastically well!

One more reminder — the 14th annual Cohasset Soccer Breakfast is Sunday, Sept. 22, at Deer Hill School from 8 a.m. to noon. The price is $3 (free for children under 5). Proceeds are used to help offset the cost of the annual awards banquets for boys and girls and new uniforms for both as well. Be sure to support them, and have a wonderful breakfast, too!

That's the news for this week. Let me know yours, please! Just give me a call at 383-0560. After 4 p.m. is best!

— Sallyann

EDITORIAL

The clearest choice: Johnston vs. Teague

Picking candidates to back in the primary races for the 10th Congressional District — served so well by retiring Congressman Gerry Studds for 24 years — forced us to examine our priorities.

After all, it was easy to become complacent about representation with Gerry Studds in the House. He has been a tenacious and well-informed fighter for the issues that affected our home turf.

Now we have to make a new choice on leadership.

After much soul-searching, we boiled down our criteria to two points.

How fervently, consistently and intelligently has the candidate expressed his ideology, and what ability does he have to forge a coalition with the opposition to get important legislation passed?

Frankly, we're sick of the national trend in which candidates in both parties waffle toward the middle based on the latest polling. We want candidates who have "fire in the belly" for their beliefs, but enough common sense in the brain to forge necessary compromises.

Based on those benchmarks, we pick Phil Johnston for the Democratic contender and Ed Teague for the Republican.

Former state Rep. Johnston of Marshfield is an unabashed liberal. He has never changed his position on a woman's right to choose. He was ahead of his time in humane welfare reform, heading up then-Gov. Michael Dukakis' "ET" program, which provided education and child care for welfare moms so they could go to work.

Picked by President Clinton to be the New England Director of Health and Human Services, he has experience in health care that has made him a strong advocate of reform. He currently is targeting the HMOs and their profits, saying consumers need a "bill of rights" to ensure access to treatment.

On a more local level, he has been a longtime advocate of a comprehensive mass transit plan to relieve overcrowding on Route 3 and believes it is time for Congress to "force the (mass) transportation issue." He sees improved transportation as essential for job development in the region.

State Rep. Teague of Yarmouth is an equally unabashed conservative. He remains a staunch pro-life advocate and still supports House Speaker Newt Gingrich despite his negative poll numbers. Whether or not you like Speaker Gingrich, Mr. Teague says you can't deny he caused a much-needed revolution to downsize government.

He believes many of the problems with welfare could be fixed if absentee fathers were forced to pay child support and cites among his successes in welfare reform a move in 1994 to cut Medicaid funding for fertility drug treatments for welfare recipients.

He is a strong supporter of small business and takes pride in his work on the environment despite criticism that he is too pro-development. Believing that people need to make reasonable compromises, he cites as an example self-contained septic alternatives, which would allow development in environmentally sensitive areas.

He is for Bob Dole's proposed tax cut but only if we can balance the budget. He believes there is $30 billion in Medicaid and Medicare funds that is wasted through fraud and abuse, and he would save additional dollars by cutting people who are substance abusers off Social Security.

Both candidates have demonstrated their ability to work with their colleagues across the aisle. As a liberal state representative, Phil Johnston was relegated to a basement office by the Democratic leadership, but he reached out to GOP members to fight for rules reform.

Likewise, Ed Teague, as leader of the minority party, has worked effectively with Democrats to pass important local legislation.

Those are our candidate choices, and in many ways they're polar opposites. And that, we believe, will create a very healthy debate of the issues in the general election.

Our choice was not easy. We recognize William Delahunt's strong record against domestic violence and for civil rights and Bill Sargent's dedication to the environment. We also applaud Ian Bowles for encouraging young people to get involved and hope he stays in politics.

Whatever your choice, make sure you express it by getting out to vote on Tuesday.

Anti-Greenbush activist says:

Politicians shouldn't ignore danger of diesel emissions

To the Editor:

On Aug. 28, and in several re-broadcasts, Continental Cablevision presented to South Shore viewers the local-access program "On The Mark with Ilana Marks." Andrew Brennan, manager of environmental affairs for the MBTA, presented some new and important information regarding restoration of the Greenbush rail service.

Mr. Brennan, as MBTA spokesman, publicly acknowledged for the first time in the one year since I provided the confirming data to Gov. William Weld, Lt. Gov. Paul Cellucci, the Executive Office of Environmental Affairs and the Executive Office of Transportation and Construction, that all air-polluting emissions of diesel locomotives were simply left out of the air-quality analyses presented in the Greenbush Supplemental Draft Environmental Impact Statement/Report of March, 1995. He acknowledged that this "may have been wrong." These are very mild words indeed to describe a process which, for all three Old Colony rail lines and over a period of years, has dismissed all alternatives to the MBTA's original project intentions through the deception of comparing these alternatives to mythical zero-emission diesel locomotives. The MBTA, by leaving out the very serious air-polluting emissions of its proposals and the Executive Office of Environmental Affairs, by repeatedly accepting this absurdity, have made a mockery of the environmental process in Massachusetts.

A deadly mockery. Mr. Brennan also admitted his awareness, stated three times, that the diesel particulate emissions of MBTA commuter-rail locomotives pose a lethal health threat to people locally exposed: "We're talking about a serious death threat from particulates." On that basis, he stated the MBTA's intention to electrify its diesel commuter-rail services. He cited "ability" and "costs" to explain that this would not happen for decades.

In a telephone conversation I had on Sept. 9 with Mr. Brennan, he acknowledged his televised error in stating that the Greenbush project was supported by the author(s) of a Harvard School of Public Health study which has correlated particulate pollution to increased illness and death rates among people locally exposed. Prof. Douglas Dockery, the principal author of the study in question, is not acquainted with the individual mistakenly cited by Mr. Brennan. Professor Dockery is aware of the significant particulate and sulfate emissions of heavy diesel engines, and has been helpful in providing background information to TREQ (Technical Resources for Environmental Quality, Inc.), a non-profit public interest organization advocating the environmental rights of the people of Massachusetts.

I believe Mr. Brennan, as environmental director of the MBTA, is beginning to understand the magnitude of the threat to the health and lives of people living and working near existing and proposed MBTA diesel services. TREQ is also investigating the pollution-related hazards to the people who ride, and will ride, these trains on a daily basis; and to those who will ride Red Line trains running parallel to future Old Colony diesel services.

The question remaining to be answered is whether Massachusetts politicians of both parties will continue to ignore the growing body of evidence which now clearly establishes the public health and mortality risks of diesel emissions. Will the campaign funding provided by urban investment interests, the real constituents of obsolete single-destination public transit, continue to take precedence over the health and lives of people?

For further information about TREQ, call (617) 364-3617 or write to: TREQ, 25 Woodland Road, Milton 02186.

Surplus funds to be spent at special town meeting

Boards, departments get their requests in

By DOREEN LEGGETT
Cohasset Mariner

Selectmen hope to avoid any surprise requests for a portion of the $927,000 of free cash available at October's special town meeting.

The majority of town boards met on Sept. 4 to discuss the articles they plan to put on the warrant for the Oct. 28 meeting. Selectmen requested that all drafts of articles be submitted by Sept. 16.

"So we can all have a clear awareness of what will happen before we see it on a printed piece of paper," said Selectmen Chairman Merle Brown, referring to the fact that some articles are first seen on the floor of town meeting.

Selectmen and members of the advisory board had asked department heads to delay their requests for capital items from the spring town meeting to the fall meeting.

A firm number of the amount of free cash available from fiscal year 1996 wasn't known at the spring meeting. Free cash is a combination of: unspent monies in each departmental budget, which are returned to the town treasury; unanticipated revenues; and any unpaid taxes from prior years (unpaid taxes for the current year are subtracted from this number).

Two of the articles slated to be on the warrant for the fall town meeting were not held over from the spring.

Design review board members made a request for an article in the amount of $75,000 to hire a project manager who would manage the school, DPW garage and sewer construction projects.

"It could conceivable save us a substantial amount of money," said Max Pounder, a design review board member. "The (design review board) could attempt to draw up a job description."

"I think the concept makes a lot of sense," said Selectman Michael Sullivan.

The advisory board requested approximately $1,500 to cover the cost of the recent special town meeting. The $3,000 voted earlier was not enough.

"We want people to be aware of what it costs to run a meeting," said Roger Whitley, chairman of the advisory board.

Harold Litchfield, head of the department of public works, had the greatest number of capital requests with eight:

- $75,000 for aerial spraying of gypsy moths. Officials report that next year is slated to be bad in terms of gypsy moth infestation.
- $12,000 and an additional $25 per cubic foot of ledge to put in 300 feet of water line from the proposed DPW garage to the recycling transfer facility. A hydrant would be installed near the transfer station gate to wet down the compost and prevent fires.
- $7,500 for construction of an office area near the trailer at the transfer station, so employees can observe people dumping trash.
- $35,000 for the purchase of a dump truck.
- $60,000 to extend the water main from Cedar Ledge to the site of the new DPW garage.
- $11,965 for personnel costs. Litchfield has hired some new employees at a higher rate.
- $24,243 for two stainless steel sand spreaders which will be attached to the trucks for sanding in the winter.
- $1450 for repair of the glass bin at the recycling center

Resident Joe McElroy of Windy Hill Road requested that Litchfield make the number of requests nine by adding an article to fund repairs on private ways.

"One- third of the roads in town are deplorable," McElroy said.

Before Proposition 2 1/2 was instated the town used to set aside $50,000 or $75,000 a year.

If there is money remaining in free cash after departmental requests are met, the board will consider asking town meeting to set aside $25,000 or $50,000 for repair of private ways. Several officials also said there was a need for a geographical surveying system (GIS).

"It is definitely something the town should look into," said Assistant Assessor Cheryl Pooler.

The assessors requested an article that would defer the sewer betterment charges of residents who are already getting taxes deferred.

Library trustees are requesting $49,600 for the second part of their air conditioning project.

The school department requested $90,000 for two new school school buses which would replace 10-year-old buses. The school committee earlier decided that remaining with the in-house system was more effective than hiring a private company.

The schools also requested $140,000 for acoustical, lighting and reconditioning work at the high school auditorium.

The water resource protection committee may ask for $10,000 if one of its two grant requests for water testing and capacity building are approved by the state.

The board of health may receive a grant of $20,000 from the state for comprehensive waste water management. Health Board Member Kevin Ulmer said the board may require additional funds to generate a list of what sites need to be inspected.

McElroy asked that the selectmen support an $18,000 article which would raise the tax abatement on the town's disabled veterans from a flat sum of $175 to a percentage rating of 15 to 30.

Conservation Commission members hope selectmen will support or sponsor a request of approximately $125,000 for the town's part of purchasing Turkey Hill for open space.

The council of elder affairs asked for $5,000 to start up a work tax relief program, and additional money to fund the outreach coordinator position from 18 hours to 25 hours a week. The cost would be approximately another $75 a week. .

The fire department requested $10,000 for portable radios and $9,800 for fire engine repairs.

Town committee plans new war on drugs

Parental apathy a problem

By STACEY POWERS
Special to the Mariner

Members of the Drug & Alcohol Committee reconvened this week to discuss an action plan and develop a strategy to combat the problem of substance abuse involving minors within the community.

Special guest at Monday's meeting was Det. Capt. Rodney Rumble of the Weymouth Police Department. Rumble has had an abundance of experience in drug enforcement on the South Shore. A former resident of Cohasset, Rumble started the South Shore Drug Task Force in 1989 by inviting five local communities to participate in ridding their towns of drugs.

"I have seen a lot of heroin and cocaine on the streets and especially marijuana which is making a strong comeback," he said.

The task force has since grown to nine towns, including Scituate, that actively seek to eliminate the accessibility of drugs.

Committee chairman Craig Muir said that "parental denial is the biggest cause for disappointment among committee members." .

Rumble emphasized that people should not "bury their heads in the sand" when it comes to recognizing that a problem exists.

Some action that Rumble has seen work well in fighting the war on drugs is sting operations in liquor stores, the use of K-9 dogs in the schools and integrating undercover agents throughout the community, all of which he stressed can only be successful with the full cooperation of the school systems and local police departments.

"We've all got to work together in creating a balance between enforcement and education. The worst sin is not to try," he said.

Rumble also suggested hosting a drug awareness day, similar to ones held in Weymouth and Hanover, for the whole town to participate, with K-9 demonstrations and inviting MADD (Mothers Against Driving Drunk) and SADD (Students Against Driving Drunk) members to attend.

"You must start somewhere to accomplish anything. Even the smallest bit helps." He commended the committee's efforts to "stick with it" over the years and noted that they have lots of energy "but it needs to be channelled."

Muir pointed out that the committee has developed a petition to circulate around town that will go before selectmen showing the support of the residents in stopping the illegal use of drugs and alcohol by minors in the community.

Rumble counseled that in setting up a future direction for the committee to follow, they must first establish their goal, beginning with the issue of the lack of interest in the committee by parents. Rumble pointed out that expanding the committee should be one of their priorities.

"Recruiting even a few people is a great place to start rejuvenating your group."

Formed about eight years ago, the committee has gone from having 15 members at its high point to presently having five active members.

"People express interest in becoming involved," explained Muir. "But when it comes time to follow through, they somehow can't make it."

Rumble said that in order to succeed with any type of strategy, the committee needs the support of the community.

"You can do it with the power of the community behind you," he said.

The next Drug & Alcohol Committee meeting is at 7:30 p.m., Tuesday, Sept. 24 at Town Hall.

Education foundation starts its fifth year

Fund-raiser is Oct. 6

By JIM KINCH
Cohasset Education Foundation

The Cohasset Education Foundation has begun its fifth year as a resource and conduit for innovative support to Cohasset Public Schools. Incoming President Mike Hurley announced to the directors at an August meeting that CEF had received a grant from South Shore Playhouse Association in support of the "Artist in Residence" program.

"I am especially pleased to announce this $1,500 grant at the beginning of our year, since this contribution underscores the Playhouse Association's commitment to Cohasset schools by their fourth year of endowment, while providing a positive bounce for the new CEF funding season. We are deeply indebted to the Playhouse Association for their continuing generosity to Cohasset's children," Hurley said.

The CEF will formally open it fifth year with a public fund raiser at South Shore Arts Center Sunday, Oct. 6, from 4 to 7 p.m. Pam Speed, chairperson for the event, has entitled the gathering "An Evening for Education."

"This occasion is an important part of our community outreach," she noted. It will be a chance for the CEF to reflect on our past accomplishments and look forward to new goals."

The CEF has made considerable strides in funding its latest project, the High School Language Laboratory. "We will use this evening to showcase the latest technologies that are under consideration and give everyone a good look at the level of sophisticated hardware now available," said Dr. Gary Garber, CEF director for the lab project. Gary has conducted an extensive review of the existing systems available and is developing a full proposal for the CEF. "It is quite astounding what is out there and the versatility available in some of these systems," he observed.

The evening will also showcase the works of Cohasset students in the arts and graphics and feature performances of several musically talented undergraduate artists. Cohasset's principals are special guests of the CEF. Along with High School Principal Curt Collins, incoming headmasters Paul Callahan (Deer Hill) and Merilee Cantelmo (Osgood) will be on hand to meet with the community and discuss their plans for the future.

"I look at this evening as a chance to welcome these leaders and enjoy some time in the relaxing atmosphere of the Arts Center for the benefit of our schools," stated President Hurley.

Tax-deductible tickets for the evening are available from directors of the CEF or by calling Pam Speed (383-2572), Mike Hurley (383-9509) or leaving a message on the CEF line at 383-2833.

Individuals interested in learning more about the mission of the foundation and its activities are encouraged to call the CEF at 383-2833 or to write the Cohasset Education Foundation, P.O. Box 224, Cohasset 02025 to request a copy of the CEF brochure and additional information about its programs.

As a registered non-profit organization, all donations to the project fund are tax-deductible and dedicated to enhancing the educational environment of Cohasset Public School students.

Lori Hyslip and her kindergarten class are ready to start the new school year at Deer Hill. Kindergarten was moved to Deer Hill this year to help alleviate overcrowding problems at the Osgood School.

Photos exhibited at James Library

James Library Center for the Arts, Norwell, will present the "Enright Collection," an exhibit of award-winning photographs by Judith and Sean Enright of Norwell, during the month of September. This is their first combined mother-son showing, featuring scenes in Kenya, India, Nepal, China, Ireland, Europe and parts of the United States.

The exhibit is open weekdays from 2 to 5 p.m. and Saturdays from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m., marking the first in the season's monthly art exhibits in the James Gallery, 24 West St., Norwell Center.

Proceeds from the sale of any photographs will be donated to the Irish studies program at Stonehill College in memory of the late Police Sgt. John J. Enright, Sean's father and Judith's husband.

For further information about the "Enright Collection," call 659-7100.

Art center lists fall courses

South Shore Art Center, 119 Ripley Road, Cohasset, is offering courses and workshops this fall. Registration will continue through Sept. 17. For the first time, there will be special classes for young people in grades 9-12.

Janet Killian will travel from Sturbridge to teach a class in beginning and intermediate Chinese brush painting. Other new adult courses include design and form, color theory and expression for artists, themes and techniques in photography, papermaking and handcoloring black and white photographs. Adult classes are offered in the day and evening for all levels of ability and include drawing, oil, acrylic, figure drawing, monoprinting, watercolor, clay and colored pencil.

Courses for grades 9-12 include monoprinting on the press, with artist Esther Maschio; learning the techniques of additive and subtractive, viscosity, trace and cognate. Yard art, the creation of environmental yard art sculpture, is also offered.

Young artist classes include creative sculpture, expressions and impressions in printmaking, folk arts and crafts from around the world, "The Artist and the Book," which includes illustration techniques of children's favorite authors, handbuilding and wheel, creative sculpture and 3rd dimensional clay.

Holiday workshops run throughout the year.

New faculty members at SSAC include Ruthe Sholler, a former art specialist with Hingham Public Schools; Melinda Sokoloff, a teacher at the Museum School, New England School of Art & Design and Cambridge Center for Adult Education; Anne Heywood, an associate member of the Pastel Society of America, whose work is featured in the new "Best of Pastels" book; and Susan Fusco-Fazio, who has taught at Wheelock College and the Museum of Fine Arts.

To register or request a brochure, call 383-ARTS. The center is wheelchair accessible.

Donna Green book-signing at Bowl & Board

Local artist Donna Green will participate in the 30th anniversary celebration of Hingham's Bowl & Board by autographing copies of her books for interested readers. The event will take place Saturday, Sept. 14, from 10 a.m. to noon.

Green's paintings are prized by collectors throughout the world and have appeared in exhibitions in Stockholm and The White House. Her art also appears in seven popular hardcover books, including her best-seller "To My Daughter, With Love," which she also authored. Her latest book is a new edition of Margery Williams' classic tale, "The Velveteen Rabbit."

For more information, call 749-5451.

Conservatory offers classes for all ages

South Shore Conservatory has introduced new fall classes, which begin the week of Sept. 16.

Musicians and non-musicians alike may participate in the Conservatory's "Exploring Music" program. Under the direction of SSC faculty member Rich Begel, the class examines reasons behind individual tastes in music. All styles of music will be explored, as well as the emotional content of performances and the "color change" in music.

"Creativity in Musicianship" is offered at two levels to help musicians, fourth grade through adult, improve their playing or, for vocalists, their singing. Concepts explored in the class include musical thought, imagery, philosophy of music and practice skills.

For younger students in first through third grade, the Conservatory introduced "Miniature Musiking" for the first time this summer. In the class, children learn to recognize different instrument families by sound while acting out "Peter and the Wolf." They sing songs and participate in games involving movement, dance, beat keeping and instrument playing.

For young children ready to begin the transition from home to school, SSC's one-day First Time Playschool program helps ease the transition. Children are introduced to music in the arts-based program, which promotes interaction with other children.

A "Joy of Music" class offers children an introduction to music through song, rhyme, game playing and movement. In recorder class and "Guitar Fun," children learn simple music making.

Vocal instructor Sarah Moran Smith is teaching "Young Songsters" and "Young Singers" programs to children interested in group singing.

In addition to piano and voice lessons, SSC now offers private lessons on fiddle.

For further information or to enroll in a class for the fall semester, call 749-7565 (Hingham) or (617) 934-2731 (Duxbury).

Chicago soloist to perform at St. Stephen's

As part of its "Music at St. Stephen's Concert Series," St. Stephen's Church, Cohasset, will present mezzo-soprano Evelyn Czaja in recital Sunday, Oct. 6, at 3 p.m. Dr. Elaine Kwon will accompany Czaja in works of Bach, Schubert, Donizetti, Ralph Vaughan Williams, Persichetti and Dvorak.

Czaja sang with the former Repertory Opera Theater of Oak Park, Ill., Chicago Opera Theater, DuPage Opera in Illinois, Lake Shore Symphony and the Northwest Symphony. She is an avid stage director and has been music director for several area high school musicals.

Czaja holds a bachelor of music degree from Rosary College, Illinois, and a master of arts in applied vocal pedagogy from Northeastern Illinois University, Chicago. She also teaches private voice and is a member of the Music Teachers National Association, National Association of Teachers of Singing, Musicians Club of Women and MacDowell Artists Association.

The church is located at 16 Highland Ave., Cohasset, and is handicapped accessible. Free-will offerings will be accepted at the concert. For more details, call 383-1083.

Last year's drought is history

Scoring is coming quick for Lady Skippers

By JOE REARDON
Cohasset Mariner

The team had nearly a dozen chances in every game last year. Shots would go just wide or clang against the post. No matter how hard they tried, the Cohasset High's varsity field hockey players had problems scoring goals.

At 1-1 on the season through Wednesday, the Lady Skippers already have four tallies.

Lauren Dooley, who looks to be this year's top playmaker on the squad assisted on Megan Connolly's goal in Monday's tight 2-1 loss to East Bridgewater on the team's first game on Alumni Field.

The disappointment of the opening win was short-lived, however, as Conolly netted a pair and Kristen Reynolds, in her first season, slammed home her first goal ever in Cohasset's exhausting 3-2 non-league win over Marshfield.

Jo Hurley had a big offensive output with a pair of assists and Emily Collins added one.

Head coach Debby Bostwick said Dooley has been the difference in the two games so far.

"She's the key playmaker in setting up the goals," Bostwick said. "And she's beating everyone to the ball."

Katie Buckley, Hurley and Collins all played well in limiting Marshfield's range to the goal and netminder Jackie Hurley stopped three big shots in the latter stage of the game to frustrate the Lady Rams from closing the gap.

Cohasset should be able to mount serious offensive threats this season with Connolly, Dooley and the play of links Alia Afshar and Buckley. Sweeper Katie Devine should have a big season and Reynolds will only get better with more experience.

Eighth-grader Kelly Lourden and Jill Magner are both on the varsity squad and will be ready to play in Friday's game against Notre Dame of Hingham.

"Hopefully we'll capitalize on the win," Bostwick said.

Cohasset High varsity soccer coach Maureen O'Day-Clark says defending Division 3 State champ Hanover, East Bridgewater and Abington look to be the three strongest teams in the South Shore League this season.

But after the top three, O'Day-Clark believes just about anything can happen within the SSL.

"Those teams are all going to be good and Hull has a new coach (Colleen Reale of Rockland), so you never know.

"I think it will be a good season."

O'Day-Clark has good reason for optimism.

The Lady Skippers are coming off a season where they advanced all the way to the Division 3 South Sectional semifinals before losing a heartbreaking 1-0 game to Dover-Sherborn.

Cohasset has a healthy mix of talented freshmen and anxious seniors, eager to return to the tournament and advance even further than in '95.

The Lady Skippers don't have a team that will fold once the tournament comes along. Save for Hanover's Lauren Trechok, Cohasset just may have the best goaltender in the league with Catie Campbell between the posts.

"She's right up there," O'Day-Clark said.

"They're really strong back there," she said. "Ali's more aggressive than she was last year."

Freshman Eileen Ridge should complement Fitzsimmons nicely up front, giving the Lady Skippers that much more of an offensive punch.

"She's really aggressive," O'Day-Clark said. "I think her and Kathy are going to be real good up top."

O'Day-Clark doesn't single out any superstars on the team, but believes Cohasset will thrive on its teamwork.

"They're all equally important," she said. "They have experience under their belt."

Fall recreation schedule

The Cohasset Recreation Department will accept mail-in registrations for fall recreation programs for children ages 4 and 5 and grades K to 6. Programs are scheduled to begin the week of Sept. 16, continuing for five weeks through Oct. 17. (Monday group ends Oct. 21 due to Columbus Day).

Programs are as follows

Monday, grades 1-3, soccer skills/games, Osgood Field, 2:50 to 5 p.m. No class Monday, Oct. 14, but will meet for final class Monday, Oct. 21.

Tuesday, ages 4 and 5 and kindergarten, soccer skills/games, Osgood Field, 3:15 to 5:15 p.m.

Wednesday, grades K-3, arts and crafts, Osgood, 2:50 to 5 p.m.

Thursday, grades 4 to 6, flag football, Osgood Field, 3 to 5 p.m.

Each program meets for two hours weekly for a five-week period. Some programs will have to be postponed should inclement weather dictate and you may call the Recreation Office at 383-6791 after 1 p.m. if you are in doubt of program status. Osgood children will be advised and sent home should

New look for Sharks' cheerleaders

Sunday's Scituate-Cohasset Youth Football games against Middleboro also featured some fancy footwork and acrobatic moves by youth cheerleaders at the Scituate High School field.

Wearing new uniforms purchased during the off season and paid for by contributions collected by a can drive at the town landfill, girls in three age groups provided half-time entertainment during the three games attended by several hundred spectators.

The girls have been practicing since mid-August, putting in as much time as the football players. In some instances girls practiced in the off season attending gymnastics classes.

Cheerleading coordinator Judy Pollard said the girls take their performances just as seriously as the football players.

The cheerleaders are divided into three age groups: Mites, PeeWees and Midgets.

The following is a list of cheerleaders and their coaches:

Mites: Kimberly Berlo, Tracie Berry, Amelia Butman, Shawna Cahill, Britney Colaneco, Anna Congo, Kristin Dillon, Carly Donovan, Katherine Donovan, Meaghan Donovan, Lindsay Durkan, Samantha Fishman, Joanna Gattuso, Ashley Greene, Katherine Gustafson, Sheila Harris, Sarah Judge, Brittany Lawrence, Bridget Murray, Amanda Nelson, Vanessa Plante, Mary Previte, Elizabeth Sienkiewcz, Sara Sousa, Katie Vaughn, and Kelli Wright. Head coach is Cinda Donocan. Junior coaches are Courtney Barnard, Debbie Page, Shannon Perry and Sunni Fidler. Mascots are Nicole Wright and Diana Crowley.

PeeWees: Nicole Bonomi, Meredith Byrne, Samantha Canton, Kelly Dillon, Jocelyn Liberty, AeJa Kuhn, Jacqueline Hayes, Lauren Hewins, Lila McCormack, Colleen McInerney, Katie Niland, Marissa Orlando, Erin Perry, Amber Phinney, Nicole Plante, Ryan Simpson, Courtney Tracy and Shawna Wright. Head coach is Michelle Bonomi. Junior coaches are Courtney Costello, Chantal Boudreau, Kelly O'Connor and Stacey Heman. Mascot is Sara Noonan.

Midgets: Samantha Alongi, Melissa Bonomi, Maura Callis, Kristen Conroy, Jill Duddy, Catlin McCormack, Keelin Mone, Kathryn O'Donnell, Kimberley Pollard, Lauren Vreeland and Dawn Smith. Coach is Kathy Duddy. Junior coaches are Louisa Sullivan, Anna Steverman, Robin Avila, Meaghan Rota and Kim Giacomozzi. Mascot is Michelle Pollard.

Record number compete in league this fall

The Scituate-Cohasset Youth Football Midgets continued their winning ways from last year with a convincing 21-0 win over Middleboro Sunday in a game which featured two touchdown passes by quarterback Mike Conroy and some key tackles by linebacker Brian Swider late in the game to preserve the shutout.

Dan O'Brien, who himself was a star quarterback for Scituate High School from 1987 to 1991 and who played youth football in Scituate, is coaching a team which has many new members from last year's squad which made the first round of the playoffs in the Old Colony Youth Football League.

The Scituate-Cohasset team, which is nicknamed the Sharks, were right in their element on the soggy Scituate High School field.

The scoring opened with a nine yard touchdown pass in the first period to David Butterworth who scampered across the end zone to the cheers of a couple of hundred parents and and friends who attended the game despite the threat of rain all day.

The game then settled into a defensive struggle. Coach O'Brien noted that it was strong defensive play that kept the Sharks pumped up. One such play was a fumble recovery by linebacker Nick Sousa in the first period.

A raging bull now shrieks 'Sell!'

By Elizabeth MacDonald
WORTH MAGAZINE

Despite leaving Wall Street powerhouse Shearson Lehman two years ago, stock market guru Elaine Garzarelli can still shatter the markets. Last July, she rattled an edgy Dow Jones industrial average when CNBC-TV broadcast her sell signal, causing the market to tank over a two-day period. In late August, the 44-year-old market prognosticator told her 70,000 individual and 100 institutional clients that a proprietary model of 14 indicators she uses to assess the health of the U.S. stock market gave her an ominous "sell" signal.

YOUR MONEY'S WORTH

One indicator showed that corporate cash flow isn't keeping up with earnings; a total of eight indicators rang a sell signal, too. In addition to those indicators, Garzarelli also says the yield on the 10-year bond is now three times greater than the S&P 500 dividend yield. "Whenever that yield is 2.5 times greater, it's a bearish sign," she says. "Prior to the '87 crash, it was 3.3 times greater."

As a result, Garzarelli is now telling her clients to move into cash, as she expects corporate profits to slow later this year and in 1997. These numbers, Garzarelli says, are prima facie evidence that investors are in for a bleak spell. "We could not just have a 1990 type of bear market," she now says. "We could actually crash."

Garzarelli's fire-engine red sell signal has been a rarity in recent years. Her model has been either bullish or neutral about the outlook for U.S. stocks since 1990, and the last time it suggested that stocks should be sold was back in 1989. Nevertheless, Garzarelli, a quantitative analyst with an emphasis in sectors and an economist by training, has stuck fast to her most recent sell signal for the last two months. She expects consumer durables (automobiles, appliances, boats,) to underperform the economy through the second quarter of 1997.

Furthermore, Garzarelli says consumer nondurables and services (banking, insurance hair salons, spas) should outperform the market throughout all of next year. Garzarelli is also saying she expects a recession to smack the U.S. economy by next year. "Historically," she says, "in a sideways to down market associated with economic slowdowns or slight recessions, six industries tend to outperform the S&P 500 quite consistently. They (include) electric utilities, household products like soaps, natural gas, and oil, including those that manufacture drilling equipment."

Garzarelli's recent bearish turn, though, has gotten her into heaps of trouble. Last July, the high-profile strategist who predicted the '87 crash turned bull to bear in a matter of days, an abrupt turnaround that augured a widespread market sell-off. Yet, her about-face left some confused. Critics hammered Garzarelli for her flip-flop, and derided her forecasting skills in numerous articles that appeared in dailies across the country.

With that zigzag, Garzarelli became the latest poster ogre on the street. Many market watchers were bewildered by her turnaround. "I don't know how you go from being decidedly overweighted in stocks to underweighted in a three-day period," a sector analyst for Merrill Lynch wondered.

"How does that help her clients? She made brokers rich, but not her clients."

But Garzarelli says she had a reasonable explanation for her change of mind. Here's what happened.

On Sunday, July 21, The New York Times quoted Garzarelli as saying the stock market correction was over. "The market can have a fairly nice move," she said, concluding that "the market could go up to 6400 at current interest-rate levels." But Tuesday, July 23, Bloomberg Business News and CNBC-TV reported that Garzarelli had changed her mind. That day, she told 60 institutional clients (including Dean Witter and Fidelity) in a telephone conference that stocks could fall as much as 25 percent from their highs in May and June. She recommended investors sell their stocks immediately and go to "maximum cash," the same as nine years ago. When her call hit the wires, what had been a 40-point gain for the Dow Jones Industrials melted down to a 44-point loss; the market lost another 76 points more early Wednesday before the selling subsided.

Garzarelli explains, "The most recent data I was relying on was my two-week report that came out in the beginning of July. By the middle of the month, I was just getting the new data and the revisions for the cash flow numbers. Every two weeks I sit down and run the complete model and look at the earnings revisions. The reality is, the numbers I use, and that everyone else gets, are constantly revised by both the government and corporations. When I talked to the Times reporter on Wednesday, we hadn't yet started the new report, which we planned to do that Saturday."

Over the weekend, Garzarelli updated her model. On Monday at 2 p.m., her assistant, Alida Melkonian, faxed the first quarter corporate cash flow indicators to her East Hampton home — that low revenue figure couldn't withstand an interest rate crunch, so her numbers said sell. "I thought, something has to be wrong here," says Garzarelli. "But Alida checked it and checked it. And there it was. I said to Alida, what are we going to do? My report doesn't come out for two weeks."

Garzarelli knew at that point that she was about to impale herself on the twin horns of a moral dilemma — should she wait and risk having her clients suffer the consequences, or should she contradict herself, jeopardize her reputation and tell her clients? "I decided, in an emergency like this, I should tell my clients to sell," she says. "I wanted to do the right thing."

But before Garzarelli could notify her individual customers, David Rolfe, chief investment officer at one of her institutional clients, Wedgewood Partners, Inc., in St. Louis, leaked her sell signal to Bloomberg, which then broadcasted her call. "I never talked to anybody in the press at all, I wanted to talk to my clients first," says Garzarelli. "I have an agreement with my clients not to talk to the press until a week after my report is released. But CNBC showed an old video clip of me talking, that made it seem as if I was giving an interview at that moment for its show. We got a lot of subscriber cancellations and some really horrible letters."

Once one of Wall Street's premier soothsayers, Garzarelli left her position as Lehman Brothers' premier sector analyst in Oct. 1994, the victim of cost-cutting and a clash with management after Lehman sold its retail securities business which catered to individual investors. "Lehman wanted to raise my sector fund's fees, and I objected," says Garzarelli. Lehman officials also asked Garzarelli to accept a 50 percent cut in her $1.5 million salary. She opted to shuck her 10-year career at the firm instead.

In March 1995, Garzarelli flung open the doors to her new money management and institutional research firm, Garzarelli Capital Management, in Boca Raton, home of Chris Evert and Wall Street powerhouse Muriel Siebert. She maintains homes in Boca Raton, New York City, and East Hampton.

Cohasset Alumni Field dedication attracts all ages a lot of old friends.

"Let the games begin in earnest."

In all, 31 of the alumni classes were represented. Larry Shultz, who sits on several of the project committees, said many of the committee members continued working on the project even after their own children graduated from the high school. Shultz himself had three boys who all played soccer basketball and baseball.

"This is a dream come true," he said. "We've been working on this for 10 to 15 years.

"You just can't stop doing this stuff. It really gets inside you."

The Cohasset Parent School Organization (PSO) were busy handing out drinks and snacks at the end of the ceremony, but members were able to attend the gathering while it was in progress.

"It was great," said Darilynn Evans, a PSO member. "It was great to see such a good turnout from the town."

Also in attendance was Greg Koval, a member of the last undefeated football team and a track athlete as well. Koval played under lights once in high school when Cohasset took on Foxboro in the league jamboree when it was held in Middleboro.

"It's an unbelievable improvement," Koval said as he scanned the field. "What we used to play on, and the cinder track we used to run on. This is great. I can't imagine running on a track like this.

"Lights! My God!"

Backup quarterback and starting safety on this year's varsity football team, 10th-grader Justin Golden said Friday night couldn't come quick enough.

"We're really looking forward to the first game," Golden said. "We're ready to go and we're going to come out all fired up.

"I think there will be a lot more people there than if it was held on a Saturday. It's more exciting than a Saturday."

Golden enjoyed the ceremony and knows the excitement of the new facility and track goes beyond that of the high school athletes.

"I thought it was nice," he said. "We know it's going to be well taken care of. It means a lot to the town."

ed for his second touchdown with a 15-yard pass to end Craig Davis in the third quarter.

David Butterworth added his second score of the afternoon in the third quarter with a game busting 60-yard romp into the end zone in the third period. Butterworth's brother, running back Bryan Butterworth, also added to the point total with a two-point conversion.

Coach O'Brien said linebacker Brian Swider made "several solid tackles" in the fourth quarter to lock up the win against a tough Middleboro squad that had several opportunities to score.

Middleboro's youth football teams fared better in the Pee-Wee and Mites games, which were played prior to the Midgets on the same field.

The Pee-Wee Sharks were entrenched in a defensive struggle all morning with Middleboro and lost 14-0. But coach Domenic Laundani, who has many first year players in his age division, said he was impressed with the grit of his players.

Even though the Sharks were unable to score Laundani said the offense had some flashes of spark including a 25-yard pass from quarterback Sean Conton to tight end Patrick Filipi near the end of the first half which he almost broke for a TD. Conton also connected with a nifty dump pass to fullback Danny Hughes in the third quarter, but Hughes was dragged down from behind by a dogged Middleboro linebacker.

In the first of three Shark football games of the day, Scituate's Shark Midgets, the youngest age group in local youth football, were outscored by Middleboro 26-0.

In addition to the scoring on the field, some other numbers were racked up with Jennifer Byrne of Scituate winning a $50 raffle.

The galley reported selling 16 cases of soda, five gallons of chili donated by T. K. O'Malley's restaurant, 49 pizzas from Papa Gino's, 160 hamburgers and 150 hot dogs.

Scituate-Cohasset Youth Football and Cheerleading has a record number of uniformed players this year. The program, which has grown steadily over the last four years has 58 players in the Mites division coached by Jack Carroll; 56 players in the Pee-Wees and 40 players in the Midgets division.

Arrests down in August, chief says

In his August status report to selectmen, Police Chief Brian Noonan said arrests were down "more than usual" in August.

"There were a total of nine arrests. Two were for assault and battery (domestic), one for violation of a 209A restraining order, two for possession of short lobsters, three for protective custody, and finally, one for being a disorderly person.

"There were also two breaking and enterings reported during the month — one business and one residence," he said.

Noonan said the department received a total of 102, 9-1-1 calls last month.

Noonan said the seasonal police officers have been a big help this summer.

"Our seasonal police officers Christy Tarantino, Jr., and James McLean have been a tremendous help this summer taking some of the burden off of our regular officers who see their workload increase during July and August. I will give you a more formal report next month on their activities," he said in his report.

Another area the department expanded into this summer was police bicycle patrols.

"The bikes received rave reviews from both the businesses and residents," Noonan said.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS
THE TRIAL COURT
THE PROBATE AND FAMILY COURT
NORFOLK DIVISION
DOCKET NO. 96P2089E1

Estate of FREDERICK L. SWANSON late of QUINCY in the County of NORFOLK

NOTICE

A petition has been presented in the above-captioned matter praying that the last will of said decedent be proved and allowed and that CARLA GETTO of COHASSET in the County of NORFOLK be appointed executrix named in the will without surety on the bond.

If you desire to object to the allowance of said petition, you or your attorney should file a written appearance in said Court at Dedham on or before 10:00 in the forenoon on October 16, 1996.

In addition you should file a written statement of objections to the petition, giving the specific grounds therefore, within thirty (30) days after the return day (or such other time as the Court, on motion with notice to the petitioner, may allow) in accordance with Probate Rule 16A.

Witness, David H. Kopelman, Esquire, First Justice of said Court at Dedham, this sixth day of September, one thousand nine hundred and ninety-six.

The Grand Tour

Charlie and Andrea Santoro have created a flower-filled entrance to their home at 27 Linden Circle. A large perennial bed enhances the front lawn offering summertime color in blooming babies'-breath, Hosta, English Lavender, clematis, variegated Euonymus, Silver Mound Artemisia, purple cone flower and Russian sage. Charlie's talents are evident in the brick patio and walkway, he has created, leading to the side porch where clay pots are filled with sunflowers to greet visitors. Andrea has displayed antique iron grates on the walls of the porch while a white cherub statue stands guard. The pale grey of the house with its bright white trim and black shutters is complimented by the black benches, black iron grates and white Adirondacks chairs. A carefully placed basket filled with pink impatiens is surrounded by seashells.

Hart: school buses are safe

By MARY FORD
Cohasset Mariner

Citizens who spotted school buses from Scituate and North River Transportation along Cohasset bus routes recently haven't been seeing things.

The state Registry of Motor Vehicles sidelined the entire Cohasset fleet — a total of six school buses — last week because the vehicles which range in age from two to ten years didn't pass inspection.

But Registry charges fleet is a mess

In the interim, the school department has been able to borrow three buses from Scituate and rent three from North River Transportation in Norwell at $170 per day each until the town's buses are back on the road, Supt. of Schools Stephen Hart said.

School officials hope to have the school bus fleet re-inspected and returned to service this week.

All school buses are inspected three times a year in December/January, April/May and August/September, explained Jayne Berry-Steel, public education specialist at the registry. Due to the number of towns involved, not all school departments' buses are inspected before school starts, she said.

Hart, who described the September inspection as "very inconvenient," said this is the first time Cohasset buses were inspected after school opened in September. He said buses can fail inspections even for minor problems. This time Cohasset buses failed because bus lettering did not say "owned and operated by Cohasset". Other problems included the condition of the rubber on the inside wheel cover, on which children in some seats rest their feet; tape the school department used to repair seats was not

Blanks in Weymouth could be questioned

Even the morning after, the contest between Democratic candidates for the 10th Congressional District seat being vacated by U.S. Rep. Gerry Studds remained a horse race between candidates William Delahunt and Phil Johnston.

But with 100 percent of precincts reporting, unofficial results revealed Johnston and Delahunt each had captured 37 percent of the vote. Johnston had a slight lead, 17,422 to 17,207 — less than one half of one percent more votes that were cast for Delahunt.

Government Island silt site may be sought

Dredging project plans moves along

By MARY FORD
Cohasset Mariner

For a while Government Island, which features the Lightkeepers' Residence — a popular spot for community and social events — could harbor more than some of the town's most historic sites and scenic views.

Officials are considering using an area down by the Sailing Club turn-around at the lower end of town reservation off Border Street to deposit dredged harbor silt until it dries out and can be dumped at an upland landfill.

"Here's the question: No one wants to put the stuff where it's wildly unpopular but the project has to move forward and have local de-watering at some point," said Selectman Peter Pratt, who has been one of the prime movers behind the harbor dredging project.

Finding a site to dry-out the putrefying material is just one step in the complicated process of obtaining the necessary permits and grant funding to get the town's harbor dredged — a project seen as critical by both commercial fishermen and recreational boaters.

The federal channel, which is getting narrower due to silt buildup, hasn't been fully dredged in 35 years. There has been periodic maintenance dredging of the harbor and federal channel since then but the last time a federal/town dredging project of this magnitude was undertaken in Cohasset was in 1939, Pratt said.

With the state's financial help, the town is responsible for dredging areas in the harbor while the Army Corps of Engineers, a federal agency, will tackle the harbor channel, which falls under federal jurisdiction.

A total of $400,000 — including a $300,000 state grant administered by the Waterways Division of the state Department of Environmental Management and a $100,000 town match should cover the town's dredging costs.

The town has spent about $54,000 on engineering costs so far, Pratt said.

Due to the entangled environmental permitting process, the two projects — town and federal — actually piggy-back onto one another, and could start as early as October 1997 if any further possible bureaucratic hurdles are cleared and federal funding is available, Pratt explained.

The 90,000 cubic yards of silt in the federal channel will be scooped out mechanically. It does not contain pollutants and can be dumped in the ocean at the Massachusetts Bay Disposal Area off Gloucester, Pratt said.

The 7,500 cubic yards of silt from the inner harbor will be dredged hydraulically. The areas, which do not pass environmental testing, cannot be dumped in the ocean and must be dried out on land before upland disposal. As the polluted material dries, it must drain into a marine environment, Pratt explained.

After further testing, town officials hope three of the four harbor areas, the town is responsible for dredging — Parker Avenue boat ramp, Cox's Point, and the area between Cox's Point and the Yacht Club — will be suitable for ocean dumping which is less expensive than upland disposal. They concede that the Lawrence Wharf area (near the Olde Salt House) which is contaminated will have to be dumped at a landfill — at a cost of about $120 a cubic yard.

If three out of the four town areas can be "ocean dumped" — the project will be about $77,000 in the black. If upland disposal is required for the silt from the all four harbor sites, the town will be about $100,000 in the red, Pratt said.

Depending on the weather, the drying process can take up to six months, Pratt said. If all four areas in the harbor fail to pass criteria for ocean dumping, the drying material (stored in porous bags) could be stacked nine feet high and cover 1/2 an acre.

Presently, sampling and testing prices are very competitive because of the numerous projects being undertaken and this makes it cost effective to the town to re-test the four areas to be dredged at a cost of $55,400, Pratt said. Two of the four town sites failed previous ocean dumping tests and results on the other two were in dispute, within the agencies involved, so the town was ordered to re-test those two sites, Pratt explained. All four sites will be tested for upland disposal; and three of the four for ocean dumping. Officials hope the Lawrence Wharf area will qualify for upland disposal at a certified landfill and not a toxic waste site, which would increase disposal costs.

Members of the harbor committee and selectmen will take a walking tour of potential silt drying sites in town. Besides the area by the Sailing Club, the Hagerty property and Lawrence Wharf were also suggested. The possibility of bringing in a barge to dry the material will be re-examined by town engineers, officials said.

In the interim, officials are scrambling to compile a "cost benefit analysis" for the state which insists on the need to quantify the advantages dredging has for the commercial fleet and recreational boat before releasing the grant.

On a related note, Pratt said the Cohasset Navigation Act, the law changing the federal lines of jurisdiction in the harbor — enabling the town and yacht club to relocate boat slips increasing mooring space — is attached to another federal act and could become law within two weeks.

Hart: school buses are safe

up to registry flammability standards; and there was a problem with an emergency door buzzer, he said.

"There was nothing major like breaks or tires," Hart explained.

But the Registry disagrees.

Aubrey Haznar, registry spokesman, said Cohasset "does not know how to manage a garage" and has a history of repeated warnings. He claimed the school department treats the inspections as a joke and does not care about the safety of the public.

Haznar said listed oil leaks, lack of windshield wiper fluid, brooms in the aisles, faulty windshield wipers, no first aid kits, no dome lights, faulty break pads, and fuel pump problems among a myraid of other violations.

"It is pathetic to put children in these buses," he said and charged that the superintendent was "minimizing" the problem.

Hart said he would defy anyone to look at Cohasset buses and say safety was an issue.

"I don't agree with what (Haznar) said at all," Hart said describing several of the violations Haznar listed as "lies."

He noted that all school bus drivers perform a daily check and all school department buses meet manufacturers' specifications .

Berry-Steel said three Cohasset buses failed last spring. One for an improper railing and two for not having "body fluid kits" on board. The kits, which contain a mask, gloves and brush, are used for clean up purposes if a child vomits.

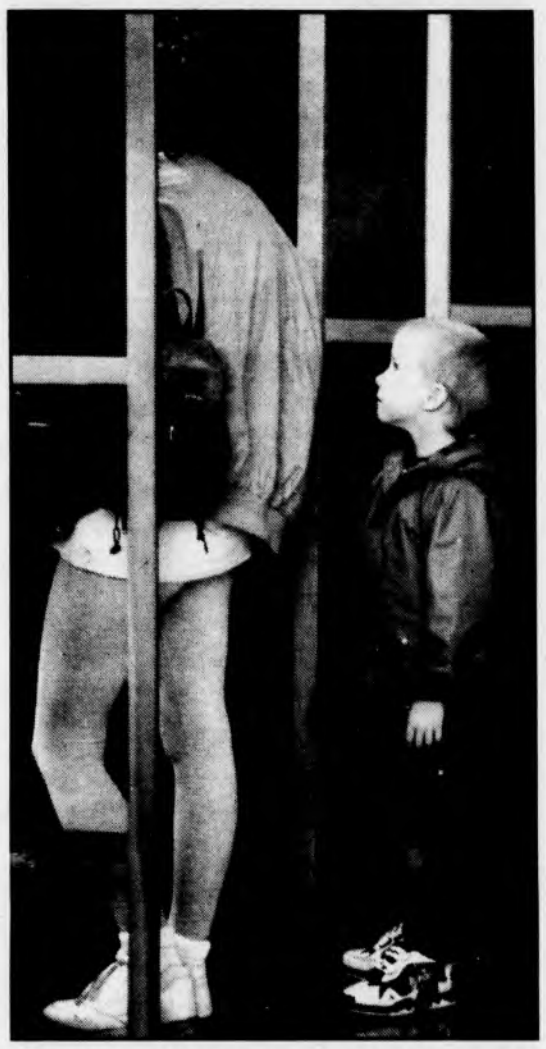
She said the state troopers who perform the inspections "go by the book" and enforce even minor infractions to ensure that the all buses are completely safe for the children.

In a related matter, the school department, which initially planned to ask for two new buses, is considering asking voters at October's special town meeting for money to buy four new school buses. The schools currently have two 1986 buses, two 1987s, one 1989 and one 1994.

Last May, the school department opted to stick with in-house bus service. The cost of the in-house service is $175,000, Hart said. That figure includes replacing buses on an eight-year cycle, insurance, maintenance, fuel and salaries and benefits for drivers.

The lowest bidder (North River Transportation) for the service was $180,000.

Cohasset parents have often commended the bus drivers on their personalized service, a benefit that could be lost if the service was contracted out, school officials said.



Jonathan Backer waits for his mother, Barbara, to vote in Tuesday's primary in Cohasset.

Safety of Lamberts Lane is topic

By MARY FORD
Cohasset Mariner

After hearing pleas from concerned neighbors, selectmen decided to take steps this week to solve traffic and safety problems along Lamberts Lane.

About a dozen residents of the narrow, tree-lined street appeared before selectmen on Monday to air their fears and to ask for help in what they view a crisis situation which has been exacerbated lately by plethora of construction vehicles heading to and from the site of new home construction in the neighborhood.

Mary Foley, 184 Lamberts Lane, who acted as spokesman for the neighbors, asked selectmen to address short-term issues such as the lack of visibility on the street and the need for improved lighting and lower speed limits. Down the road, the group wants the street widened and straightened.

"We're appealing to the town to do something now about the street before someone is badly hurt or killed," Foley said.

The board will have 15 miles-per-hour traffic signs posted so the police will have grounds to go after truckers and others who exceed the limit.

Selectmen will also ask building inspector Bob Egan to investigate cutting down trees along the street; to get an estimate about blasting an outcropping of ledge so the road could be straightened; and to look into the street light issue; and to check out the condition of the culvert.

Before the town can take major action to widen or straighten the street, it must solve the dilemma of determining what it can reasonably do because the street is a "private way" which precludes use of any state funds for improvements.

However, the board is not absolutely sure Lamberts Lane is a private way because the planning board treated it as a public way during a site plan review last spring for new homes now being constructed on the street.

Selectmen will ask town counsel to look into the matter to help make a determination if it doesn't require too much research which could be costly.

"No one has researched it enough to make a determination one way or another," Selectman Michael Sullivan said.

The Lamberts Lane neighbors have submitted a citizens petition article for the October special town meeting to address their safety concerns.

Selectmen still need one more citizen to sit on the new committee to study private ways in town. Call the selectmen's office at 383-9900 if interested.

Ten minutes for walk-ins

Selectmen set aside 10 minutes at 8 p.m. on their meeting nights to address any concerns from members of the public who have issues that are not on the agenda.

If the matter cannot be handled briefly, it will be placed on a future agenda, selectmen said.

The Mariner welcomes letters to the Editor.

Train committee readies recommendations

By ANDROMEDA WEISSMANN
Special to the Mariner

More community input is needed concerning the Greenbush railroad restoration project before recommendations can be presented to the Mitigation Committee, the Citizens' Advisory Committee decided at a meeting last Thursday.

The decision came following a discussion of the preliminary draft of the advisory committee's recommendations on the $215 railroad project. The draft addressed citizen concerns about safety crossing the railroad tracks, the effects of noise on the community, and the environmental impact of the project.

At the meeting, each committee member presented a draft section of the report for discussion.

"The first drafts have moved us a long way toward where we need to get to," said committee chairman James Mullen.

However, the members determined there has not been enough public comment to finalize the report, particularly on issues such as the placement of safety fences and walls. Although the committee held two public meetings earlier this year, the second one was attended by only one citizen, which may have been because the meeting was scheduled in between the two sessions of special town meeting last month, Mullen said.

Consequently, the committee will hold a third and final public meeting on Wednesday, Sept. 25, and hopes to finalize its report that evening.

Much of last Thursday's meeting was spent discussing the committee's safety recommendations. According to a section drafted by member Barbara Canney, most railroad-crossing accidents are caused by warning equipment failures, drivers trying to bypass gates and "beat the train," or cars getting stuck on the tracks due to eroded roadways. Most pedestrian accidents also result from trespassing on the rails.

The committee is expected to propose that railroad crossings be designed to prevent such occurrences; that safety fences and walls be erected and electronic sensors installed to prevent unauthorized access to the tracks; that warning signs be clearly visible to drivers; and that the MBTA budget for and keep a regular maintenance schedule for all safety components.

Another expected recommendation is that the MBTA position guards at crossings at Sohier, Pleasant, Spring and Pond streets, to help children traveling to or

Final Greenbush CAC meeting

The Citizen's Advisory Committee for the Old Colony/Greenbush Railroad line has scheduled its third and final public meeting for Wednesday, Sept. 25, at 7:30 p.m. at Cohasset Town Hall. The meeting will focus on the issues facing Cohasset with the restoration of the railroad.

The committee wishes to solicit comments from the public relative to mitigation measures. Station location, traffic and parking, air and noise pollution, wetlands and herbicides and safety and financial issues will be discussed.

Abutters and interested Cohasset residents are encouraged to attend. To comment for for further information, individuals may call one of the following members of the committee: James A. Mullen, chairman; Peter Pearce, John Rafferty, Edward F. Woods, Barbara Canney, Nancy J. Butler or Mary A. Foley, or call or write to Citizen's Advisory Committee for the Old Colony/Greenbush Railroad Line, Cohasset Town Hall, 41 Highland Ave., Cohasset 02025.

Train committee readies recommendations

To address citizen concerns regarding noise pollution, the committee is expected to recommend that all road crossings be designed to permit train operation without the need for sounding whistles and horns, and that sound barriers run alongside more than 40 percent of the track.

The list of recommendations may also include the use of cement rail ties to prevent contaminants from leaking into ground water, keeping the railroad's path as narrow as possible to preserve the surrounding habitat, and close work between the MBTA and the Conservation Commission.

The committee did not have time last Thursday to discuss possible recommendations for the building of a train station.

The Mitigation Committee, made up of town and public safety officials, was scheduled to meet with the MBTA last night after the Mariner went to press to discuss the possibility locating the train station in the village and not out on Route 3A. Officials believe a downtown station might help revitalize Cohasset's village.

Car Solutions

General Manager Service Manager

Well-Adjusted Wheels

▶ What are adjustments that the auto technicians is likely to make as part of a wheel alignment? To begin with, there is "toe," which is the tilt of the wheels toward or away from one another when viewed from above. Tires that "toe-in" point toward one another, while tires that "toe-out" point away from each other. Proper toe adjustment minimizes wear. "Camber" is the tilt of the wheels toward or away from one another when viewed from the front. Camber adjustment helps keep the face of the tire tread flat on the road for maximum traction and less wear on the edges. Lastly, there is "caster," which is the angle of the steering axis in relation to a vertical line through the center of the wheel, when viewed from the side. Caster can only be adjusted on the front wheels. The proper caster angle helps to stabilize the vehicle and impart better steering feel.

▶ Routine wheel alignments help extend the life of your tires by ensuring even wear; they also help make your steering easier. At SOUTH SHORE CHEVROLET-GEO, we have just what you need in a car, and we offer better deals for our customers. Our personalized service has brought customers back to us for years. We're happy to give you a full explanation of the service work completed on your vehicle . We welcome your questions--we're here to answer them.

You can find us at 828 C.J. Cushing Hwy., Rte 3A and we are open Thursday evenings. Phone: 383-9090

Satisfaction with your car's performance is what we deliver.

Hint: On some front-wheel-drive cars, the front tires should toe-out slightly to compensate for other forces so that the tires run parallel to one another as they roll down the road.

Don't miss the soccer pancake breakfast on Sunday

With all of the fall sports underway, and everyone talking about how great Alumni Field is, be sure to lend your support to our athletes who are playing on it! They work so hard every day to make their teams winners, and your presence is something they really appreciate! So, plan to attend an event, cheer them on and appreciate the "new look."

After that, plan on attending the 14th annual Cohasset Soccer Pancake Breakfast, which will be held this Sunday, Sept. 22, from 8 a.m. to noon. The price is $3, with kiddos under 5 eating free. They always do a marvelous job, and no one ever leaves there hungry, that's for sure. Don't forget to attend. A full week of sporting events indeed!

Boston College High School sent us a list of students who earned themselves academic honors for the fourth term. Cohasset is proud of Benjamin T. Smoot, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Smoot, Hull Street, and Robert Morgan, son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Morgan, Jerusalem Road. Both gents are in the Class of 1999. Benjamin made high honors and Robert earned honors. Congratulations to you both, along with high hopes for a repeat performance this semester!

Boy, do Harry and Sharon (Souther) Silvia have wonderful news to report — Their twins are home! Shelby Nicole and Shannon Ashley were born June 21, and are finally at home! Do you think there is much excitement in that household? You had better believe it! From all reports, they are strong and healthy and should be out and about shortly. Of course, they are beautiful, too! Anyway, maternal grandparents Pam and Peter Souther and maternal grandmother Murielle are positively glowing with pride and happiness, and we cannot wait to see those darling babies!

Julienne R. Quemere, daughter of Kathleen Quemere, has been named to the spring term dean's list at Hartwick College, which indicates she does excellent academic work, and we applaud her and her efforts.

Nicholas B. Terry, son of David and Suzanne Terry, Margin Street, is participating in the Bates College Junior Year Abroad program. Nicholas, a history major, is studying in Paris. He is a 1994 CHS graduate and a dean's list student. Nicholas is a junior at Bates.

Great news! Millard MacNeill is at home recovering nicely and making steady progress! We are all thinking of you, Millard!

Must take this time to wish our two favorite nieces, Jeannine and Karen, happy birthday greetings — both are already over, but we know each had a great day! We'll let you know when our other two favorite nieces, Laura and Holly, celebrate their special days in December.

Wasn't it nice that Donna Green participated in the 30th anniversary celebration of Hingham's Bowl and Board by autographing copies of her books for interested readers? She is unbelievably talented, and her paintings are known all over the world — another wonderful local resident.

Did you know that Cohasset Elder Affairs is still looking for volunteers for a new pilot program they will be administering? The Elder Advocacy Specialist Service will consist of a network for assisting elders in Cohasset. The program is supposed to start in November. Training will be held in October. If you would like to assist seniors in need or securing services and benefits, call Kathy at 383-9116.

Had a nice talk with Sue Fone this week, and she and Ken are really loving Maine (other than the soggy summer they endured, just like the rest of us), but "Pop" Fone isn't doing as well as they would hope. As this goes to press, he is in the hospital undergoing tests, and they will do whatever is needed. We sure hope all turns out well for all three. We know it will! I'll let you know what their plans are as soon as I hear!

That's the news for this week — actually for the next two, as I am headed to sunny California for two weeks. But that doesn't mean there will not be anyone to take your news. You can drop it off in the Mariner box, call the Mariner or call here — there will always be someone her to take your good news for me! See you Oct. 3!

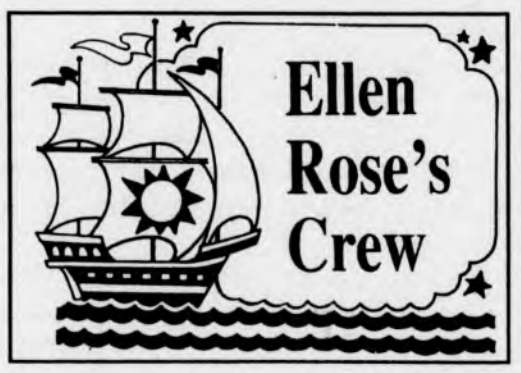
Join Ellen Rose's team



Sunday, Sept. 29, Cara, Bree and Maura McKenney will join families, friends and students from Cohasset High School, Milton Academy and Melrose High School in the Boston Marathon Jimmy Fund Walk. The McKenney girls, ages 12, 14 and 16, will be walking with, and in behalf of their 8-year-old cousin, Ellen Rose O'Brien of Melrose.

Ellen Rose has been a patient at the Jimmy Fund, battling a brain tumor since her fifth birthday. The last two years she has joined her cousins and friends on "Ellen Rose's Crew" and made the trek along the Boston Marathon Route completing the last 13 miles from Wellesley to Boston.

This year Ellen, an active second-grader, is eagerly awaiting the walk. Ron Goodwin, of Goodwin Graphics in Cohasset has once again donated the printing of the team T-shirts, and Ellen Rose's crew is looking for walkers!

The McKenney sisters invite anyone to join them on the walk. They've arranged for a bus to transport walkers from Boston to their start in Wellesley. The Jimmy Fund asks that each member of a team try to collect a minimum of $100 in pledges. Last year 6,000 walkers raised $1.5 million for cancer research and treatment at the Dana Farber Cancer Institute.

If you would like to walk, please call the McKenneys at 383-1338 to register and receive your team shirt.

If you would like to make a donation, please make checks payable to The Boston Marathon Jimmy Fund Walk and send to The McKenneys, 45 Spring St., Cohasset, 02025. Your donation will sponsor a team member and help us all to be part of the cure.

Arthur C. Rowe, Jr. aboard "The Morning Star."

Arthur C. Rowe, Jr.

Cohasset native, Arthur C. Rowe, Jr., 65, died of natural causes at his Florida residence Jan. 30, 1996.

While employed at Raytheon as a scientist/inventor, Mr. Rowe built the first microwave oven in 1954.

In 1958, he designed and built the first unsinkable sailing "pram" which he later sold to Boston Whaler.

A manager and aeronautical engineer with TRW in California, Mr. Rowe later built "The Morning Star" to sail to the West Indies and South America. The sail boat is now moored in Falmouth.

As a member of the scientific community, Mr. Rowe worked on perfecting the computerized windmill and German water turbine.

He enjoyed writing poetry.

A private service in Cohasset will be held Sunday. Mr. Rowe's ashes will be buried at sea via "The Morning Star."

Mr. Rowe leaves his children Christine MacDonald of Plympton, Linda A. Rowe of Weymouth, Sandy Conley of Amherst, New Hampshire, and Arthur A. Rowe of Hull; and his grandchildren Katelynn and Nicole Conley, and Alden and Noah Rowe. He also leaves a brother, David Rowe of Torrence, California.

Politics 101 Taught on a Personal Level

"Every vote counts." It's a cliché that's drummed into our American heads all our lives, and yet it's easy to forget it's true.

Phil Johnston's upset of William Delahunt in Tuesday's Democratic primary for Gerry Studds' House seat is the kind of thing that can remind us. Delahunt, the Norfolk County District Attorney, had been practically anointed the winner by political pundits and members of the media. But with the rain coming down hard, many voters stayed home, perhaps too comfortable in the assumption that their candidate had the edge.

But lawn signs don't vote, and pollsters' results aren't necessarily reflected at the polls. Whether or not a possible recount confirms his victory, Johnston wasn't supposed to do as well as he has done. But it didn't take a whole lot of votes — just over 17,000 out of 46,000 in a sprawling district that ranges from gritty urban to placid rural — to turn the election results around.

That's the power of the vote, and too often these days we forget to exercise it. By failing to set a good example, we neglect to teach our children that voting is a crucial responsibility of citizens in a democracy.

Community Newspaper Company, the parent of this newspaper, believes so strongly in the importance of the vote that we're sponsoring a debate between Senate candidates John Kerry and William Weld this Sunday in Boston. What will set this debate apart is the participating audience; we have invited more than 300 high school students from throughout eastern Massachusetts to take part in it. Many of these students will have a chance to ask questions directly to the candidates as they take part in what we see as an unusual "town meeting" on a grand scale. Our intention is to give these future voters a real taste of the political process as participants.

The lesson of the event is being delivered in the students' language. Time Warner Cable, a media co-sponsor, has made arrangements to bring MTV's "Choose or Lose" touring bus to the World Trade Center in Boston from noon until 2 p.m. on the day of the event. The bus is part of a national political awareness campaign to encourage voter registration and voting among 18- to 34-year-olds.

While few of the students invited to the debate are old enough to vote, we are impressed by their interest. They make us optimistic about the role many of them will play in two years, in four years and for many years after.

We're doing our part to inform children about the election process. It will be most effective if you set a personal example by casting a ballot Nov. 5.

Local church to conduct census

To the Editor:

Saint Anthony's Roman Catholic Church of Cohasset will conduct a town-wide Ecumenical Census Sunday, Sept. 29, between the hours of 1 and 8 p.m. All census takers will be properly identified. All of the churches in Cohasset are part of this project. Some of the churches in Cohasset have already supplied their census lists to the committee. We are left with having to visit approximately 2,100 households.

We hope to have more than 100 volunteers who will take the census. The census takers will come to your door and identify themselves and ask you if you are a member of Saint Anthony's Roman Catholic Church. If you are, they will ask you to fill out a form. You can fill it out and either give it back to them, mail it back to the rectory or place it in the baskets at the weekend Masses. If you are not a Catholic the census taker will give you a form that you may fill out and send to one of the other churches in Cohasset.

Why do the churches of Cohasset need a census at this time? The town census has been fluctuating in recent years. Saint Anthony's hasn't taken a census since 1960. The parish needs to identify those members who need to be served, i.e. identifying children for our Religious Education Program (CCD), identifying those who need the help of our priest or others in the parish. The parish needs to serve its members. To do this we need to know who those members are and what needs they might have. We also want to be able to communicate with our members. The new parish council is exploring different methods of serving the parish and we would like all of the parishioners to be aware of what is happening in our parish, the archdiocese and the church.

The cooperation and patience of all of the citizens of the Town of Cohasset are needed for the success of this tremendous undertaking. We do not want to be intrusive. We ask that you restrain your dogs during this time. We want to thank you in advance for your cooperation and help in this very important undertaking.

We would like to thank the Mariner for publishing this message for the people of the Town of Cohasset.

The train is a bad idea

To the Editor:

Why Cohasset?

- Cohasset is a beautiful town.
- Cohasset is a quiet town.
- Cohasset is a family-oriented town, where we sacrifice much, both in money and convenience to keep this a peaceful haven for our families and ourselves.
- Cohasset is a wonderful seaside community, with abundant wetlands, which people have fought very hard to preserve in recent years.

Why not Greenbush?

- For all of the above reasons!
- Twelve dangerous grade crossings in Cohasset alone!
- A 30- to 50-foot strip clear cut through town!
- Diesel smoke, fumes, train horns!
- A two-story parking garage in our historical village?
- Fences and walls dividing neighborhoods!

These ideas are insulting to our town, please stop and consider why we do love and live in our town.

Don't give up the fight for better public transportation, but insist on a better solution. Continue to call and write the governor's office and tell him, No Greenbush! Despite what many think, it is not too late!

Only 17 percent town turnout in Tuesday's primary

Johnston gets most votes in Cohasset

By CHARLENE VANDINI
Cohasset Mariner

Contrary to Cohasset's reputation as a Republican stronghold, Marshfield Democrat Philip Johnston was the largest vote-getter in Tuesday's state primary voting.

Fewer than 17 per cent of Cohasset's 5,183 registered voters cast ballots Tuesday, despite the district's first real Congressional contest in almost 25 years.

In all, 556 voters selected the Democrat ballot and 306 chose to vote for Republican candidates.

Johnston, the former state representative, was opposed by Norfolk County District Attorney William Delahunt, Ian Bowles of Falmouth, and Walter Murray of Hull, in his bid to face the the Republican candidate for the Congressional seat being vacated by U.S. Rep. Gerry Studds.

Johnston received 275 votes, to 107 for Delahunt, 80 for Bowles, and 15 for Murray.

On the Republican side of the voting for the 10th Congressional District seat, state Representative Edward Teague of Yarmouth received 185 votes. Francis W. Sargent, Jr. of Orleans received 70 votes, and 23 votes were cast for Steven Pappas of Weymouth .

Town Clerk Marion Douglas said she detected much disinterest by voters, and the heavy rain "didn't help."

Incumbent Senator John Kerry was unopposed on the Democrat side, and received 311 votes. Gov. William Weld, who is challenging him for the Senate seat received 217 votes on the Republican primary ballot.

None of Cohasset's voters selected the Libertarian party ballot. (See results, page 11).

Blanks in Weymouth could be questioned

By mid-morning Wednesday, the race was so tight that victory could not be assured until the town clerk reported the tallies from Oak Bluffs on Martha's Vineyard.

Yesterday afternoon, it was not clear if Delahunt will seek a recount. A decision was expected by 5 p.m. yesterday after the Cohasset Mariner went to press.

Delahunt spokesman Lanny Johnson said yesterday it was "very likely" a recount would be sought because of the high number of blanks cast in Weymouth and Brockton.

"Why would someone come out in the rain and not vote?" he asked.

Both Weymouth and Brockton use the punch-card system and if a card is not punched enough so light shines through the hole, the card is counted as a blank.

"If my name were blank, I'd be governor," said Weymouth Town Clerk Frank Fryer about the 1,080 blanks (18.55%) on the Democratic Congressional ballot.

According to the Secretary of State's office, when the margin is less than one half of one percent — a candidate can petition automatically for a district-wide recount. Wider margins between the top two finishers in a race would require a recount by precinct.

The candidate seeking the recount must submit the signatures of 500 registered Democrats in the district for certification within three days, explained Jack McCarthy, spokesman for the Secretary of State's office.

Delahunt has until Tuesday to file with the state and a recount would have to be completed by September 30 for ballot printing purposes.

Lanny Johnson said the campaign was looking at a recount and would go ahead if they determine there is a likelihood of success.

Although pre-election pundits predicted an easy victory for Delahunt, Johnston captured towns throughout the South Shore and much of Cape Cod and narrowed the front-runner's lead in the cities of Quincy and Weymouth. While candidate Ian Bowles trailed a distant third, his success in many Cape Cod towns may have aided the Johnston campaign by taking additional votes away from Delahunt.

Johnston supporters brimmed with confidence on primary night as numbers poured in from throughout the district. Cheer after cheer went up from Johnston's headquarters on Marshfield's Ocean Street.

"We don't know what the final results will be, but we have carried the vast majority of communities in this district," Johnston said. "I think it was because of the message we had out there. Every man, woman and child deserves access to high-quality, affordable health care, and second that we value children, and we want to invest in children. We want the best public schools on earth."

Johnston's supporters credited a strong, loyal base of volunteers able to get important information out to his constituents with his surprisingly strong showing in the primary.

Portrayed as the front-runner from the beginning of the race, Norfolk District Attorney William Delahunt may have suffered from low voter turnout on a cold and rainy election day throughout the district.

Delahunt was still expected to win as of 8:15 p.m. Tuesday. Yet Delahunt campaigners said they were nervous about the low turnout during a gathering at the Black Cat Restaurant in Hyannis, where the candidate spoke of the need for party loyalty.

"Politics is a nasty business," Delahunt told his supporters. "The Democrats have to come together for the general election."

Johnston agreed, telling his supporters that either he or Delahunt would be the one to cast the vote that would remove Newt Gingrich as Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Claiming victory in every precinct, state Rep. Edward Teague won an easy victory in the Republican race over author Francis William Sargent and newspaper deliveryman Steve Pappas.

"This was an absolutely great victory," Teague said, speaking at the Veterans of Foreign Wars Post in Hyannis. "Some doubted my ability to raise money, being an unknown outside of the Cape. But by Sept. 1, I had raised $500,000. Yet this race was not about financing. It was about working hard and looking ahead. I don't know who my opponent will be, but I won't be running against anyone. I will be running for the people of the 10th district."

Delahunt, 55, a Quincy resident, portrayed himself throughout the campaign as a tough, dedicated prosecutor and a champion of the middle class.

While promising to concentrate on health care and the environment if elected, Delahunt focused throughout his campaign on the need for what he called "the restoration of the middle class." Calling himself "a union guy at heart," Delahunt argued for reductions in the work week and increases in benefits for workers. Once an abortion foe, Delahunt now supports a woman's right to choose.

Delahunt bore the brunt of attacks from both Democratic challengers and Republican front-runner Edward Teague. Delahunt's opponents challenged his middle-class image, citing newspaper reports that suggested the district attorney was worth as much as $800,000. They also criticized his use of campaign funds to pay for long-distance telephone calls, lunch and dinner tabs, and donations to Middlebury College, his alma mater.

Johnston, 52, a Marshfield resident, left a presidential appointment as director of health and human services for New England to run for Studds' seat. He had formerly served as state secretary of health and human services under former Gov. Michael Dukakis and a state representative from the Fourth Plymouth District.

A self-described "liberal who can count," Johnston emphasized the need for health care reform throughout his campaign, proposing a "health consumers' bill of rights" which would include controls for health management organizations. Johnston also pledged his support for education and the environment, winning the endorsement of John DeVillars of the Environmental Protection Agency, as well as the Environmental Business Council of New England.

Bowles, 30, worked as a former executive with the Conservation International Foundation, a non-profit environmental advocacy group based in Washington. A Harvard graduate, Bowles focused on the economy and environment throughout his campaign. He was the first candidate to air television advertisements.

Teague, 46 brought his experience as state House minority leader to the race. The Yarmouth resident's "10-Point Plan" included Congressional reform, the economy, a balanced budget and welfare reform as issues he promised to tackle if elected.

Teague has defended the welfare reform bill crafted by national Republican leaders, and has pledged to work with those leaders if elected. He has received the criticism of his opponents and the censure of Democratic legislators after at least two occasions on which fellow Republican representatives voted in his place while he was away from the State House.

Community input sought for town's open space plan

Public hearing slated for Sept. 25

By ALICE C. COYLE
Cohasset Mariner

The committee working on the town's Open Space and Recreation plan and will welcome the community's input on the first draft at a public hearing at the town hall on Wednesday, Sept. 25 at 7:30 p.m.

Conservation Commissioner Sue Cope, who chairs the Open Space Advisory Committee, said much has been done on the plan since town meeting appointed the committee and authorized spending $12,000 on consultants to assist in developing it.

The eight-member committee has worked with a wildlife biologist to assist in identifying wildlife habitats and what protection strategies to pursue to protect them. Maps identifying open space, water resources as well as scenic and cultural spots has also been developed along with a five-year action plan for these sites, Cope said.

While there has long been a need for an open space committee and plan, Cope said the Turkey Hill joint acquisition project with Hingham has acted as a catalyst to the process.

In order to purchase this 50-acre parcel spread over Hingham and Cohasset and offering spectacular views of the harbor and Boston skyline, both towns must submit open space plans to the state Division of Conservation Services in order to be considered eligible for the "Self Help Conservation Grant." In addition to pitching in more than $100,000 each for the land, Hingham and Cohasset are looking for a grant from the state to pay about half of the purchase price of Turkey Hill which is over $800,000.

The final plan is due in mid-October and Cope said acquiring Turkey Hill will require another vote by the special town meeting planned for Oct.28. In addition to the $100,000 the town will be asked to authorize for the purchase, Cope said the Conservation Commission will pitch in another $25,000 for the property from its fund. Private conservation trusts are also raising money to help purchase the property.

Community involvement in developing the plan has been extensive, said Cope, who noted that more than 250 residents responded to an open space survey polling people to determine how important conservation and recreation land is to them and how far they think the town should go to preserve it.

Nearly 50 percent of those polled said they felt there was not enough conservation land in Cohasset and more than three quarters of those who responded said it was "important" or "very important" that the town acquire and preserve conservation land — including the Turkey Hill property. Support for conservation land acquisition with state and federal funds was substantial but a majority of residents polled said they would also support the use of town funds to do so. Less than 15 percent of the respondents rejected the acquisition of more conservation land.

Cope said open space makes up about 35 percent of Cohasset with 30 percent of that protected.

As for the town's recreational facilities, Cope said the survey showed they are well used with the majority of those polled using the beaches, harbor and conservation land, and a smaller number utilizing athletic fields and playgrounds. The committee's action plan will address increasing cool and cold weather recreational opportunities as well as improving handicapped accessibility, Cope said.

"This is not only an open space plan, it's a recreation plan as well," said Cope who said the committee wants to provide recreational opportunities for the public as well as provide a habitat for wildlife.

"We should be able to accommodate both with our small population," she said.

Cohasset's unique character was also touched on in the survey which showed nearly 100 percent of the respondents found waterfront sites and views including the harbor and ocean, the beaches and Minot Light best symbolized that character. Other important sites mentioned included the Common and surrounding historic buildings and the village center. Least liked and considered a threat to the town's quiet, New England character and diverse landscapes, was Route 3A development, the return of commuter rail and the possible expansion of the Cohasset Heights Landfill.

Respondents also addressed priorities and actions they feel the town should take regarding open space and recreation land in town. Increased access to the sites via walkways and bike paths was the top priority for those polled and cope said it is a big part of the committee's action plan.

Nearly 50 percent of those polled said they felt there was not enough conservation land in Cohasset and more than three quarters of those who responded said it was 'important' or 'very important' that the town acquire and preserve conservation land — including the Turkey Hill property.

"We're lucky we have a lot of open space," said Cope, who noted that "maintaining that land and making sure people know how to access it is very important.

"We want to increase awareness about and access to public lands," she said.

In addition to the public hearing to review the plan and gather community input, Cope said committee is planning to host a tour of the Turkey Hill site on Oct. 19.

'Knurek era' kicks off Friday

By JIM O'SULLIVAN
Special to the Mariner

Skippers set for gridiron opener

In the second year of what is now being referred to as the "The Knurek Era," the Cohasset High varsity football team has taken great strides. With 11 seniors anchoring the squad this year, head coach Bob Knurek looks forward to a competitive season.

However, the team's record seems almost secondary this season as the football program on the whole, has improved greatly under Knurek. This season, the Skipper's will field three teams, compared to two last year. Along with varsity and JV, Knurek has engineered the addition of a junior high team. Furthermore, the Skippers will play their home games this year on the sparkling new Cohasset Alumni Field. Every home game this season, apart from the Thanksgiving contest, will be played on Friday nights under the lights, which should bring an added sense of excitement.

Knurek is optimistic about this year's edition, but was hesitant to name individuals, citing only the players who have surprised him this year.

Seniors Matt Belson and Jerry Cogill are "huge, strong, and fired up on the defensive line and they're going to have some fun this year." Junior Jamie Buick will also be a key to the defensive line.

"Buick is our defensive end; he's very tough to block and he does his job there," Knurek said.

Andy Hamilton was another pleasant surprise for the Skipper coaching staff. "Hamilton was our preseason pick for the fourth captain," he said. He really stepped it up at middle linebacker for us."

Junior co-captain Pat Hurley will start at quarterback for the blue and will be joined in the backfield by senior co-captain fullback Grant Emde and sophomore tailback Raheem Shepard. Knurek also gave himself another option out of the backfield, as the Skippers will sometimes use Emde at tailback and bring senior Doug Cameron in to play fullback.

Lady booters are starting to come around

By JOE REARDON
Cohasset Mariner

It took four games, but the Cohasset High girls soccer team finally has something to show for the grass and mud stains, bruises and aches.

The effort has been there, but the positive results that come with hard work have eluded the Lady Skippers.

"I was happy as could be," said head coach Maureen O'Day-Clark, whose squad played to a scoreless tie Monday against a tough Scituate team to break a three-game losing streak.

With six freshmen on the team, O'Day-Clark's squad doesn't have the seasoning of the '95 club. She has been trying different combinations on defense and is anxious to build up the Lady Skippers' consistency in front of the goal. It was during that time Cohasset sustained the losses to East Bridgewater and Abington.

"Monday was so good for the team," she said. "We really needed that. It was hard for my girls. They were playing hard. I think they'll come around."

The Lady Skippers (0-3-1) showed definite signs of breaking out of its funk last Friday in a 1-0 loss to Norton. Working on its defensive scheme, Cohasset had tough 3-0 losses to East Bridgewater and Abington both, before regrouping to take on the Lady Lancers.

Although "it took a while to get going," against Norton because of the one-hour bus ride, O'Day-Clark said the team "played a great second half."

Midfielder Hannah Begin and forward Eileen Ridge have been two of the steadiest performers for the Lady

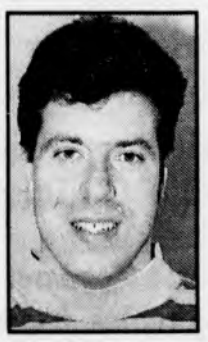
It's the Best Show in Town

So you missed the Friday night high school football game and need some sort of live sports fix on Saturday.

Youth soccer is your answer. And all Little League and youth football coaches out there, don't take this the wrong way, but it also happens to be the best youth activity a kid can get involved in.

For starters, the sport appeals to kids of all ages, male and female. We all know 5 and 6 year olds have an attention span of about 30 seconds before they get restless. Put a child that age in left field of a Little League game and he'll be tossing pebbles in a matter of minutes. How much action is the kid going to get in the outfield? Maybe a ball here or there over the course of a game. And the exercise factor is nil.



Reardon

In youth soccer, the kids are chasing the ball, kicking the ball and chasing it some more. The only break is when a whistle is called. Play resumes very quickly and the kids are back at it.

And what's especially appealing about youth soccer is that a kid can make a mistake without it being obviously noticeable. A pass may be botched by a teammate and stolen by an opposing player, or a goaltender may not be able to get to a shot on goal.

Now compare that to a Little Leaguer who strikes out with the bases loaded or has a ground ball go between his legs for an error. Even worse — dropping a fly ball.

Take it from someone who was a tentative baseball player at best and did all three more than once. You stick out like a sore thumb on the playing field in front of your teammates and the spectators. It's humiliating.

Community input sought for town's open space plan

Public hearing slated for Sept. 25

By ALICE C. COYLE
Cohasset Mariner

The committee working on the town's Open Space and Recreation plan and will welcome the community's input on the first draft at a public hearing at the town hall on Wednesday, Sept. 25 at 7:30 p.m.

Conservation Commissioner Sue Cope, who chairs the Open Space Advisory Committee, said much has been done on the plan since town meeting appointed the committee and authorized spending $12,000 on consultants to assist in developing it.

The eight-member committee has worked with a wildlife biologist to assist in identifying wildlife habitats and what protection strategies to pursue to protect them. Maps identifying open space, water resources as well as scenic and cultural spots has also been developed along with a five-year action plan for these sites, Cope said.

While there has long been a need for an open space committee and plan, Cope said the Turkey Hill joint acquisition project with Hingham has acted as a catalyst to the process.

In order to purchase this 50-acre parcel spread over Hingham and Cohasset and offering spectacular views of the harbor and Boston skyline, both towns must submit open space plans to the state Division of Conservation Services in order to be considered eligible for the "Self Help Conservation Grant." In addition to pitching in more than $100,000 each for the land, Hingham and Cohasset are looking for a grant from the state to pay about half of the purchase price of Turkey Hill which is over $800,000.

The final plan is due in mid-October and Cope said acquiring Turkey Hill will require another vote by the special town meeting planned for Oct.28. In addition to the $100,000 the town will be asked to authorize for the purchase, Cope said the Conservation Commission will pitch in another $25,000 for the property from its fund. Private conservation trusts are also raising money to help purchase the property.

Community involvement in developing the plan has been extensive, said Cope, who noted that more than 250 residents responded to an open space survey polling people to determine how important conservation and recreation land is to them and how far they think the town should go to preserve it.

Nearly 50 percent of those polled said they felt there was not enough conservation land in Cohasset and more than three quarters of those who responded said it was "important" or "very important" that the town acquire and preserve conservation land — including the Turkey Hill property. Support for conservation land acquisition with state and federal funds was substantial but a majority of residents polled said they would also support the use of town funds to do so. Less than 15 percent of the respondents rejected the acquisition of more conservation land.

Cope said open space makes up about 35 percent of Cohasset with 30 percent of that protected.

As for the town's recreational facilities, Cope said the survey showed they are well used with the majority of those polled using the beaches, harbor and conservation land, and a smaller number utilizing athletic fields and playgrounds. The committee's action plan will address increasing cool and cold weather recreational opportunities as well as improving handicapped accessibility, Cope said.

"This is not only an open space plan, it's a recreation plan as well," said Cope who said the committee wants to provide recreational opportunities for the public as well as provide a habitat for wildlife.

"We should be able to accommodate both with our small population," she said.

Cohasset's unique character was also touched on in the survey which showed nearly 100 percent of the respondents found waterfront sites and views including the harbor and ocean, the beaches and Minot Light best symbolized that character. Other important sites mentioned included the Common and surrounding historic buildings and the village center. Least liked and considered a threat to the town's quiet, New England character and diverse landscapes, was Route 3A development, the return of commuter rail and the possible expansion of the Cohasset Heights Landfill.

Respondents also addressed priorities and actions they feel the town should take regarding open space and recreation land in town. Increased access to the sites via walkways and bike paths was the top priority for those polled and cope said it is a big part of the committee's action plan.

"We're lucky we have a lot of open space," said Cope, who noted that "maintaining that land and making sure people know how to access it is very important.

"We want to increase awareness about and access to public lands," she said.

In addition to the public hearing to review the plan and gather community input, Cope said committee is planning to host a tour of the Turkey Hill site on Oct. 19.

Nearly 50 percent of those polled said they felt there was not enough conservation land in Cohasset and more than three quarters of those who responded said it was 'important' or 'very important' that the town acquire and preserve conservation land — including the Turkey Hill property.

Cohasset Yacht Club junior sailing program

By KEVIN ULMER
Special to the Mariner

During 1996, the junior activities program at the Cohasset Yacht Club continued its mission of instilling a love of sailing by teaching skills of seamanship, sportsmanship, self-sufficiency, and safety to 46 junior sailors. Over an eight-week period, 27 young sailors completed full Flag requirements, two completed partial Flags, and 18 teen sailors were active in the racing program.

Head instructor Jim O'Hare was ably assisted by Chloe Chittick, John Sargent, Ian Simons, Colin Pyfrom and Ted Noon. White Flags (first year) were awarded to Jay Adams, Jacqueline Chase, Mack Chase, J.C. Hermanns, Jenna Larson, Ned MacPherson, Christina Manchester, Johnny Roth and Sam Steele. Red Flags (second year) were awarded to Emily Dean, Alexandra Dempster, Anke Hermanns, Doug Pearce, Gillian Simons, Cally Speed, Calla Staszko and Callie Steele. Blue Flags (third year) were awarded to Whitney Davis, Jessie Guild, Molly Flanagan, Maura McKenney and Kimberly Ulmer. The Captain's Flag (fourth year) was awarded to Will MacPherson. Yacht Club burgees were awarded to those sailors completing the five-year program in the Admiral's Flag: Taylor Davis, Carter Noon, Henry Roth and Ashley Ulmer. Partial Admiral's Flags were completed by Will MacPherson and Matthew McLoughlin.

The racing team, coached by Joe Menis, expanded 50 percent this year to 18 sailors who competed in a fleet of six new club 420's purchased by the membership of the club this season. One of the new boats was a generous gift of Jo Ann and Charlie Ford and will be named Valiant in memory of their son Scott who helped revive the sailing team at Milton Academy and co-captained the freshman sailing team at Tufts. The team was undefeated in Mass Bay Sailing Association interclub races on the South Shore for the second year. Racing team members included Torrey Androski, Devin Buick, Lydia Crafts, Carl Dean, Erica Dean, Janson Dupré, Lydia Guild, Scott MacPherson, Andrew McAuliffe, Brie McKenney, Elliot Noon, Ted Noon, Colin Pyfrom, Melissa Pyfrom, Ian Simons, Jamie Simons, Ryan Staszko and Wiley Wakeman.

Noteworthy racing performances for the summer included Mass Bay BayBank 1996 Junior Regatta — second in the Laser class by Ryan Staszko, sixth in Laser Radials by Wiley Wakeman, fifth in the Optimist Blue fleet by Matt McLoughlin, fourth in the Optimist White fleet by Jessie Guild and third and fourth in the Optimist Green fleet by Anke Hermanns and Callie Steele, respectively. This was the first regatta for seven of the first-year White Flag sailors, and Henry Roth was awarded the BayBank Sportsmanship Trophy. At the Scituate Junior Regatta, Callie Steele took second in the Optimist Green fleet. At the Hingham Junior Regatta, Ted Noon and Scott MacPherson took first in the 420's and Carl Dean and Jamie Simons took second. Ryan Staszko had three first place finishes to win the Laser class, and Taylor Davis took second in the Optimist Red fleet. Congratulations to all these promising young sailors.

As for entertainment value, it's not even close. Youth soccer wins in a landslide.

I guarantee even the most ardent pessimist will be entertained by taking in a game of youngsters playing Great Britain's version of football on a Saturday morning.

If you really want to get the most chuckles for your buck (oops, did I mention the free admission?), however, be sure to set up camp at the field where the 5- and 6-year-old players battle it out.

This is truly soccer in its purest form. The kids are all novices, still trying to get a handle on the rules and fundamentals.

The coaches, God love 'em, have their work cut out for them. But they have a blast doing it and laugh as hard as the spectators.

In one girls game I witnessed, the coach lined each player up at her position and gave last-second instructions as to what her particular job on the field was. It was the in-one-ear-and-out-the-other pep talk. Instinct and panic soon take over.

One of the players, dressed in oversized white Puma shorts, playing in her first official game ever, lined up facing her own net. She had become so used to taking shots on the Little Mermaids' goalie during practice, it only made sense to do the same on game day.

(Did I mention that the teams have cute little names like the Mighty Ducks, Mighty Morphins, Power Rangers, Little Mermaids and the Jets?)

She waved to the half-dozen relatives who tried fruitlessly to get her to turn the other way. It wasn't until the coach went back on the field and literally moved her 180 degrees so that she got her first look at the competition that life was good again.

There were some unforgettable events as well.

Two rookie players situated in the defensive end closest to the goaltender, stood straight as arrows on the white line just outside the goal box. When the game started, they continued to stand at perfect attention.

Without warning an opposing player broke free from the small herd kicking furiously at the ball, and found herself heading towards the stoic defenders.

I don't know who was more surprised when the two defenders let the player move in, unscathed, for a breakaway shot on the goaltender.

As hysterical as the play was — remember, these are 5 and 6 year olds — the girls did do what the coach had told them. They stood on the white line. Only problem was, they weren't fully aware they could move about in the general area. Instead, it looked as though they were standing guard outside Buckingham Palace.

Save for the two girls on defense, it was a free for all once the game began. Players bolted from their positions and went straight for the ball. Once one of them assumed possession, there was no one to pass it off to. The herd just followed the ball.

Of course, some players were better than others. One scrappy spitfire on the Little Mermaids squad worked furiously in digging the ball out from the heap of players, quickly causing the less aggressive girls to think twice about fighting for the ball.

At first the girl tried to pass the ball to her fellow teammates. But when they had it stolen from them nearly every time, she was forced into the role of the team's one-girl wrecking machine. She stormed down the field every chance she could, banging out shot after desperate shot, hoping to give her team a chance at victory.

But as hard as she tried, Ariel's tired little legs couldn't accomplish the impossible mission.

She managed to get five shots on net, ruining the Jets' chance for a shutout. But the wunderkid with the oversized T-shirt couldn't do it all herself. When the referee blew the whistle for the final time, the Little Mermaids were on the losing end of the 10-1 score.

They were disappointed by the loss for about 15 seconds. The coach gave each of them their piece of post-game candy and they talked excitedly about how they were going to give the Mighty Ducks a whipping in the next game.

One girl walked away with her mother and father, holding her water bottle. "I wish today was Saturday again," she said.

Youth soccer. It's the best show in town. Catch it at a field near you.

Skippers so far, while netminder Catie Campbell has been nothing short of sensational between the posts.

Campbell came up with 15 saves on Monday before colliding with a pair of Scituate players going up to stop a shot. She landed hard on the ground, injuring her knee and leg. Campbell fainted moments later and was transported to the South Shore Hospital by EMT's.

Thankfully, Campbell is fine now with only a bad bruise on her thigh. On Wednesday morning O'Day-Clark said she'd be ready to play that afternoon at Carver, but expected the game to be cancelled. The team, she said, would hopefully be able to practice in the high school gym.

"I'm going to try for a practice — inside," O'Day-Clark said.

Other seniors include returning lettermen Jarrod Batts, Matt Conley, co-captain Kevin Duffy, Doug Sheerin, Eric Snow and Chad Whitman. Batts, Conley and Whitman figure to be formidable defensive players up front, while Duffy, Sheerin and Snow will provide punch from the defensive backfield. One newcomer to the team, senior Mike Kearney, is reported to be learning quickly and should also help solidify Cohasset's defense.

Another positive which Knurek pointed out was the very strong sophomore class. Fifteen deep, Knurek calls the sophomore class "motivated and, this year, they'll find out what it is to play in the South Shore League. Four or five will start on Friday night, so they'll find out in a hurry."

Asked for a prediction, Knurek said, "If we stay healthy, then we'll be competitive this year. If we can make the other South Shore teams play all four quarters, then we'll be successful."

When pressed about Hull coach Jon Anderson's bold statement that Hull had already faced their toughest opponent (Winthrop), Knurek paused, then said simply, "Time will tell.". Cohasset will face Hull in the season-closing Thanksgiving game.

First, however, the Skippers will tackle the Vikings of East Bridgewater on Friday night. The game will start at 7 p.m. under the lights and will be the first football game played on the new Cohasset Alumni Field.

Annual soccer pancake breakfast

This year's soccer fund-raiser will be held Sunday, Sept. 22, from 8 a.m. to noon, at the Deer Hill School. The boys and girls soccer teams look forward to seeing all youth players and their families at their major fund-raiser of the year. This year's proceeds will help pay for new varsity uniforms and warm-up suits as well as the break-up dinner and awards for the junior high, J.V., and varsity teams. Anyone interested in buying tickets call any junior high or high school soccer player. Please come and show your support for these fine athletes.

Tournament set to benefit ARC

South Shore ARC's ninth annual Lou Bailey Golf and Tennis Tournament will be held Monday, Sept. 30, at Cohasset Golf Club. The after-tournament schedule includes a social hour followed by an elegant gourmet dinner and sports enthusiasts' auction.

The entry fee for golf is $175 per player, which includes greens fees, golf cart, memento prizes, brunch and the dinner auction. A chance to win a 1997 Chevrolet Cavalier is being provided by corporate sponsor Chevrolet/Geo of Cohasset.

The entry fee for tennis is $85 per player and includes fruits and juices, prizes and the dinner auction. Tickets to the dinner auction are $50.

As parents and active members of South Shore ARC, Jean and Lou Bailey of Cohasset founded the event to help fund the agency's programs and to involve the community in the lives of individuals with developmental disabilities.

To order tickets, or for information about sponsorships, call South Shore ARC at 335-3023.

Executive decision will have an effect on finances

President Bill Clinton

Senator Bob Dole

By Elizabeth MacDonald
WORTH MAGAZINE

Which presidential candidate will do the most for your finances? That's what we wanted to know when we asked President Bill Clinton and Republican presidential candidate Bob Dole to answer a series of questions about their ideas to fatten voters' wallets.

Of course, the candidates are in sync on many financial issues.

YOUR MONEY'S WORTH

Mr. Clinton is for a $500 family credit; Mr. Dole is, too. Mr. Clinton wants small business relief; so does Mr. Dole. Mr. Clinton wants expanded IRAs as a hedge against potential financial catastrophes; Mr. Dole likes the sound of that, too.

Middle class tax breaks

Rather opportunistically, both Clinton and Dole now dabble with the electoral bribery of a middle class tax break. Both want a $500-per-child tax credit. Never mind that this proposal ironically gives parents a break that their children will inherit in the form of higher deficits later on.

Strangely, Clinton's credit amounts to just $300 in the first two years, and moves to $500 in the third. Families earning less than $75,000 get the credit, which stops when the child reaches age 13. Dole's credit starts at $250, and hits $500 in the second year. Couples earning up to $110,000 qualify, which cuts off when the child reaches college age, i.e., 18.

Both Clinton and Dole want to help parents with their education costs. "My balanced budget plan provides a $1,500 tax credit for the first two years of college," Clinton told us, as well as "a $10,000 tuition deduction for education."

Clinton's $42.9 billion proposal, which was already offered by House and Senate Democratic leaders in a bill introduced last June, comes with an interesting cosmetic twist. The way the deduction and credit works is, families earning up to $100,000 a year could choose either a single $10,000 deduction for the whole family, or a direct $1,500 tax credit for each eligible child. The deduction could be claimed in later years after the credit has been used.

Furthermore, Clinton's credit is "performance-based" — taxpayers can only take the credit for tuition in the second year if the student has at least a "B" average and no felony drug convictions. While a laudable goal, leaving the definition of "performance-based" up to bureaucrats would be an administrative nightmare.

Dole has a different take on education breaks. He wants to let low- and middle-income taxpayers deduct interest on student loans, plus he wants employers to give workers tax-free college tuition assistance. He would also let these parents plunk his annual $500-per-child credit into "education investment accounts," where earnings would accrue tax-free as long as the money sits there for at least five years.

The retiree safety net

It's clear from both Clinton and Dole that, for the first time ever, retirement savings will be a powerful campaign issue. Clinton told us he wants to help the "51 million working Americans who are not now covered by an employer-provided retirement plan."

First at bat: IRAs. Currently, deductible IRA amounts phase out depending on a taxpayer's income. Clinton would double those levels — for example, from $25,000 to $35,000 for singles, to $50,000 to $70,000. "Doubling the income limits will enable another 20 million families to make tax-deductible contributions," he told us.

Clinton also wants to let workers "take their retirement savings with them," which he says will help "the more than 5 million workers a year who change jobs and have an employer-provided pension."

Instead of letting more taxpayers qualify for IRAs, Dole says, "I support increasing the amount that individuals may contribute to their 401(k) plans and individual retirement accounts so that they can save more." Also, both Clinton and Dole want to let taxpayers make penalty-free withdrawals from their IRAs for education and job training, first home purchases, or costs incurred during long-term unemployment.

As the election picks up steam, remember this: All of these ideas could evanesce into the Oval Office air, no matter who sits down after the election. These proposals are but political siren songs. You can be lured by them, but you'll never get these breaks immediately, nor in one piece. Also, the constitutional power of the president is limited — he only has the bully pulpit and the veto.

Who should you watch? Firstly, Congress, which must perform radical surgery on a metastasizing $4 trillion federal budget deficit. Secondly, Federal Reserve chairman Alan Greenspan, whose policies will have more of an impact on the economy, and thus on voters' pocketbooks, than a president of either party. What Congress and Greenspan do is what counts.

They'll ask about student loans, education

Nearly two dozen South Shore high school students will join another 380 of their peers to pitch questions at U.S. Sen. John Kerry and Gov. William Weld, rivals for the U.S. Senate, during a Sept. 22 youth forum at the World Trade Center sponsored by Community Newspaper Company.

Like any good journalist, Meredith Hermance, 17, of Scituate, knows the best questions to ask a politician are the ones that affect ordinary people.

She said she is looking forward to the opportunity to grill the candidates on issues like education and college loans "that personally concern people my age.

She is one of three Scituate High School seniors who will attend the debate. She was recently named editor of the school newspaper, The Scituation.

A field hockey right halfback, basketball forward and softball leftfielder for the Scituate Sailors, she has reported on those teams as a correspondent for the Scituate Mariner for the past three years.

Hingham High School senior Terrence "T.Q." Quigg spent this summer making phone calls and stuffing envelopes as an intern at Kerry's Boston campaign headquarters.

Wallace, who plans to major in political science in college, belongs to the National Honor Society, plays second base for the baseball team, covers sports for the school newspaper and is vice president of the Hingham High School Amnesty International Chapter.

He said he wants to ask both candidates what they will do to deal with cost-cutting and overcrowding in public schools and how they will work to improve schools in general.

He also hopes to delve into the candidates' political record and ask each one to disclose his biggest political foible and how he worked to correct it.

Both the Weld and Kerry campaigns said they welcome the opportunity to address young voters and future voters.

Weld, a Republican, and Kerry, a Democrat, have met in five debates and have three more scheduled — not including this forum — before the Nov. 5 presidential election.

"We're delighted at the response to our youth forum and the unique opportunity it offers high school students to get a bit more up close and personal with the candidates," said Asa Cole, acting editor-in-chief of CNC.

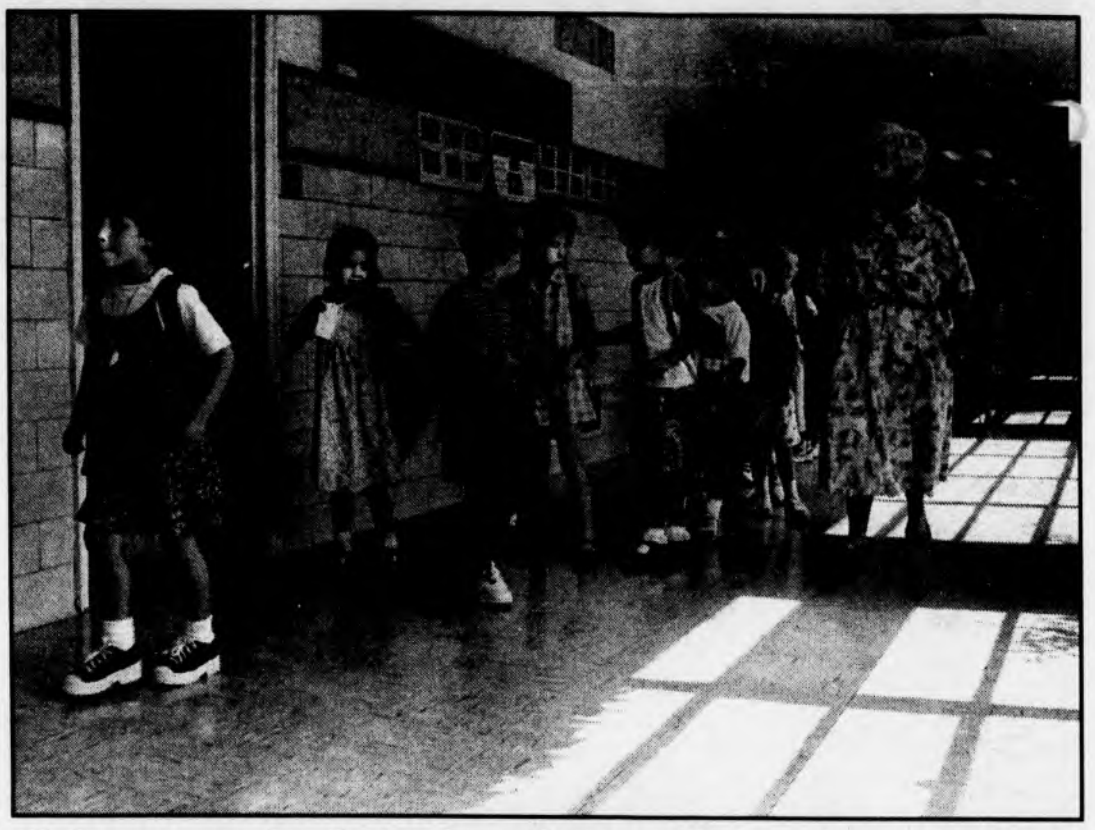
"It is important that both Kerry and Weld hear the issues of importance to the youth of today."

Publisher Cole, director of the event, added, "We've been working to make this happen since March, and my hope is by Sunday night, Sept. 22, both the students and candidates look back on this as a real educational experience."

The invitation-only forum is scheduled to start at 2 p.m. in the World Trade Center's amphitheater. Veteran political reporter Janet Wu of WCVB-TV-Channel 5 will be the moderator.

To make this event a memorable one for the participants as well as the candidates, Time Warner Cable, media co-sponsor, has arranged to bring MTV's "Choose or Lose" touring bus to the World Trade Center as part of the music network's "Rock the Vote" political awareness and voter registration campaign.

The MTV bus, a studio on wheels equipped with video and audio equipment, serves as the MTV News' production unit. It will be open to the general public for inspection from 11:30 a.m. to 2 p.m.



Kindergarten teacher Marie Price walks her pupils down the corridor at Deer Hill School. Kindergarten was moved to Deer Hill this year to alleviate overcrowding at Osgood.

The bus is everything but conventional. Its exterior features the Choose or Lose logo peppered with more than 100 quotes from historical figures like Aristotle and Lyndon Johnson to musicians like Bob Dylan, Public Enemy and Nirvana. The MTV news cube rotates on the roof of the bus. The inside is equally as intricate, featuring jungle-patterned rugs, gold-framed windows and more than 20 bouncing metallic stars.

Boston radio station WJMN-FM, JAM'N 94.5, will do live remote broadcasts from the World Trade Center, next to the MTV bus, and CNC will sponsor a voter registration booth.

The audience will also participate in a survey after the forum to be conducted by Feedback Marketing Services Corp. of Wellesley. Results of the survey will be published in CNC publications.

CNC also is creating an Internet site — titled "Vote '96" — which will allow computer users to get information on the candidates, the issues and the campaign, and to follow the coverage in CNC newspapers.

Fidelity Investments, the largest mutual fund company in the state, is the parent company of Community Newspaper Company.

REAL ESTATE UPDATE

TWO PLUS TWO EQUALS FIVE

QUESTION: I have a choice of buying two duplexes or a four-unit apartment house. Which makes more sense if the sales price and income are the same?

ANSWER: You will be better off financially with the most number of units in a building that you can afford rather than two separate buildings of half the number of units. The economic reasons are obvious. One lot, one tax bill, one oil tank, one boiler, one basic plumbing system and electrical system. The cost per unit decreases in direct proportion to the number of units. The greatest number of units you can get for your money, the better off you will be financially.

Canister washes up on shore

The Navy was summoned to Cohasset Saturday to dispose of a potentially dangerous canister that washed up on Black Rock Beach that afternoon.

Det. Rick Grassie said a bomb disposal specialist from the U.S. Naval station in Newport, Rhode Island was called in after the canister, marked with warnings to call the police or military if found, was discovered about 4:15 p.m., Sept. 15. The Hull and Cohasset fire departments, Cohasset police and the U.S. Coast Guard from the station at Point Allerton went down to the site. The canister was secured and brought to the police station, Grassie said.

Grassie said the 4 in. by 1-1/2 ft. canister contained phosphorus which the Navy uses to light up an area for activities such as beach landings.

The canister was "beaten up and corroded" and could have gone off any time posing a severe safety hazard, Grassie said.

Lt. Jim Beene, who is with the explosive ordnance disposal mobile unit 2 detachment at Newport, put the canister in a steel case filled with sand and water.

Beene explained the canister, which had apparently misfired, was a marine location marker commonly used by the Coast Guard and Navy. When the canister is activated, the discharged phosphorus ignites with a resulting pillar of smoke used by aircraft as a locator.

Beene said the device is so common that the Navy will not try to trace where it came from. But he warned that anyone who finds "anything that remotely looks like ordnance to get hold of the police."

Traffic control beefed up

Police Chief Brian Noonan warned drivers this week that police traffic control has been increased now that school is underway.

"We've stepped up radar especially along the bus routes," Noonan said.

He said citizens have notified police and asked for increased enforcement.

"We intend to do that," Noonan said.

Public Notice

DEPARTMENT OF ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION
WATERWAYS REGULATION PROGRAM
Notice of License Application pursuant to M.G.L. Chapter 91
Waterways License Application
No. W96-5218
Doris Flint

Notification Date: September 27, 1996

Public Notice is hereby given of the application by Doris Flint to maintain a wall & pier at 99 Border Street, in the Municipality of Cohasset, in and over the waters of the Gulf River. The proposed uses of the structure(s) and/or fill are to provide shoreline stabilization for the protection of existing structures and noncommercial docking and boating access to navigable waters and is a water-dependent use project.

The Department will consider all written comments submitted thirty (30) days subsequent to the "Notification Date" in order to decide whether to grant authorization for the proposed activity pursuant to G.L. Chapter 91. A public hearing may be held upon request by the Municipal Official. Furthermore, a municipality, ten citizen group or any aggrieved person that has submitted written comments may also petition to intervene to become a party before the close of the comment period. Failure to submit such petition will result in the waiver of any right to an adjudicatory hearing. Further information regarding this application may be obtained by contacting the Division at (617) 292-5695. Plans and documents for this application are on file with the Department for public viewing, by appointment only, at the address below. Written comments must be submitted to: John A. Simpson, Program Chief, DEP/ Waterways Regulation Program, One Winter Street, 8th Floor, Boston, MA 02108.

Walk to benefit animals

Standish Humane Society will hold its second annual Benefit Walk for Animals at Wompatuck State Park, Hingham, Sunday, Sept. 22, from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. The three-mile walk is on a paved, handicapped accessible route through a beautiful state forest. Funds raised by walkers will help Standish reduce the tragedy of pet over-population through an active adoption and reduced-cost spay/neuter program.

The day-long event, whose primary sponsor is Iams, will feature dog training and grooming demonstrations, animal tattoo clinic, rescue group exhibitions and free T-shirts for every registration donation of $30 or more. Prizes will be awarded to the top three fund-raisers.

Free pet food samples, hourly drawings, a police dog unit, children's activities and refreshments will all be part of the fun.

For registration information, call (617) 834-4663.

Appalachian Service Project to meet

The Cohasset/Appalachia Service Project, in its 10th year, has grown from a membership of seven teenagers and two adult volunteers in the summer of 1988 to a total of 84 volunteers, who traveled to West Virginia this summer.

Project organizers have planned an information and early registration meeting for Sunday, Sept. 22, at 7:30 p.m. at Second Congregational Church. Any parent or senior high youth in the 10th to 12th grade who has an interest in the project is encouraged to attend, as spaces fill very quickly. (There has been a waiting list for the past four years.)

Any parent and their interest 9th grader may attend, and their name will be placed on the waiting list to fill any vacancies which may occur before May 1, 1997. The ASP 1997 trip is tentatively planned for June 28 to July 6, 1997, with fund raisers and meetings scheduled throughout the year.

Walk for MS set for Sept. 21

The Boston Herald, Channel 7 News and The River 92.5 FM have joined forces to help the National Multiple Sclerosis Society promote Oceanside Bike Fest '96, scheduled for Saturday, Sept. 21. Corporate sponsor Plymouth Savings Bank is underwriting the expenses of the tour.

Oceanside Bike Fest is a one-day bike tour beginning in Duxbury and taking cyclists along the rocky shore of Scituate, Cohasset and through the area's forests and parks. There are routes designed for all levels of riders, ranging from 25-, 50- and 100-mile trips.

Funds raised will held the Massachusetts chapter of the national society continue to provide a wide range of comprehensive services to approximately 7,000 families in the state living with MS.

For more information about the event, call the MS Society at (508) 291-2169.

Community Garden Club program slated

The Community Garden Club of Cohasset will hold its monthly meeting Tuesday, Sept. 24, at Walton Rodgers Hall at St. Stephen's Church. Coffee will be served at 9 a.m., followed by the meeting at 9:30 a.m.

The program will feature Pauline Bowden, who will demonstrate how to make arrangements using richly colored native plants, fruits, flowers, berries and dried materials of the season.

Farmers Market events planned

"Two for the Show," featuring Jake Kensinger and Ellen Schmidt, will be featured at Cohasset Farmers Market Thursday, Sept. 19, from 4 to 6 p.m. The acoustic singer/songwriter duo host the open mike series at the Colonial Inn in Concord, and both play guitar. Schmidt adds bass to the mix, with the duo performing original songs and other traditional folk music.

The Farmers Market will move to South Main Street in Cohasset Village Sept. 26 for a Fall Harvest Festival. South Main Street will be closed to make room for the Farmers Market and other activities for families.

The festivities will include live folk music from 3 to 7 p.m., storytelling by well-known artist Diane Edgecomb (3:30 and 4:45 p.m.), face painting, clowns, balloons, pony rides, hair braiding and children's painting by students at South Shore Art Center.

DOVE services discussed

Michelle Kahan, executive director of DOVE (Domestic Violence Ended), will speak at a meeting of South Shore and Coastline Councils for Children Tuesday, Sept. 24, at 7:30 p.m. at East Milton Congregational Church, 610 Adams St.

Kahan will describe DOVE's services for children and teens, including a dating violence prevention program, and other services offered by the organization. There will be a discussion about what community needs are in relation to violence prevention. There is no charge. For more information, call 749-0691.

Scouts join International Coast Sweep

As part of International Coast Sweep, Scouts from Troop 28 collected 13 large bags of trash, the remains of lobster pots, washed up moorings and other debris from Bassings Beach in Cohasset Harbor Friday and Saturday, Sept. 6 and 7. The clean-up program was sponsored by the Massachusetts Office of Coastal Zone Management which included similar projects throughout the state. Bassings Beach is accessible only by boat from Cohasset and is a popular landing for area boaters.

The Scouts, who spent the night on Bassings Beach as part of the event, included Mark Chapman, Matt Davis, Alex Dedes, Andrew Dennis, Johnny Dwyer, Scott Faber, John Friedman, Rob Lehr, Justin Maitland, Willie McArthur, Jody Roach and Alex Schmidt. The supervising adults were Scoutmaster Phil Lehr, Bob Dennis and Wayne Schmidt. There was time for some fun amidst all the work as Scouts enjoyed waterskiing, kneeboarding and fishing. John Bryant and Jeff Northnagel gave sailboat lessons.

Scoutmaster Lehr said, "Combining outdoor activities with this kind of community service helps develop an appreciation of the environment. Scouts learn the importance of maintaining the quality of natural areas in order to protect recreational benefits."

Registry riles school chief

Seeks bus flap investigation

By MARY FORD
Cohasset Mariner

Still reeling from state Registry of Motor Vehicle claims that Cohasset School buses were unsafe — the school department took off the gloves this week to fight back by asking local legislators and the governor to launch an investigation into the embarrassing episode.

For more than a week, an embattled school superintendent fielded questions by reporters from local and regional newspapers and television stations armed with registry ammunition charging that a myriad of safety violations ranging from flammable tape to oil leaks had sidelined the town's school bus fleet.

Apparently seeking to stage a media event, two state troopers and four registry officials held off starting the re-inspection of the six buses, which encircled the high school parking lot, last Friday morning until the news media arrived. A cameraman and reporter from Channel 56 equipped the troopers with microphones to record their comments during the filming of the inspec-

Sweeping septic management program possible

Towns' tactics differ on Title V financial aid

By ALICE C. COYLE
Cohasset Mariner

Cohasset and Hingham may share a town line, but when it comes to grappling with tough Title V regulations and finding septic solutions for residents, no two communities could be further apart.

While Hingham's health board favors adopting financing plans that come with the fewest strings attached for the town, target known system failures and put the least burden on homeowners — Cohasset is aggressively seeking as much financial assistance as possible and is willing to take on the most comprehensive environmental protection plan.

These programs, which could involve annual septic system inspections, even for residents with no plans to renovate or sell their homes, will assuredly bring more failing systems to light and more expense for homeowners.

"We're trying to help homeowners out as much as possible, but some people may never get inspected if there is no sale or renovation. These laws are designed to protect the environment and water supplies," said Cohasset Health Agent Dr. Joseph Godzik. "I'm looking at it from and environmental protection stand point."

While some state loan programs, designed to help towns grapple with Title V regulations, have excluded affluent or partially sewered communities like Cohasset and Hingham from participating, two recent programs — one of them still in the planning stages — could offer some long awaited relief for many residents.

Cohasset is currently pursuing the $30 million financing program included in this year's Open Space Bill and administered through the Department of Environmental Protection (DEP), the Executive Office of Administration and Finance (EOAF) and the Treasurer's Office in conjunction with legislators, bankers and real estate brokers. While a portion of the funding is earmarked to assist those residents facing imminent sewer connections and tie-ins, the majority is available to communities willing to take a more comprehensive approach to septic systems management.

Under this betterment program, towns borrow money from the state on the homeowners' behalf, receiving a lower than market interest rate — (5 percent or less) — and pass the funding onto residents based on need or the condition of the septic system and extent of repairs necessary. The homeowners then pay the loan back to the town over a period of up to 20 years, possibly through their tax bills.

By adopting a comprehensive community septic management program to address on-site disposal failure in areas of high environmental concern, Godzik said Cohasset will be eligible for a $20,000 grant to assist the town in identifying priority areas and develop a management plan, and at least $200,000 in loans for septic sys-

Proposed subdivision draws a crowd

Jerusalem Road estates plans presented again

By JASON BOUFFARD
Cohasset Mariner

Neighbors of the proposed Jerusalem Road Estates will have to endure a lengthy process before the town's planning board decides the fate of their neighborhood.

The board met at Town Hall on Sept. 18 before a group of 35 to 40 concerned citizens to discuss the pros and cons of the proposed development which would replace the existing Curtis Estate woods and wetlands with a 45-acre, 28 lot housing complex.

Attorney Charles Humphreys, along with developer Steve Corey, Civil Engineer Robert Hannigan, and Environmental Specialist Dr. Jerome Carr, defended the "definitive plan" for the development.

While the preliminary plan was rejected last year, the current version contains several changes which address the planning board's concerns of last spring.

Among those changes are an improved drainage plan which will allow water to run away from houses and a decreased road pitch.

Planning board officials were concerned about an 8.5 percent grade on a roadway within the development, but the modified proposal reduced the grade to meet a 6 percent limit.

Humphreys also commented on the sewer commission's refusal to allow 28 new houses to hook up to existing sewer lines, due to inadequate pipe capacity.

"We do believe there is adequate capacity,"

Cohasset's Week

Paint recycling Saturday

Selectmen Chairman Merle Brown announced that paint recycling for latex and oil-base paint only is from 9 a.m. to noon Saturday at the RTF.

Dump office is sought

Voters at October's special town meeting may be asked to authorize spending $7,500 to construct an office at the RTF near the pit so dump personnel can keep an eye on things. The existing administrative building could be used for more storage and recycling, town officials said this week.

Selectman Michael H. Sullivan said he has concerns about constructing an office near where people dump their trash. He said that area is already crowded.

"To have people walk into where people are backing into is a concern," he said. "It's a direct conflict with the flow that exists today.

"I think it would be dangerous."

The topic came up during a discussion of DPW articles for the special town meeting warrant. Selectmen are in the process of recommending articles.

Selectmen Chairman Merle Brown strongly endorses the new office. Selectman Nan Roth said she could support the office but has reservations and needs help imagining what it would look like. Roth also suggested "thinking creatively" and perhaps heating the office with compost.

Brown noted that recycled oil could be used to heat it.

Tides at all ports from Annisquam to Wellfleet are within 10 minutes of the above.

Selectman Ronnie McMorris said she was in favor of recommending the article to special town meeting. She noted that by that time, there would be a sketch of the building and the safety issues could be worked out.

DPW sanders requested

The Dept. of Public Works will ask October's special town meeting to purchase two, new stainless steel sanders for existing trucks.

DPW Supt. Harold Litchfield said the small sander will cost $6,121 and the larger one will cost about $18,000 which includes the spreader and hydraulic lift.

The town has a total of four spreaders.

"We went out 93 times last year," Litchfield said.

Private way resurfacing

Voters will be asked to appropriate $50,000 at the October special town meeting to resurface private ways in town. DPW Supt. Harold Litchfield noted that many of the streets are in dire need of attention.

Part of the money could be used to blast an outcropping of ledge on Lamberts Lane so that road could be straightened. Residents who live along the narrow, winding street asked selectmen last week to take some immediate measures to make the street safer.

Cohasset's Week

Fire radios are topic

Selectmen could not reach a consensus this week on recommending to special town meeting whether or not to spend $12,000 on 12 new portable, hand-held radios for the fire department.

Fire Chief Roger Lincoln said he considered a portable radio to be an important part of each firefighter's protective gear so he or she could communicate with other members of the department at all times. He said there are not enough radios for the 22-member department which currently has ten radios.

Selectman Michael H. Sullivan questioned why that many new radios were needed and suggested that if each truck had two radios then firefighters could share them.

Selectman Ronnie McMorris said it was not the selectmen's role to second guess the fire chief.

"The chief is in the best position to determine what he needs for the safety of his firefighters," she said.

Selectman Nan Roth also wondered if the department could get by with fewer radios because all the firefighters would not be on duty or fighting a fire at the same time.

When questioned about the cost, Lincoln explained that at $1,000 each, the price was the best the department could get.

Wadsworth is named to public ways group

Town archivist David Wadsworth, 14A Summer St., in the newest member of the town committee to study private ways in town.

Selectmen named Wadsworth, who is senior curator at the Cohasset Historical Society, to the group this week because of his knowledge of town history.

Selectmen were also impressed with Diane E. Benson's background. Benson, 172 Forest Ave., also expressed interest in the private ways post. Selectmen said they would invite her to participate on another board.

Pooler appointed to computer study board

The town's assistant assessor/appraiser Cheryl Pooler was appointed this week to the computer study committee. Pooler replaces former town treasurer/collector Betty Ripley on that board.

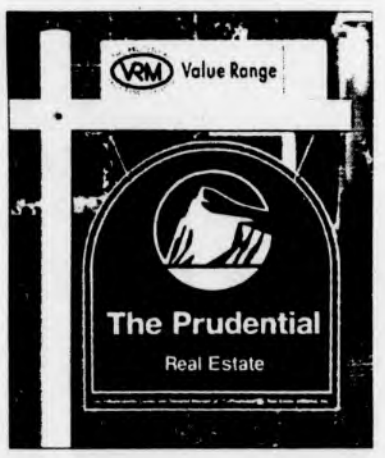
Introducing Value Range Marketing

When it comes to getting your house sold fast, it runs circles around fixed-price listings.

You want your house sold fast. And at the right price. That's why you should talk to us about a revolutionary, yet proven program called Value Range Marketing. Wherever it's been introduced, VRM-listed houses are selling at least twice as fast as the market average. And many VRM-listed houses have sold for more than the owner expected.



The exclusive Prudential VRM Wheel puts a whole new spin on selling your house.

Instead of listing your house the old way at a fixed price, you use The VRM Wheel to select a value range in which you "will entertain offers." This lets you attract more qualified buyers within the value range. And it gives them a comfortable basis to open negotiations. To find out how to put this powerful new tool to work for you, circle our phone number and call today.

Registry riles Cohasset school chief

tion. One registry official said the Fox television network was also expected, although no one from that station showed up.

Exasperated, school Supt. Stephen Hart defended his department's bus maintenance history. He asked registry officials and the troopers at the scene why the media was notified about Friday's inspection and he couldn't get anyone at the registry to return his numerous telephone calls, the times and dates of which he documented.

The troopers, who said Cohasset's fleet passed inspection Friday and could go back on the road, said they had not received any messages from Hart.

Monday, School Committee Chairman Ralph Kidder told selectmen that while no one disagrees with a tough inspection standard — the school board questioned the motivation behind it. He noted that registry inspectors showed up in September after school started and publicly "lambasted the town" as being cheap.

Selectmen agreed that the town had been treated "terribly," as characterized by Selectman Nan Roth, and support the school board's request for an investigation.

While the buses were sidelined for more than a week, the town borrowed two buses from Scituate and rented three from Norwell-based North River Transportation at $170 a day each for a total cost of about $3,500.

The apparent crux of the problem between the registry and town surrounds allegations that state troopers assigned to the registry made remarks on several occasions to the effect that Cohasset is a rich town and therefore should have new buses. Hart said he has heard as much and that was corroborated by Leland Jenkins, a member of the advisory board.

Jenkins, 198 Jerusalem Rd., said he heard a trooper during an inspection a year ago question why the town didn't have all new buses when his town did.

Four of the town's six buses are are either nine or ten years old. School officials apparently believe the registry played hard ball with the town during the Sept. 12 inspection because of the age of the fleet and affluence of the community.

Trooper Paul Van Schaick and Sgt. Wayne Cameron, who were on hand Friday, flatly denied ever making any statements regarding whether or not the town should replace its buses with newer models.

Cameron said the troopers' main concern is the safety of the children.

"We're not in the bus business whatsoever," he said.

Further inflaming the issue were remarks made in telephone interviews to the various media by the registry spokesman Aubrey Hazner. Hazner said it was "pathetic" to put children in Cohasset buses and charged the town clearly does not care about the safety of its children.

The ensuing brouhaha prompted the school board's request for an investigation and a letter home from Hart to parents allaying any fears they may have about the safety of school buses in town (for text of letter and statement, see page 10).

"Representatives of the registry said the town of Cohasset does not care for the safety of its children because of the condition of the buses," Hart said. He said that flies in the face of the $10,000 spent on maintenance getting the buses ready for the recent inspection and $26,000 spent last year on bus maintenance.

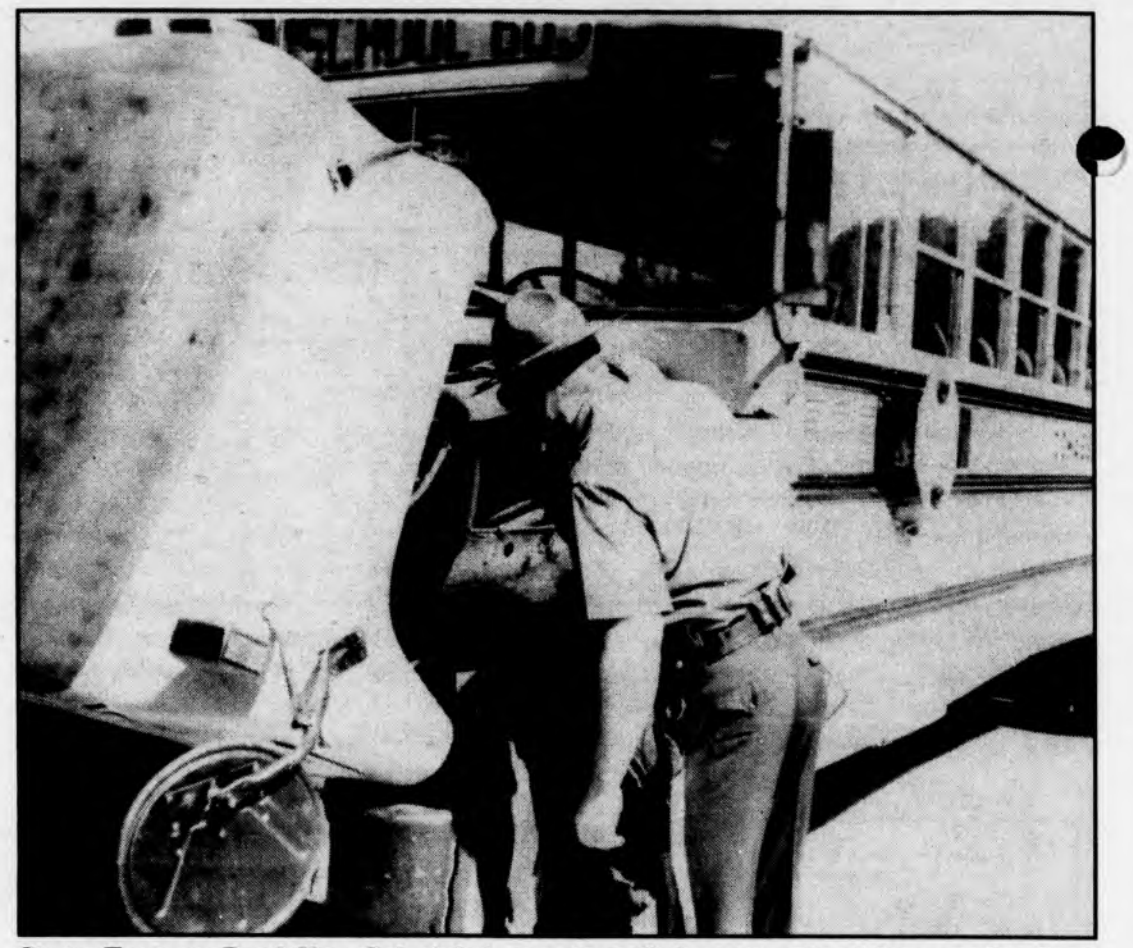
"That (comment about lack of caring about safety) I cannot stand for," Hart said. He disputed that any of the violations were major noting as an example, that not one of the 36 tires on the buses needed to be replaced.

Hart said with three inspections a year, there are bound to be things uncovered that need fixing but this was the first time in his 25 years associated with Cohasset — that the inspection reached this extent.

Hazner said Tuesday he stood behind his remarks.

"These were serious violations, I can't emphasize that enough," he said. "If I owe the superintendent a personal apology, then I apologize.

"But the simple fact is the buses were not maintained. The superintendent keeps trying to minimize the situation and blame the messenger and that's wrong," Hazner said. "The buses have now passed inspection and that's the end of the story, but Mr. Hart wants to go on with that."



State Trooper Paul Van Schaick inspects a Cohasset school bus engine last Friday.

Staff photo/Mary Ford

The school department was not the only one on the defensive at Friday's inspection. The troopers said they felt the media had treated them unfairly.

"I feel the media coverage we received was not fair," Cameron said. He explained the buses were not flunked due to gum wrappers and valve stem covers, as reported, but due to loose hand rails, faulty windshield wipers, lights being out, low beams out, and leaking oil among other violations.

He said these were not trivial failures but serious infractions that needed to be corrected.

Val Schaick said just one safety violation was enough to flunk a bus.

"The facts speak for themselves," he said. "And they lead me to believe there's a lack of concern for safety."

Hart, who now has a copy of the registry regulations, points out that many of the violations cited in the September inspection were not enough to take a bus off the road.

But Hart said the school department would make every effort to ensure buses are in the condition where registry officials "feel comfortable in passing them."

In a related matter, the school committee will discuss plans to ask next month's special town meeting for money to buy possibly four new school buses at its Oct. 3 meeting which gets underway at 7:30 p.m., in Room 10 at the high school.

Sweeping septic management program possible

tem repairs and upgrades. Cohasset must apply for the loan program by Sept. 30.

With a third of the town's 1,500 septic systems failed or failing, and average repair and upgrade costs running homeowners about $20,000, Godzik said $200,000 is just a drop in the bucket, and he hopes to get much more if possible.

In order to do so, Godzik said the town will hire a consultant to develop a septic management plan which will include a new system for inspections. Every home in town with a septic system will be put on a priority list for inspections with those closest to environmentally sensitive areas inspected more frequently. How frequently inspections take place will be decided in the plan, Godzik said.

While concerns have been raised about the cost of septic system inspections to homeowners, Godzik said after the initial inspection when most of the pertinent data is compiled, subsequent inspections are less expensive.

To handle the work load involved with the comprehensive septic management plan Godzik said the board of health would have to hire more staff or contract the work out.

But at this point, Godzik said most of the program's details have yet to be worked out.

Godzik will also be keeping an eye out for a new Title V loan program that state Senator Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, has been toiling over.

Also administered through DEP and EOAF and available through a surplus in the state Deficiency Budget, is $13 million in guaranteed homeowner loans at low interest rates and in some cases interest free.

According to Joseph Calanan, a legislative aid in Hedlund's office the new program would allow homeowners borrow up to $25,000 directly from the state and pay it back over a 20-year period.

Homeowners with an annual income of $22,000 or less are eligible for no interest loans; those with an income between $22,000 and $55,000 qualify for five percent interest rate; those with incomes between $55,000 and $110,000 qualify for an eight percent interest rate and those with an annual income of more than $110,000 would get the market interest rate, Calanan said.

There is also a provision for a zero percent "time of transfer loan," which applies to homeowners who expect to sell their house within a year and plan to repay the loan in full. Still being worked out is how those short-term loans can be rolled over if the sale falls through or takes more than a year to complete, Calanan said.

Open to any homeowner, Calanan said this program is especially good for newer homeowners trying to sell or renovate and faced with costly upgrades but who have little or no equity in their homes.

"There is no equity test in order to get this loan," Calanan said.

Information on this and several other state loan programs will be made available to South Shore homeowners at a Title V briefing in Scituate slated for October, Calanan said.

Mr. Donald Mason and the committee for The Cohasset Assemblies announce that the classes will start on Tuesday, October 1, 1996. Formerly directed by Mr. & Mrs. John Nott, the assemblies are a series of dance classes for fifth and sixth grades. They are designed to introduce youngsters to the basics of social dance and etiquette. The classes also include contemporary dances, party dances and dance games with prizes which make the Assemblies a fun way for children to learn and practice social skills with their peers.

All classes are on Tuesdays. Grade Five meets from 4:15 - 5:15pm, and Grade Six from 5:30 - 6:30pm.

For further information or to pre-register by phone please call Donald Mason: 617-734-3447 or a Committee member: Patricia Leahy, Chairperson: 383-1005; Moira Ann Stansel, Fifth Grade Boys: 383-1029; Lisa Koed, Fifth Grade Girls: 383-6641; Rhonda Corey Myers, Sixth Grade Boys: 383-2969; and Elaine Coyne, Sixth Grade Girls: 383-2167.

Proposed subdivision draws crowd

Humphreys said. "The board has decided which taxpayers are going to get sewer hook-up and which are not. It is our position that the board cannot do that. If there is adequate capacity, the board must approve [the development]."

Board Chairman Al Moore said that the sewer issue would likely be settled before a judge.

Humphreys also asserted that the land would be developed eventually, even if the Jerusalem Road Estate development never attained approval. He pointed out that the land could be used for low-income housing.

Humphreys was followed by Carr, who offered an explanation of the development's potential impact on the environment.

While many residents expressed concern about the displacement of wildlife in lieu of the housing complex, Carr said that the area has little environmental value.

Using a wildlife value scale of 3 to 8, with 3 being the lowest possible score, most areas within the site received a value lower than 4.5. Only Rattlesnake Run, a wetland area, scored over 5.

Carr went on to point out several problems which the updated proposal addresses, including sanitary sewer hook-ups and erosion and flood control.

Throughout the hearing, much of the crowd made its lack of support for the project known. That sentiment was magnified when the floor was opened for comments.

Many residents near or abutting the site expressed concerns about the increase in traffic that would result from an additional 28 families.

One neighbor talked about inadequate sidewalks along the streets that surround the site, and said that should the development proceed, this would compound safety concerns for children who wait along area roads for school buses.

Others expressed concerns regarding flooding and the potential displacement of wildlife, including deer, foxes and coyotes.

One man pointed out that current plans would leave a 12' cliff along his driveway, due to alterations in terrain necessary for proper drainage.

Although solutions were offered for most issues, Town Civil engineer consultant John Modzelewski and board member Robert Sturdy were concerned that many of the proposed solutions were not reflected in the submitted proposal.

Sturdy stressed the importance of including these solutions, since agreements not contained within the proposal would be impossible to enforce.

"We would be shadow boxing if we expected a consultant to review something that hasn't been formally submitted yet," Modzelewski said.

Many in attendance showed interest in meeting one-on-one with Humphreys and others affiliated with the development in order to discuss the actual impact on neighboring individuals in more detail.

Humphreys and Corey both agreed about the need for such meetings.

"We still have some very serious issues to grapple with," Moore said. "We'll have to deal with the sewer issue, as well as the traffic, road grades, and drainage. This is the start of a long road."

Sturdy cautioned those in attendance that following the issue to its conclusion is crucial.

"There may be minor changes to the proposal, and there may be major changes. This plan may not even be close to the final plan. Don't walk away thinking that this is the way it's going to be," he said.

The next hearing for the Jerusalem Road Estate proposal is scheduled for Oct. 16 at 8:30 p.m. at Town Hall.

Open space plan backed

Selectmen enthusiastically agreed to write a letter of support of the town's draft open space plan which must be submitted to the state by Sept. 30.

The plan will set the stage for the town to qualify for grants for open space purposes including the purchase of Turkey Hill on the Hingham/Cohasset line near Whitney Woods.

Susan Cope of the open space committee explained the draft plan encompasses a wide range of open space issues so that in future years the town can apply for grants that fit its needs.

Hope all of you took the time to read the brochure sent out by South Shore Art Center. What a variety they planned for this fall! No matter what your age, from 4 and up, there is something there for you, and we think they do an admirable job. Hope all took advantage of the courses!

Eight-year-old Nick Infusino caught his first striper, right in Cohasset Harbor. Not many 8-year-olds have this claim to fame. He should be really proud of himself. We congratulate him, too!

Let's hear it this week for Kristin Lee Niessink, daughter of Deborah and Jan Niessink of Cohasset, on being named to the Dean's List for the spring semester at St. Michael's College in Colchester, Vt.

Kristin is a sophomore majoring in biology.

The Cohasset Amateur Gardeners held their most recent meeting Tuesday, Sept. 17 at 68 Summer St. Members enjoyed a demonstration on making faux-cement pots and a presentation of this year's activities. Anyone who would like to find out more about the Amateur Garden Club, should call Merle at 383-9324.

Creating An Environment For Change

A clean and healthful environment is critical not only to our quality of life but also to the financial well-being of the Plymouth & Norfolk District. After all, we are a coalition of coastal communities, blessed with outstanding resources.

Whether it's monitoring progress in cleaning up our rivers, making sure the MWRA's new sewage outfall performs as promised, fighting for imperiled federal funding for Superfund toxic-waste cleanup, or even a goal as basic as clearing debris from Abigail Adams State Park, you can be sure I will always stand for environmental protection.

And won't that be a breath of fresh air in the State Senate?

Obituaries

William Lee Kleinz Jr., 83, of Cohasset, owner of William L. Kleinz Co. Inc. of Boston and Cohasset, a wool firm, died Sept. 14 at South Shore Hospital, Weymouth.

Born in Chicago, he was a graduate of Lake Forest College, Lake Forest, Ill., and was a resident of Cohasset for 40 years.

Mr. Kleinz began working in the wool business with Armour and Co. in Chicago, an industry he worked in for 57 years. After moving to Boston, he worked for the Smith Co. and Winslow Bros., both located in Boston, and Kriglinger and Co. of Belgium, with Boston offices.

He was also active with Peterson Realty in Cohasset.

Mr. Kleinz was a Navy veteran of World War II, serving two years as a lieutenant in both the Pacific and Atlantic theaters.

Mr. Kleinz was the husband of the late Katherine (Shield) Kleinz and leaves a daughter, Jacqueline M. Kleinz-Van Aarle of Boston; a brother, John Kleinz of Phoenix, Az.; and a sister, Susan Gehrig of Alexandria, Va. He was the father of the late William Lee Kleinz III.

A funeral service was held Sept. 18 in McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home. Burial was in Blue Hill Cemetery, Braintree.

Donations in his memory may be made to the American Cancer Society, 20 Speen St., Framingham 01701.

A day of health and insight for women

South Shore Hospital's Women's and Family Health Education will host "Time for Ourselves, A Day of Health & Insight for Women" Saturday, Oct. 26, from 7:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. at United Church of Christ, 460 Main St. (Route 123),Norwell.

At 8:30 a.m., keynote speaker Judy Norsigian, author of "Our Bodies, Ourselves" and"The New Our Bodies, Ourselves" will share her thoughts, concerns and wisdom about women and women's health care in the '90s and beyond.

Workshops on stress reduction, mothering, aging and caretaking, fertility, cosmetic surgery, staying healthy and nutrition will be available during two 75-minute sessions. A registration fee of $45 includes a continental breakfast, keynote address, lunch, choice of three workshops, health screenings and door prizes. Mammograms will be provided throughout the day. For an appointment, call 340-8239.

Cohasset resident Barbara Green, PhD, will moderate a session entitled "Ourselves — Our Strengths and Power." Jane Lanzillotti, MS, RD, also of Cohasset, will provide guidelines for healthy eating in "Ourselves and Food" and provide information about new diet pills and other fads.

The registration fee after Oct. 15 is $50. Registration forms are available at South Shore Hospital's front desk; South Shore Community Center, Cohasset; Silver Spoon Cafe and Buttonwood Books in Cohasset; United Church of Christ, Norwell; and Octavia's Gifts, Pembroke.

Call 340-8554 to register or for further information about the event.

Midlife career transitions

The Social Service League of Cohasset will sponsor a meeting Tuesday, Oct. 22, from 7:30 to 9 p.m., offering the opportunity to hear a panel of experts discuss the practical, financial and psychological aspects of the job market for those at midlife. Competing personal responsibilities outside of work which impact the process will also be addressed.

Included in the discussion will be career re-engineering for the millennium; condensing life experiences onto a resumé; finding hidden financial resources; jobs in an improving job market; second careers; and relocation.

Panelists will be Employment Specialist Michelle Sweeney, JVS, skills training program; Steve Etkind, EdD, vice president, Private Health Care Systems and Cohasset Counseling Associates; and Nancy Socoli, director of education, Consumer Credit Counseling Services.

The meeting will take place at the Lightkeepers Residence, 96 Border St., Cohasset Harbor. There is no charge, but seating is limited. To register or to obtain directions, call 383-0771.

No-win situation

Let's face it, an affluent town that has its entire aging school bus fleet sidelined in the second week of the school year by four state troopers armed with 123 pages of state inspection criteria makes good copy.

The local and regional newspapers know it and so do the television stations.

The soap opera-like scenario unfolded over the past two weeks as the state Registry of Motor Vehicles and school department exchanged barbs over the inspection yardsticks used.

Now the chairman of the school committee with the backing of the superintendent of schools and selectmen has asked our governor and local legislators to launch an inquiry into the matter. Unfortunately, Cohasset schools are in a no-win situation regardless of what the investigation unveils.

Cohasset has been put in the untenable position of defending a negative. The minute children's safety was put into the equation — the troopers and registry had all the cards stacked on their side.

No one will remember what Superintendent Stephen Hart said, for example, about the tape used to repair rips on school bus seats. The tape, employed for 15 years in Cohasset, didn't meet flammability standards and therefore can jeopardize pupil safety, the registry said at its Sept. 12 inspection.

The public at large will only remember that a junior high kid armed with a lighter might set it on fire, as the registry explained.

Yet while Cohasset and the registry may be worlds apart on what should or should not take a bus off the road — the news story should have died in a day or two.

But a zealous registry spokesman readily providing his characterization of the inspection report to various media coupled with a school department reacting to the charges, kept fanning the issue's flames resulting in continuing embarrassment to the town.

Should the school department have taken these charges of "total lack of concern for student safety" on the chin and move on?

We are certainly not suggesting that the school department not loudly defend its reputation in the broader sense and stand on its safety record.

But when it comes down to school buses — no matter how minor the violations may in reality be or how nit-picking the registery gets — any defense of the individual infractions smacks of excuses.

And now, not only is the school department on the defensive but so are the state troopers and the registry officials. When all is said and done, what will probably surface is that everyone was just trying to do their job.

In hindsight, even though all six buses were sidelined for minor violations, it would probably have been better just to say: "Yes officer — you're right, we'll take care of it. Thank you for pointing that out" and to publicly praise the registry for its attention to detail.

It is like arguing with a traffic officer that going 35 in a 30 m.p.h. zone is not that bad — when the fact is, you still broke the speed limit. Trying to explain that it's not by that much will probably get you nowhere.

School board chairman seeks public apology

(Editor's note: School Committee Chairman Ralph Kidder presented this statement to selectmen Monday.)

As Chairman of the Cohasset School Committee, I am deeply troubled by the comments and behavior of various staff members of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts Registry of Motor Vehicles during the recent inspection of Cohasset's school bus fleet. I am especially outraged by the subsequent distortions, innuendoes and outright lies promulgated in both electronic and print media by Registry personnel that impugn the integrity and motivations of the Cohasset School Committee, the Cohasset School Department and the citizens of our town regarding the safe transportation of our children to and from school.

No one should quibble with rigorous inspection of our school buses. After all, our children's lives are at stake. To hold our town and every town to high standards of quality when it comes to bus maintenance and bus safety is simply a matter of common sense. On the other hand, to ground a bus fleet in the middle of a school day seems a bit much, particularly when the inspection could have been accomplished during the summer months and especially when the documentation provided by the inspectors includes nothing that any reasonable person would conclude is connected with the actual safety of children. But I could live with this decision, however arbitrary it might seem to me.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Subsequent actions by the Registry, however, leave no doubt that these petty bureaucrats are out of control. First, Registry spokesmen knew, or should have known, that no serious brake, tire or exhaust problems were cited by the inspectors in grounding the fleet before they publicly accused Cohasset of having a cavalier attitude towards our children's safety. Second, Registry personnel could have, and should have, saved the town from incurring substantial costs to rent buses by returning for the reinspection when requested, rather than dallying for several days. Finally, and most troubling of all, Registry personnel should have inspected the buses immediately upon their return to Cohasset last Friday, rather than standing around waiting for "the media" to show up so that they could get another distorted story on the six o'clock news.

Given recent events, I intend to ask Gov. William Weld, Sen. Robert Hedlund and Rep. Mary Jeannette Murray to assist Cohasset in obtaining an objective, outside investigation of the Registry's actions. The people of Cohasset deserve no less.

Letter on bus safety to parents

(Editor's note: Supt. Stephen Hart sent the following letter home to school parents last week.)

To: Cohasset Parents and Students
From: Stephen E. Hart
Superintendent of Schools
Subject: Bus Safety
Date: Sept. 20.

I am sure that most of you have been deluged by media reports and other comments concerning the recent inspection of our school buses. Let me assure you that I, as Superintendent of Schools, would not allow any student, employee or citizen of Cohasset to be transported on a school bus which was unsafe.

Thursday, Sept. 12, six days after the beginning of school, four Registry inspectors arrived in Cohasset at approximately 9:30 a.m. to inspect our six school buses. We had been informed by the Registry inspector that this inspection was to take place on this day. For the next 2-1/2 hours the four inspectors scrutinized the condition of our buses and concluded that they needed certain repairs before they could be returned to service.

In response to inquiries from local and area newspapers I stated that I did not believe that our buses were unsafe although I did support the need for regular intense inspection of school buses to ensure their safety. Following a related article that appeared in The Patriot Ledger, the public relations director for the Registry initiated a campaign of misinformation to discredit the Cohasset Public Schools and its commitment to safety.

As an example, Mr. Haznar, the public relations director for the Registry, was quoted in the Sept. 19 edition of The Boston Globe as questioning the commitment of Cohasset to the safety of our students. When I spoke with him Sept. 19 he stated directly to me that he was not referring to Cohasset when he made this statement, but was referring to Nantucket. He accused The Boston Globe reporter of misquoting him. Approximately two hours

Memorial squares to be dedicated

The men from Cohasset who gave their lives in the Korean Conflict and the Vietnam War will be honored on Sunday, Nov. 11, with the dedication of town squares in their memory. The 1995 Town Meeting approved a citizens' petition to name nine squares, one for each man who died. In 1923, the town dedicated squares to the men who made the supreme sacrifice in World War I, and again in 1946 for those brave men who died in World War II. Town Meeting also specified that the next narrative history of the town which was written be dedicated to these men, and also tell their story for future generations to learn.

The dedication committee has planned a full afternoon to dedicate the squares, which have been located as close as possible to the neighborhoods which the men and their families lived in prior to their service tour. The dedications will begin at noon at the intersection of Doane and Church streets, which will be renamed and dedicated as Peter Cogill Square. Immediately thereafter, the intersection of Beechwood Street and Todd Road, named in memory of Lt. Norman M. Todd, a Cohasset serviceman who died of complications of exposure to radiation in the final days of WWII, will be dedicated as William C. Laidlaw Square.

Cohasset's only Navy casualty, R. Edward Maree, will be remembered by the dedication of the Parker Avenue boat ramp as R. Edward Maree Landing. The square at the intersection of Black Horse Lane and Summer Street will be dedicated and renamed Allen F. Keating Square. Another Army soldier, Craig M. Simeone, will have the intersection of Pond Street and Lantern Lane renamed in his honor.

The dedication committee has planned a full afternoon to dedicate the squares, which have been located as close as possible to the neighborhoods which the men and their families lived in prior to their service tour.

Dedication ceremonies will then move to the center of town for the dedication of squares to two Army officers who died in Vietnam at the height of the war. The park at the intersection of Elm Street and Highland Avenue Ext. will be dedicated as Dennis J. Reardon Square. Renaming of the square at the junction of Joy Place and North Main Street will be in memory of John P. Lyon.

The dedications will conclude with a ceremony at the intersection of Gammons and Jerusalem roads, which will be dedicated to Peter J. Albani Jr. The green at Jerusalem Road and Red Gate Lane will be renamed and dedicated as C. David Strout Square. David was the only Cohasset man to die in the Korean fighting.

Immediately following the ceremonies, a reception will be held at the Senior Center, 3 North Main St., in Cohasset Village. The public is invited to join the families, veterans and others who gathered to remember these brave men.

EEE virus of concern to residents

Of continued concern to South Shore residents is the recent news that mosquitoes carrying the Eastern equine encephalitis virus have been found in considerable numbers in Westerly, R.I., and three additional towns near the Massachusetts border. In addition, the New York Times reported Sept. 8 that the EEE virus was found in mosquito samplings on Long Island during the month of August and that several parks were closed and sprayed.

The Massachusetts Department of Public Health monitors both the actual and probable presence of the EEE virus in local mosquito populations and releases timely information to the general public. Areas bordering Rhode Island have been monitored since May as part of the DPH's routine surveillance schedule. Following reports of multiple EEE virus in Eastern Rhode Island, the DPH increased trapping at its long term sites in Rehoboth and Westport. No EEE virus has been found in mosquitoes trapped in Massachusetts.

The history of EEE on the South Shore indicates it is a relatively rare disease. According to Massachusetts Audubon Society's pamphlet on mosquitoes, "In Massachusetts, a total of 69 clinically confirmed human cases of EEE have been reported in the 52-year period between the first identified major human outbreak in 1938 (34 cases) and the 1990 season." For those who contract the disease, however, the neurological impact can be devastating, and approximately one third of the cases are fatal. Infants, young children and the elderly seem to be most susceptible.

At this point, the Cohasset Mosquito Control Committee urges all Cohasset residents to take the following precautions:

- If you have areas of stagnant water on your property, either drain the areas or treat them with mosquito dunks available from hardware stores or garden centers.
- Avoid outdoor activity during peak hours of mosquito feeding in the early morning and early evening.
- If an individual must be outside during these hours, wear long-sleeved shirts and long pants and use an insect repellent that includes DEET, 10 percent or less for use on children and less than 30 percent for adults. DEET should never be used on infants.

Current information about mosquito control from the Department of Public Health, Audubon Society and general medical media is available in a hang pocket in the lobby of Town Hall, in addition to the town library and the Cohasset Community Center. For additional information, call the Cohasset Board of Health at 383-9900, Ext. 121, Charles Gainor at 383-0498, or the Plymouth County Mosquito Control Project at (617) 585-5450 from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Remember to register to vote

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

To the Editor:

On behalf of all of the members of the Hingham-Cohasset League of Women Voters, we thank the candidates and audience members who participated in the Candidates' Night Sept. 12. Because the format was not that of a debate, voters could ask questions of the candidates and hear their responses about the issues. We are grateful to Continental Cablevision for taping the session and airing it twice, making it accessible to a wider audience.

The deadline for voter registration is Oct. 16. The league is sponsoring voter registration tables at school open houses in Hingham for those residents who wish to register at a convenient time and location. The Massachusetts League and BankBoston are involved in a cooperative effort from Sept. 30 through Oct. 5 to offer voter registration at bank branches.

However, voter registration is only one half of the process. Only 14.3 percent of Hingham voters and 17.2 percent of Cohasset voters participated in the recent primary. They are Americans who found the time to participate in the process.

The league does not endorse political parties or candidates, but we remain committed to our mission to get out the vote. The choices we make now will bring us to the next millennium. Election Day is Tuesday, Nov. 5 — hope to see you at the polls!

Letter on bus safety to parents later I was astonished to read essentially the same quote in The Cohasset Mariner. A telephone call to the editor of The Mariner confirmed that Mr. Haznar had indeed made the comment to her.

Let me now review some of the allegations made by Mr. Haznar concerning safety violations that were detected at the Sept. 12 inspection.

Allegations

1. Cohasset buses had major brake problems.

Fact:

None of the six buses had major problems with brakes. The brakes of five of the six buses were certified to be in perfect working condition. The sixth bus was identified as having minor leakage around the power brake booster. Since this bus has been in service, it has never required the addition of fluid to the system.

Allegations

2. Cohasset buses had major tire problems.

Fact:

Not a single tire was cited for having insufficient tread depth or cuts to its body. Of the 36 tires on the school buses, one or two had plastic stem caps rather than metal caps.

Allegations

3. Faulty exhaust system on the buses.

Fact:

In fact, the intense inspection by the Registry did not require the replacement of a single component of the exhaust system of our buses.

Allegations

4. Flammable repair tape was used to repair buses.

Fact:

In the 15 years that I have been involved in the inspection of our school buses, this is the tape which is supplied to us as the suitable tape to be used to repair tears or cuts to seat covers. Immediately upon being informed that this tape exceeded the regulations for flammability, we requested new tape from our supplier.

Cohasset is very serious about the maintenance of our school buses. During the last school year we spent approximately $26,000 to ensure the safety of our buses. We spent more than $10,000 during the summer to prepare the buses for the 1996-1997 school year.

I appreciate your understanding and patience about this matter and once again assure you of our continuing commitment to the safety of your children as they ride to and from school each day.

Thank you's offered for Grandparents' Day help

To the Editor:

On behalf of South Shore Community Center, I would like to express our appreciation to the Massachusetts Cultural Council, Hingham Institute for Savings and Ben & Jerry's Ice Cream of Hingham for sponsoring our Grandparent's Day celebration Sunday, Sept. 15.

We had a wonderful afternoon filled with a magic show for both young and old and, to add the finishing touch of the day, a sundae party.

A special thank-you goes to Kathy Bryanton and the Council on Elder Affairs, who helped support the event.

Church to conduct census

Saint Anthony's Roman Catholic Church of Cohasset will conduct a town-wide Ecumenical Census Sunday, Sept. 29, between the hours of 1 and 8 p.m. All census takers will be properly identified. All of the churches in Cohasset are part of this project. The census takers will come to your door and identify themselves and ask you if you are a member of Saint Anthony's Roman Catholic Church. If you are, they will ask you to fill out a form. You can fill it out and either give it back to them, mail it back to the rectory or place it in the baskets at the weekend Masses. If you are not a Catholic the census taker will give you a form that you may fill out and send to one of the other churches in Cohasset.

Teague on campaign trail

Fresh from winning the Republican nomination for the 10th Congressional District in the Sept. 17 primary, Ed Teague visited Kingston last Thursday and in his words, "get the message out and meet the voters."

He met nearly 30 people on a whirlwind tour that included a stop at town hall, the police station and 13 homes in the area.

"The people who continue to make a difference in this campaign are the voters," said Teague, the House minority leader from Yarmouth.

That certainly was the lesson on the Democratic ticket. William Delahunt lost the nomination to Philip Johnston by only 266 votes. The Delahunt and Johnston campaigns called for a recount in selected communities last Thursday afternoon. Johnston is seeking a recount in Cohasset which uses the punch-ballot system.

The last recount in Cohasset was the 1994 race between Christopher Iannella and John Kerrigan for Councillor in the Fourth District. Iannella picked up four votes in the recount and Kerrigan picked up two, Town Clerk Marion Douglas said.

Teague said he understood the request for a recount. "It was a very tight race and I am sure that a lot of people close to the campaign want to make sure there was no error in the count. A switch of just one vote per precinct could make a world of difference."

Still, Teague, who won the Republican nod by 10,000 votes, said it makes no difference who the Democratic challenger is.

New school impact on vernal pool is concern

By ANDI WEISSMAN
Special to the Mariner

Engineers working on the new elementary school site must go back to the drawing board and redraft a wildlife assessment report on the project, Conservation Commission members said Thursday night.

Commission consultant Paul Shea said a recent assessment submitted by the school design team, their second, barely addressed concerns about the impact the building would have on amphibians making a nearby vernal pool their home.

In contrast, a report submitted to the commission by an independent assessor identified the habitat as "the most significant vernal pool in town," Shea said. He added that the assessor had already applied to state agencies to certify the pool.

"It seems like you are on the North Pole and he's on the South Pole and you're talking about the same vernal pool," he told Ken Buckland, an engineer with Judith Nitsche Engineering, hired by the school department.

Shea suggested the design team look at a system directing water to vegetated wetland instead of the vernal pool as an alternate way to complete the school project.

New plans propose moving the site of the building to allow more room behind it and create a wider buffer between the school and surrounding properties and woodlands areas, school landscape architect Joe Geller told the commission.

The plans also call for a drainage detention center to the north of the site, a retaining wall along northern wetlands and a connecting road to the Deer Hill School site to allow for a larger play area, Geller said.

But the commission expressed its displeasure with the plans.

"I am very disappointed by what has been brought before us," said commission member Thomas Callahan. He said the plans were difficult to read, and other members complained that flags marking the construction site were difficult to follow.

"I think it's important that we get a better product to make a good decision," Callahan said.

Commission member Michael Dick questioned whether the vernal pool would receive nourishment from more than one source. Buckland said it would flow from both the detention center and from the surface of the play area behind the school.

Commission member Jim Dedes said the design team had done a decent job on the new plans, but the concerns he was hearing were about the quality of the water going to the vernal pool. He suggested the design team color-code the drainage plans to clarify where water would flow from and where it would flow to.

Jeff Waal, vice chair of the committee, directed that the design team look at the impact the construction would have on the wetlands as well as the vernal pool, with an eye toward eliminating the proposed retaining wall.

"I'm not in favor of retaining walls in general," Waal said. "I think it should be moved away from the wetlands even if it makes the play area smaller."

He suggested that natural vegetation serve as a wetlands buffer instead.

Dick said he was concerned the design of the school's driveway would adversely affect the green area to the northwest of the site, and he asked the design team to look at the impact of construction on that area.

He also suggested more trees be planted around a planned amphitheater site to provide an additional buffer for abutting properties and to create a larger corridor for deer and other wildlife.

But some citizens said concerns for the deer were overrated.

"I think we have to have a very big play area," said one citizen who asked not to be named. "Deer are everywhere causing problems. This is our school."

Paul Pratt Library Corner

Open Sundays

The Paul Pratt Library is now open Sundays from 2 to 5 p.m. and Mondays and Tuesdays from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. The library is closed Wednesdays and open Thursdays and Fridays from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. and Saturdays from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Free passes

Free museum passes are available, donated by Friends of the Paul Pratt Library. There are four passes to the Computer Museum in Boston, available to any cardholder of the library. Also available are free passes to the Museum of Science, Museum of Fine Arts, Children's Museum, New England Aquarium and Plimoth Plantation (courtesy of Lucille McLoughlin).

Story hours

Registrations are being accepted for the fall pre-school Story Hour at the library, set for Thursdays and Fridays at 10 a.m. beginning Oct. 3 and 4. Each 45-minute program includes stories, simple fingerplays, songs and crafts. Children must be at least 3-1/2 to participate.

For further information or to register for a museum pass or program, call 383-1348.

CD roms

A new computer in the children's room has 20 CD Roms, and assistance is available at the library.

Planning board accepts DPW plans

The planning board has accepted the proposed plans for a 14,000 square foot DPW garage to house town maintenance equipment.

The plans sketched out the details of the two-level, metal-sided building to be constructed on the town landfill.

The board's approval was given contingent upon slight changes to the proposal.

In other business:

- Civil Engineer John Modzelewski refused to approve a proposed driveway construction project in the Kendall Village development unless stricter soil compression standards are met.
- The board voted to extend the Carousel Antiques site plan for another year. Construction of an addition to the site is on hold until nearby railroad construction plans are finalized.

with Ginger Ferenz 383-2863

When Dick Karoff of 19 Border St. phoned and asked if we would like to feature his wife Sandra Manzella's plantings in front of their stone wall, I never expected to find so many delights when I arrived. In front of the stone wall, a very long perennial garden border is planted with tall fuchsia, light pink and white cosmos; pink hydrangea; purple bee balm; pale pink dahlias; black-eyed Susan; pale lavender pincushion flower; pale grey dusty miller; bright yellow Coreopsis; sedum; pink and white tall phlox; pale lavender and deep magenta yarrow; Artemisia; pale purple asters; Campanula; and white and purple alyssum. A grey cobblestone patio is home to metal garden furniture on the side of the house where a white lattice is mounted and adorned with trained blue Morning Glory and climbing roses under-planted with miniature roses. As you climb the steps to the rear wooden deck, Sandra has containers filled with color: pink hydrangea is happily blooming in a large cement container while roses have been trained as standards in other containers — the deep pink of First Prize Rose and the pale, apricot blush of Medallion Rose are at home in cement containers while the deep purple of a nearby butterfly bush surround the sundial while a container of blooming deep magenta Bougainvillea spill over the knee-wall surrounding the deck. Behind the deck are formal rose beds bordered by boxwood hedges. Sandra's artistry is evident in the inventive combinations in her containers. One in particular, standing five-feet tall is filled with purple balloon flower, deep purple heliotrope, double purple petunias, pink snapdragon and dusty miller. Another seating area on the deck is picturesque with its lacy white metal garden furniture and a nest of tables with a container filled with beautiful deep maroon ivy geranium and a tall white rose standard, creating the perfect balance. The front of the house has a low stone wall planted with the palest of pink impatiens. We thank Dick for calling and allowing us to photograph Sandra's garden sanctuary.

Vikings Go Home!

East Bridgewater Romps Cohasset in Alumni Field Opener

By Jim O'Sullivan
Cohasset Mariner

Cohasset's new Alumni Field hosted its first football game last Friday evening as the Skippers fell victim to a potent East Bridgewater offense and a swarming defense. The Vikings, led by two touchdown runs each from Jason Imlach, Mike Holland and Cedric Josey, ran away with a 52-0 victory.

Among the few bright spots for the young Cohasset squad, playing in the South Shore League after a six-year absence, was a 50-yard sprint by sophomore Jamie DeMichele and a blocked extra point by sophomores Justin Golden and Greg Parkinson. Sean Parkinson also recovered a fumble. Matt Belson, Doug Cameron, Matt Conley and Mike Rossi all played exceptionally well on defense.

Junior co-captain and quarterback Pat Hurley withstood the overpowering Viking defensive line, often rolling out of the pocket and looking for a receiver. When

Field hockey team has the scoring touch

By JOE REARDON
Cohasset Mariner

Like last year's team, the shots on goal are coming at a furious rate for the Cohasset High field hockey squad. This year, however, the blasts aren't hitting the posts or crossbar, deflecting off other players or just barely missing to the left or right. Nope. The Lady Skippers are finding the back of the net on a consistent basis.

Cohasset has slammed in nine goals in its first four games, getting the team off to a fast-starting 3-1 overall record.

Head coach Debby Bostwick says the main reason for the Lady Skippers' excellent play is their cohesiveness and unselfish on the field. The team isn't rushing its shots, but rather making that extra pass for the high percentage shots.

"We have a really good offensive club this year," Bostwick said. "There's a lot of passing and they're working well together. The last few seasons defense has been the strength, but my forwards have matured and are clicking.

"They're (entire team) skilled, disciplined, dedicated and they're friends."

Junior High Football Program Looks Ahead

By Joe Reardon
Cohasset Mariner

The varsity football may have had a tough time in Friday night's South Shore League season opener against East Bridgewater, but the seventh- and eighth-grade squad handled itself just find in its first ever contest.

Sporting brand new equipment, the 25-member team defeated Holbrook 12-6 on the strength of eighth-grade captain Daniel Trowers' 150-yards rushing and 60-yard touchdown carry. Chris Golden garnered the Skippers' other score on a 6-yard reverse.

The junior high squad, which is coached by Torin Sweeney, has a solid seven-game schedule. Six of the games are played against Cape Cod teams. Save for the Holbrook contest, the team plays its games on Wednesdays and practices three days per week.

With the large seventh-grade enrollment and adequate numbers for a junior high club, Sweeney said the turnout has been a success and is looking to build players who will eventually go on to play on the varsity squad.

The field hockey team also has the distinction of racking up Cohasset High's first win on the new Alumni Field. Both the soccer squads have struggled at home, while the football team dropped its home opener 52-0 to an overpowering East Bridgewater squad.

Cohasset registered the win in Saturday's 3-0 decision over South Shore League opponent Carver.

The game was originally scheduled to be played on the Lady Crusaders' home field, but was moved to Alumni Field when sloppy conditions made it unplayable.

Bostwick saw the contest against Carver as a critical step in the team's ultimate goal of reaching the tournament.

"I told the kids that this was the game," she said. "If we could win this game we were in the driver's seat."

Cohasset played to a scoreless tie in the first half in a back-and-forth affair. Lauren Dooley and Kristen Reynolds nearly broke away on five different occasions

The Lady Skippers finally broke the stalemate in the second half when Natalie Cheel skipped a shot past the goaltender after taking a pass from Lauren Dooley to make it 1-0.

Dooley must have liked what she saw because she gave Cohasset a 2-0 lead less than two minutes later. Sue Gill stole the ball from a Carver player and hit Megan Connolly with a pass. Connolly then fed a pass to Dooley, who blasted a shot past the Lady Crusaders' goaltender.

Cohasset then ruined any chance of Carver coming back with nine minutes left when Whitney Cook scored on a corner, and the Lady Skippers began to use the clock to their advantage, not giving Carver the chance to build any type of consistent momentum.

"We were able to take the wind out of Carver's sails," Bostwick said.

The Lady Skippers came away with a big win, prior to the Carver game when they outlasted Scituate, 2-1. Cohasset amassed 14 penalty corners. With that many opportunities the Lady Skippers were bound to capitalize. And they did.

With 9:43 played, co-captain Emily Collins drove a corner in on the goaltender, who made the initial save. Hustling to the net, Collins collected her own rebound and found the opposite corner of the net for a 1-0 Cohasset lead.

Less than one minute later, however, a uncharacteristic let down on defense resulted in Scituate tying the score. A Lady Sailor was left uncovered on the left side and her shot on net was just out of the reach of Cohasset goaltender Jackie Hurley and it was suddenly 1-1.

The goal, however, was actually a blessing in disguise. Bostwick noticed that Scituate's strength was moving the ball down the left side of the field from the center. Bostwick knew if the Lady Skippers could shut down the left side, Cohasset would be able to control the pace of the game.

The strategy worked and the Lady Skippers went on to dominate the second half of the game with 10 penalty corners and 13 shots on net.

"We just came out like gangbusters," Bostwick said. "The defense was awesome in the second half."

Connolly scored the winning goal when Cheel ripped a shot in front of the Sailors' net and Connolly redirected it past the Scituate goaltender.

The play of Hurley at center midfield, Buckley and Alia Afshar at link went a long way in stopping the Sailors from mounting any serious offensive attack the rest of the way. They were able to squeeze up the middle of the field, forcing Scituate down the sidelines.

Bostwick commended Afshar's game and the job she did in the later stages. "She was everywhere. Kids from Scituate commented how well she played during the game."

Cohasset's next two games are at home with undefeated Hull traveling to town today and Notre Dame of Hingham scheduled for tomorrow.

Tournament set to benefit ARC

South Shore ARC's ninth annual Lou Bailey Golf and Tennis Tournament will be held Monday, Sept. 30, at Cohasset Golf Club. The after-tournament schedule includes a social hour followed by an elegant gourmet dinner and sports enthusiasts' auction.

The entry fee for golf is $175 per player, which includes greens fees, golf cart, memento prizes, brunch and the dinner auction. A chance to win a 1997 Chevrolet Cavalier is being provided by corporate sponsor Chevrolet/Geo of Cohasset.

The entry fee for tennis is $85 per player and includes fruits and juices, prizes and the dinner auction. Tickets to the dinner auction are $50.

To order tickets, or for information about sponsorships, call South Shore ARC at 335-3023.

Jean and Lou Bailey of Cohasset are parents and active members of South Shore ARC. The Baileys founded the event to help fund the Agency programs and involve the community in the lives of individuals with developmental disabilities.

Six-on-six soccer tourney Columbus Day weekend

The second invitational Laker invitational soccer tournament will be played over the Columbus Day weekend, Oct. 13-14.

The tourney, co-sponsored by Pembroke Youth soccer and the Silver Lake boys' soccer boosters, is being expanded this year and will include both boys and girls divisions under 10 and under 12.

All teams will play a minimum of three games on Sunday with playoffs on Monday.

All teams must be MYSA affiliated and no select or premier teams will be permitted to play.

Coaches interested in receiving an application for the tourney should call 617-826-2842 to obtain information.

Last year's tourney was a huge success so don't delay.

East Bridgewater Romps Cohasset in Alumni Field

none could be found, Hurley would take off down field, dodging tacklers and then getting back up to do it again. Hurley finished with 46 yards, a strong showing from a quarterback. DeMichele proved to be the workhorse in the Skippers' backfield, rushing for 90 yards on just seven carries.

"We got whipped," said senior co-captain Grant Emde. "It's probably because we're out of condition a bit and we went the whole week without pads because of the weather. I think it was a learning experience.

"We'll work hard in practice and come out knocking kids the next game."

"Obviously we didn't play our best game," said co-captain Kevin Duffy. "But we played a bigger team, a more experienced team and I think now that we got this out of the way we'll just get on with our season and hope we can pick some things up."

Head coach Bob Knurek had little to say about the trouncing. "Our inexperience showed tonight, but we played a great game in terms of coming back. We got knocked down, but we never stayed down."

The Skippers are looking to draw on the positives and not focus on the negatives of the East Bridgewater game. Cohasset tries again this Friday night when it travels to Abington to take on the Green Wave.

"This was a good time to start the program," he said. "We hope it's going to be the future. We've never had a Pop Warner program so this is ours."

Several players had strong outings in their first game out of the blocks. Seventh-grade quarterback Jason Brown showed he can run as well as throw, picking up yardage on the bootleg. Matt Tescatore played well at both center and noseguard, while Greg Figuerido did the the same at fullback and linebacker.

The team showed impressive stamina in its two-way play and that should help the Skippers in their next six games. Brian Krupczak provided strong blocking on the offensive line and put constant pressure on Holbrook's quarterback at the defensive end position. Seventh-grader Will Prendergast and Brayton Pearsall got the job done at offensive and defensive tackle. Eighth-graders Dan Duffy and Derek Thayer also look to be integral players on the team.

Cohasset was scheduled to travel to the Cape yesterday to take on Dennis-Yarmouth's middle school team.

Family health program slated

Project Safeguard is a family approach to adolescent health-related issues and substance abuse. The Cohasset J[illegible] H.S.'s seventh grade class will attend this program during regular school hours. Workshops will address issues of self-esteem, harassment, drug and alcohol prevention, peer pressure etc. Seventh grade parents are urged to attend and sixth grade parents are invited to volunteer and view what may be on the agenda for next year.

The program goals are:

— to provide an environment for parent/student interaction

— to improve parent/student communication

— to strengthen self esteem of parents & students

— to foster community awareness and commitment to family issues/values

— to build skills in young people that will empower them to more successfully avoid harmful choices.

This approach to prevention education is unique because it brings students and parents together at an off-school site for an all-day conference. The sessions will be located in churches around the Common as well as the auditorium in Cohasset Town Hall. The material to be covered during the program has also been reviewed and approved by the seventh grade team and Jr./Sr. High Principal Curtis Collins.

This will be an important day for your child and the Health Education Program, and the entire seventh grade team are hopeful that at least one parent of each child will attend. If that is not possible, parents may want to designate a family member/friend to accompany their child for the day.

Further information and registration form will be forthcoming; in the meantime, please mark your calendars for Wednesday, Oct. 16, 7:45 a.m. to 1:40 p.m., and reserve the day to participate in the Cohasset education process and help make learning a family experience.

This program is being funded with grant money as well as additional money from The P.A.L.S. for wellness program (Police Assisting Local Schools) which is administered by Police Chief Brian Noonan and Health Education Coordinator, Michael Gill.

Education foundation fund-raiser scheduled for Oct. 6

The CEF will formally open its fifth year with a public fund-raiser at the South Shore Arts Center Sunday, Oct. 6, from 4 to 7 p.m. Pam Speed, the chairperson for the event has entitled the gathering, "An Evening for Education." The occasion is an important part of the foundation's community outreach.

The evening will showcase the works of Cohasset students in the arts and graphics and feature Cohasset's principals as special guests of the CEF. Along with high school principal, Curt Collins, incoming headmasters, Paul Callahan (Deer Hill) and Merilee Cantelmo (Osgood) will be on hand to meet with the community and discuss their plans for the future. With the current major project of the CEF being a replacement of the high school language lab, a working model of a state of the art laboratory will be available to demonstrate the technology being considered.

Refreshments will be provided by the high school economics class and the PSO Diversity Committee will be offering their newly published Diversity Cookbook featuring ethnic recipes and gastronomic delights from around the world. A variety of valuable door prizes and demonstrations on various CEF projects are also planned.

Tax-deductible tickets for the evening are available from Directors of the CEF or by calling Pam Speed (383-2572), Mike Hurley (383-9509) or leaving a message on the CEF line at 383-2833.

People interested in learning more about the mission of the foundation and its activities are encouraged to call the CEF at 383-2833 or to write the Cohasset Education Foundation, P.O. Box 224, Cohasset, MA 02025, for a copy of our brochure and additional information on our programs. A registered non-profit organization, all donations to our project fund are tax-deductible and dedicated to enhancing the educational environment of Cohasset Public School students.

Gift-wrap sale

It's time again for the PSO gift-wrap fund-raiser. Through Sept. 27 students will offer top quality products to family and friends. Fifty percent of all proceeds go toward our schools. Call Tomi Bukowski at 383-6771 or Lesley Faber at 383-2071 for further information.

PAC meeting is slated

The Parents Advisory Council of Cohasset invites all parents and guardians of students receiving services under Chapter 766 from the Cohasset School system to an evening of informal discussion with the newly appointed Director of Student Services Lynn Silva.

The meeting will be held Tuesday, Oct. 8, at 7:30 p.m. in the Deer Hill School library. For further details, call PAC Chairman Kim Maynard at 383-2707.

PSO help sought

Many different fund-raising events are being sponsored by the PSO this year, including gift-wrap sales, a fall dance and silent auction etc. The success of these events requires the work of many individuals with many different talents. If you would like to join a committee for one of these events or help out in any manner, please call Tomi Bukowski at 383-6771, Lesley Faber at 383-2071, Patty Smith at 383-2773 or Jane Wasel at 383-0121.

A ramble through the Berkshires

Western Massachusetts is replete with hidden treasures

By George Hobica

"A prophet is without honor in his own country," my father used to quote, with considerable poetic license, from an old book. The same could be said about travel destinations. In this part of the world, we tend to extol the virtues of distant, foreign shores – Europe, the West Coast, or even further afield – when planning our vacations, ignoring the glories of our own back yards. Even without the pending promise of fall foliage, the Berkshires hold innumerable treasures for travelers from near and far; especially from near, since the region lies just over two hours from Boston.

One of the Berkshires' richest rewards awaits in bucolic Williamstown. If the Sterling and Francine Clark Art Institute were in Paris it would probably be better known to Greater Bostonians. Robert Sterling Clark and his wife, Francine, collected the paintings and sculptures on display here between the First World War and 1956. You'll find major works by Gainsborough, Rembrandt, Mary Cassatt, Renoir, Degas, Monet, Toulouse-Lautrec, Winslow Homer, and John Singer Sargent to name only the best-known artists. From now until January, the museum's entire collection of Renoirs (more than 30 of them) will be on display at one time, a rarity.

Another treasure trove is the Hancock Shaker Village in nearby West Pittsfield. From 1790 until as recently as 1960, this was an active Shaker community; today, it's a museum of unusual quality and scope. Among the 20 carefully restored buildings, of particular note is the Round Stone Barn, a masterpiece of Shaker form and function built in 1826. Equally impressive: the spacious and light-filled Brick Dwelling (1830) with its 100 doors, 95 windows, 369 drawers, and 245 cupboard doors. This is where the communal dining room and kitchens were located. To get an idea of what a Shaker meal might have been like, plan your visit around a special candlelight dinner and tour ($38 per person; the last ones of the season occur on Oct. 5 and 12).

The Norman Rockwell Museum (413-298-4100) is a fairly recent addition to the Berkshire cultural scene. In addition to memorabilia from Rockwell's life, scores of his most famous illustrations are on view, including "The Four Freedoms," "Looking Out to Sea," and his portrait of John F. Kennedy. On display through Oct. 20 is a special exhibit entitled "Norman Rockwell's 322 Post Covers," including all of the great illustrator's covers for the magazine. The museum is open daily, 10 a.m.-5 p.m.

Historic homes abound in the Berkshires. Perhaps the most famous is Chesterwood (413-298-3579) in Stockbridge, for 33 years the residence of sculptor Daniel Chester French (1850-1931), best known for his Minute Man in Concord, and Abraham Lincoln, centerpiece of Washington, D.C.'s Lincoln Memorial. The Colonial Revival main house is the prime attraction, but you'll also find here the shortest stretch of railroad track in the nation – 40 feet long. Historic preservation mavens will want to visit Arrowhead in Pittsfield, Herman Melville's erstwhile home (413-442-1793); The Mount, former home of Edith Wharton, in Lenox (413-637-1899); and the properties of the Trustees of Reservations (413-298-3239) Naumkeag in Stockbridge, a 26-room mansion designed by Stanford White; the Mission House, also in Stockbridge, the 1739 home of missionary John Sergeant; The Colonel John Ashley House (1735) in Ashley Falls, the oldest house in Berkshire County; and the William Cullen Bryant Homestead in Cummington, built in 1783, and home of the poet and editor of the New York Evening Post. The four sites are open through Columbus Day.

Kerry, Weld address issues at youth forum

400 students take part

By MARK LECCESE
CNC Statehouse Bureau

Taking questions from an audience of more than 400 high school students Sunday, incumbent U.S. Sen. John Kerry and challenger Gov. William Weld dropped the give-and-take of their TV debates and outlined their differing stands on how to help students and how to best help the middle class.

Unlike previous debates, however, the two men also talked about the personal experiences that shaped them and brought them into politics.

The youth forum, sponsored by Community Newspaper Company at Boston's World Trade Center, gave students a chance to question the candidates in this year's highly publicized — and hotly disputed — race for the U.S. Senate.

Kerry, who volunteered for the U.S. Navy after college and saw combat in Vietnam, said when he returned from his tour of duty he was "faced with a major choice: whether to take my military service and kind of retrench, or stand up and speak out, out of the conviction that a lot of my friends were still over there and a lot of people were still dying."

Kerry helped found the Vietnam Veterans Against the War, which for three years protested against the Vietnam War in the streets and in Congress.

"That's one of the most important things I've ever done or probably will do," Kerry said.

Weld recalled his days as an intern to a state representative on Beacon Hill, his time as a young attorney — sharing an office with Hillary Rodham Clinton — on the U.S. House Judiciary Committee during the Watergate hearings in the 1970s.

"I learned a lot about litigation and public corruption," Weld said. "This led me to run for attorney general in 1978, and I lost 80-20, setting a record that adheres to this day, and led me to being appointed United States Attorney by Ronald Reagan in 1981."

Both candidates urged the students not to grow cynical about the political process and government.

"I've never had this feeling some people do that Washington is tawdry, that politics is tawdry," Weld said, adding that his answer to cynicism about government is to "do something that will make people proud of your office."

Kerry cited several major political issues in which student activity has made a difference — the civil rights battle, the women's movement, environmentalism — and said. "What we need to do now is not sort of sit around and stew in our juices and lament this notion that, oh, it's a big cynical world out there.

"Grab that ability you have with your enthusiasm, your idealism, your sense of right and wrong, and take it out into the political process."

Kerry received a loud round of applause from the students when he chided Congressional Republicans for proposing "the greatest cut in American history in college loans" and said, "President Clinton and I are proposing to offer people a $10,000 income tax deduction in order to send people to school."

Weld said reducing taxes and leaving "more money in the pockets of taxpayers" is "the number one thing government can do relative to the affordability of education."

Asked by a student what they would do to "foster the growth and prominence of the middle class," Weld and Kerry revealed some of their political differences.

Cutting taxes and reducing the size of government is "about the most middle class-friendly thing you can do," Weld said. "There's an emerging consensus that we want a more conservative approach on taxes, size of government, crime and welfare.

"You don't get there by tearing down the people at the top," he said. "You get there by building up opportunity for everybody else."

Kerry cited the growing income and asset gap between the wealthy and the middle class in the United States, said, "I'm for a tax break, but I want the tax break to go to the middle class and the working people who are struggling and who have been the victims of that growing gap."

Saying proposed Republican tax cuts would primarily benefit "the wealthy and the corporations," Kerry said, "Fairness is an important word in America, and I'm going to fight for fairness."

In an instant electronic survey taken immediately after the event by Feedback Marketing Services Corp. of Wellesley, 62 percent of the students said they supported Kerry, 26 percent said they supported Weld, and 10 percent were undecided.

Before the event, according to the poll, 23 percent said they were undecided, 47 percent said they supported Kerry, and 29 percent said they supported Weld.

Both candidates and their camps said they found the forum a welcome change from the traditional political debate.

Jenny Watson, Kerry's campaign press secretary, said the format of the forum — which did not allow for the candidates to rebut each other's answers — "had much less of the rat-a-tat-tat of the debates and gave the candidates more time to explain their positions on the issues more fully."

Weld praised the student questioners. "I thought the questions were at least as sophisticated as the questions we get from reporter panels," he said after the forum.

The governor, in fact, seemed to prefer questions from high school students to questions from reporters. "It was nice to hear questions that hadn't gone through the acid bath," he said. "There was no sneering element to these questions."

Reporters and TV crews from across Massachusetts and the world — including TV crews from CBS's "60 Minutes" and PBS's "NewsHour" and reporters from as far away as London and Helsinki — covered Sunday's forum.

Kerry and Weld have three more debates scheduled before the Nov. 5 election.

A transcript of the Youth Forum is available on the World Wide Web at www.townonline.com/vote96.

Higher education is students' top concern

Teen violence is a worry too

More than 400 high school students from eastern Massachusetts answered 11 questions in an electronic survey following Community Newspaper Company's youth forum Sunday with Democratic incumbent U.S. Sen. John Kerry and his challenger, Republican Gov. William Weld.

Feedback Marketing Services Corp. of Wellesley had 22 "Feedback Clipboards," an electronic questionnaire device, available to the students as they exited. The questions were drawn up by Community Newspaper Company.

PERSONAL FINANCE

Give yourself a year-end financial checkup

Edited by Elizabeth MacDonald
WORTH MAGAZINE

As the winter months approach us and another year draws to a close, it's easy to let money matters get lost in the shuffle of holiday excitement. We asked the experts for their best year-end tips. Follow these and save:

•Review health benefits. Most companies circulate forms that let employees adjust benefit plans by a

Thanksgiving deadline. Pay attention. It may be the last time you can take advantage of one of today's most cherished benefits — employer-provided flexible spending accounts for health care costs.

By using pretax dollars for physicals and even the cost of traveling to the doctor, workers can cut nonreimbursed medical expenses by 40 percent or more.

These plans are particularly advantageous if you are expecting your medical bills and insurance copayments to increase in 1997. But keep in mind they do not cover payments for elective cosmetic surgery.

Individuals should sit down with their checkbooks, add up how much they spent on medical costs this year, and sock that amount away in a flex plan for 1997. "If you want to switch from your employer's indemnity plan to its health maintenance organization or preferred-provider plan, you'll probably want to lower your flex-account balance because you won't be paying as much for office visits," says Martha Priddy Patterson, chief employee-benefits analyst at KPMG Peat Marwick in Washington, D.C.

'If you want to switch from your employer's indemnity plan to its health maintenance organization or preferred-provider plan, you'll probably want to lower your flex-account balance because you won't be paying as much for office visits.'
Martha Priddy Patterson
Employee benefits analyst

•Two-earner households should also consider having one spouse sign up for the other's health plan if each is now covered separately. Some companies who let employees drop company-provided health insurance will refund the unused benefits back to employees.

•Boost retirement savings. Remember when Clinton signed into law the General Agreement on Trade and Tarriffs (GATT) in 1994? That legislation changed the maximum amount of money workers could sock away in 401(k) plans. Previously, the maximum amounts were inflation-indexed. But the GATT provisions, which took effect in 1995, say you'll get an increase in the maximum 401(k) contribution only if the inflation-adjusted amount equals or exceeds $500. Additionally, the law only allows adjustments in increments that equal or exceed $500. In 1996 this amount went up to $9,500. Given the puny inflation rate these days, and because of the new rules, that contribution amount will probably stick at $9,500 for 1997, as well as remain the same for the next couple of years.

So, for now, put away the maximum allowed in these plans, and consider after-tax contributions as well.

•Reduce your insurance premiums. Don't wait until a policy is up for renewal to begin cutting insurance costs. Insurance agents often slash premiums for home improvements made during the year or reduced auto usage before a policy's anniversary.

•Update financial documents to account for family changes. Marriages, divorces, deaths, and births all should be properly reflected in financial paperwork.

•Stop paying high fees for bank services. Sky-high bank fees continue to silently suck up depositor money. Since 1990, the percentage increase in regular checking-account fees has risen three times the rate of inflation, according to a study by U.S. Public Interest Research Group, a consumer-watchdog organization in Washington, D.C.

•Consider a fat holiday gift to kids. It's a year-in and year-out oversight — when jingle bells ring their Pavlovian influence on holiday givers, it becomes easy to forget that the dull, old tax code still provides breaks for the generous of mind. The IRS lets taxpayers give $10,000 each to as many people as they wish, tax free. It's a smart way to keep estates under the $600,000 mark, after which assets are taxed from 37 percent to as high as 60 percent. So, at this time of year, cash-strapped parents should consider shifting wealth to their more lightly taxed offspring. If you happen to be a trustee for someone you'd like to spoil riches on, you can make annual gifts to existing irrevocable life insurance or education trusts, but you must mail the beneficiaries a notice stating that a contribution was made on their behalf, and specify the amount. Otherwise, you won't qualify for the exclusion.

•Rethink investments. High-income taxpayers should take advantage of the spread between their top tax rates and the 28 percent capital-gains tax by investing in top-shelf growth stocks or growth funds.

•Consolidate your debt. Borrowers who pay 15 percent interest in dealer financing for a $25,000 car, or 18 percent or more on a $10,000 credit card balance, should consider cutting that cost by consolidating this debt into a low-rate home-equity loan or credit line. Cardholders who roll over balances, as 65 percent do, will save $950 transferring a $10,000 card balance at 18 percent to a home-equity loan at 8.5 percent (not including loan fees). Also, up to $100,000 in home-equity interest is still tax-deductible.

It's Happening

Harvest festival is Sept. 26

The Farmers Market moves to South Main Street in Cohasset Village Sept. 26 for a Fall Harvest Festival. South Main Street will be closed to make room for the Farmers Market and other activities for families.

The festivities will include live folk music from 3 to 7 p.m., storytelling by well-known artist Diane Edgecomb (3:30 and 4:45 p.m.), face painting, clowns, balloons, pony rides, hair braiding and children's painting by students at South Shore Art Center. All events are free.

Consignment Shop volunteers honored

Cohasset Consignment Shop's manager, Andy Merrill, will honor, and brief, more than 125 volunteers from the South Shore at a brunch Wednesday, Oct. 2, from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m., at Kimball's.

Merrill said proceeds from the new enlarged consignment shop, located on Route 3A in Cushing Plaza, provide the major funding for the Social Service League's pneumonia shots, counseling and support groups, New Friends program, nursing services and Keep Well Clinics, which include blood pressure screening, weight, blood sugar testing and nutritional education for individuals living in Cohasset, Hingham, Hull, Scituate and Norwell.

Consignments will be accepted Monday through Friday, from 10 to 11:30 a.m. Beginning Thursday, Sept. 26, and continuing every Thursday through Oct. 24, sales and consignments will be made from 6 to 8 p.m.

To volunteer or for further information, call 383-0771 or 383-0687.

Fall shoppers are invited to view the selection of almost-new famous Austrian Geiger jackets, cashmere sweaters, Ralph Lauren cardigans in fall colors as well as children's clothing, including Polly Flanders smocked dresses.

Jane Russell is president of the league.

Chicago soloist to perform at St. Stephen's Church

As part of its "Music at St. Stephen's Concert Series," St. Stephen's Church, Cohasset, will present mezzo-soprano Evelyn Czaja in recital Sunday, Oct. 6, at 3 p.m. Dr. Elaine Kwon will accompany Czaja in works of Bach, Schubert, Donizetti, Ralph Vaughan Williams, Persichetti and Dvorak.

Czaja sang with the former Repertory Opera Theater of Oak Park, Ill., Chicago Opera Theater, DuPage Opera in Illinois, Lake Shore Symphony and the Northwest Symphony. She is an avid stage director and has been music director for several area high school musicals.

Czaja holds a bachelor of music degree from Rosary College, Illinois, and a master of arts in applied vocal pedagogy from Northeastern Illinois University, Chicago. She also teaches private voice and is a member of the Music Teachers National Association, National Association of Teachers of Singing, Musicians Club of Women and MacDowell Artists Association.

The church is located at 16 Highland Ave., Cohasset, and is handicapped accessible. Free-will offerings will be accepted at the concert. For more details, call 383-1083.

Scout reunion is slated

A reunion for all Troop 28 Boy Scouts, active and past, and troop leaders and committee members, active and past, is being planned for Sunday, Oct. 20. The event will be held at Kimballs in Cohasset, from 1 to 5 p.m. The troop hopes to match the enthusiasm for the 75th anniversary reunion which was held in 1991 and was extremely well attended and enjoyed by all.

The planning committee has a list of more than 450 former and current Scouts and Scout Leaders and would like to update this list prior to an official mailing in September. If you know of any Troop 28 members who may have moved in the past few years, or who may not be on our list, please call planning committee member Mary McElroy, 383-0505.

Call for entries at SSAC

South Shore Art Center has announced a call for entries for its annual Blue Ribbon Members Exhibition, which runs from Oct. 4 to Nov. 11. A complimentary opening reception for the public is set for Oct. 4 from 6 to 8 p.m. Entries may be delivered to the center at 119 Ripley Road, Cohasset, on Tuesday, Oct. 1, from 10 a.m. to 8 p.m.

Work must be framed, wired and ready to hand, and 3D art must include a pedestal. Pick-up will be Nov. 10 from 4 to 6 p.m. and Nov. 12, from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. Membership dues must be current throughout the run of the exhibition. Works submitted usually include watercolor, pastel, oil, wood carvings, sculpture, charcoal drawings, photography, clay and mixed media.

Two docent lectures will be presented. Outreach Director Allison Moskow will speak on the art of collection Oct. 24 at 6:30 p.m., and Gallery artist Virginia Avery will discuss the Blue Ribbon show Nov. 3 at 2 p.m. The gallery is open Tuesday through Saturday fro 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. and Sunday from noon to 4 p.m. Admission to the exhibit and the lectures is free.

The Blue Ribbon Exhibition offers members of SSAC the opportunity to enter one work. Members have the privilege of entering two specific member-designated exhibits annually, the fall Blue Ribbon and the Festival exhibition in June. The center is wheelchair accessible.

For more details, call 383-ARTS.

Collectors' choice exhibit at South Shore Art Center

South Shore Art Center, 119 Ripley Road, Cohasset, will exhibit original art from private and corporate collections Saturday and Sunday, Sept. 28 and 29, in the Bancroft and Dillon galleries. The eclectic display will include works by Eugene Delacroix, Paul Klee, Pablo Picasso, Ali, Anasazi Indian, John Tracey, Mikoto Yabe, Houcol Indian and C.R. Loring. Sixty artists will be represented.

Exhibition viewing hours are Sept. 28, 10 a.m. to 4 p.m., and Sept. 29, from noon to 4 p.m. Admission is $5. A 30-minute docent lecture and gallery tour on Sunday at 2 p.m. are included in the price.

The exhibition will open with a gala reception and dinner Friday, beginning at 6 p.m. Tickets are $80. For information, call 383-ARTS, Ext. 11. The center is wheelchair accessible, and proceeds will benefit the art center's many outreach, education and exhibition programs.

Teen Center news noted

Thursday, during the Farmer's Market, the Teen Center will open its doors to anyone interested in taking a tour of the center, which will be open from 4 to 6 p.m.

The Teen Center will also be open this Friday and Saturday, Sept. 27 and 28, from 7 to 10 p.m. Oct. 4, there will be a Poker Night, so mark your calendars.

Health care for women is topic at AAUW meeting

Vicki Donlan of the Spence Center for Women's Health will speak at the Oct. 8 meeting of the American Association of University Women, Hingham area branch. The meeting will be held at 7:30 p.m. in the library media center of Plymouth River School, off High Street, Hingham. The topic will be "Health Care for Women."

Donlan is regional marketing director for the center, a full-service medical facility focused on the needs of women. She is responsible for Spence's three centers located in Braintree, Cambridge and Wellesley as marketing director. Along with traditional health care, Spence Center provides additional services such as acupuncture, muscular therapy, nutrition counseling and chiropractic.

Donlan was co-founder and first executive director of the South Shore Women's Business Network and was honored by the U.S. Small Business Administration as New England's Women in Business advocate for 1994. She is on the board of directors of the Center for Women & Enterprise, Inc., an organization providing business technical assistance to women pursuing self-employment in the metropolitan Boston area.

Donlan is a frequent speaker for business, professional and trade organizations on topic ranging from networking and marketing and sales to healthcare.

AAUW promotes equity for all women and girls, lifelong education and positive societal change. Its monthly meetings are free and open to the public.

The Rev. Jean 'Jenny' Rankin is the new interim minister at First Parish in Cohasset.

First Parish in Cohasset welcomes the Rev. 'Jenny'

The Unitarian Universalists at First Parish in Cohasset, still in transition after the tragic death of previous Minister, Ed Atkinson, have welcomed with joy and enthusiasm Interim Minister Reverend Jean Margaret (Jenny) Rankin. This is the first time in its 249-year history the parish has invited a woman to lead it, and it is finding the experience exhilarating. The Rev. Rankin will serve for one year while a search committee, chaired by Jane Goedecke, selects a permanent candidate to present for congregational approval.

The Rev. Jenny Rankin, who invites participants of every age to call her "Jenny," is a graduate cum laude of Princeton University, 1979, and received her Master of Divinity degree from the Harvard Divinity School. She was ordained in 1988 and has served as Interim Chaplain at Tufts University, as Interim Minister at the Hopedale Unitarian Church, and most recently as Interim Minister at the Second Parish in Hingham. Her home is in Boston with her husband and children, ages 2 1/2 and 5. She is commuting to Cohasset on a three-quarters time schedule, and is looking forward to participating in the wider community whenever possible. Already she has soaked in (literally, on a wet, wild day) the special nurture that Sandy Beach offers.

Given the brief time she has with the parish, her focus is on helping the church prepare for a settled ministry, in addition to the normal pastoral tasks of preaching, teaching, counseling, and performing wedding and memorial services and child dedications.

Areas of special interest to the Rev. Jenny are AIDS ministry, social justice and feminist theology. She plans to give special emphasis to family support and adult education. "Spiritual Autobiography," an adult education program open to the community at large, will be offered this fall. Further information is available at the parish office in the parish house at 23 North Main St., Cohasset. Tel.: 383-1100. Office hours are 9 a.m. to 2 p.m., Monday through Thursday.

Sunday, Sept. 29, the Rev. Jenny's sermon topic will be "Where Are We Going Spiritually?" The senior choir, under the direction of Carolyn Curtis, will present Hassler's "Cantate Domino" and Arcadelt's "Hear My Prayer, O God." As always, visitors are warmly welcomed at Sunday services in the Meeting House on the Common at 10:30 a.m. Child care is available in the parish house across the street from the meeting house.

Rte. 3A burglary being investigated

Police are investigating an early morning burglary at Cohasset Food Mart, 130 King St., during which a undetermined amount of cash, the safe and some lottery tickets were stolen.

Officers responded to a burglar alarm at the store which came in at 3:29 a.m., Thursday, Sept. 19. They discovered the right-front window of the store was smashed out.

Police Sgt. Robert Jackson said the incident is under investigation by Cohasset Det. Rick Grassie and the Bureau of Criminal Investigation (BCI), Plymouth County, which is under contract with Cohasset police to assist in these matters.

Police grants are awarded

Chief Brian Noonan said the Cohasset Police Department has received two grants totalling $6,500 from the state Executive Office of Public Safety through its community policing program.

Noonan said the money will be used to buy equipment for police bike and foot patrols.

Traffic control is beefed up

Police Chief Brian Noonan warned drivers that police traffic control has been increased now that school is underway.

"We've stepped up radar especially along the bus routes," Noonan said.

He said citizens have notified police and asked for increased enforcement.

Rocky Lane residents worry about rail crossing

By ANDI WEISSMAN
Special to the Mariner

Residents of a cul-de-sac in west Cohasset told MBTA and town officials last Wednesday that train tracks planned to cross the entrance to their street would block their only means of exit in the event of an emergency.

Residents of Rocky Lane, many of whom have young children, expressed strong concerns that a planned grade crossing could block the entrance to the cul-de-sac. If a train should be stopped in the tracks for any reason, residents would be stranded in the cul-de-sac, and police or fire officials would be kept out in the event of an emergency, residents told the town's Greenbush Mitigation Committee.

Resident Patrick Voke said the concerns are heightened by the fact that there are 13 children under the age of eight living on the street.

"There's probably more young kids on the street than any other in town," Voke told the Mariner. "It's a big concern for us."

MBTA officials said it was unlikely a train would be stopped on a grade crossing, but admitted they did not have statistics available.

"We all agree the chances are rare, but if by some slim margin it should happen, how can we get in or out?" asked resident Carol Davis.

MBTA and committee officials discussed looking into creating an access road for Rocky Lane as a possible solution to the problem.

Meanwhile, a commuter rail station in Cohasset Village is a viable alternative to the one proposed to run alongside Route 3A, MBTA officials said.

Andrew Brennan, MBTA manager of environmental affairs, presented plans for the Cohasset Village station, which is an alternative to the one currently planned for the site occupied by Barry Waste Company.

Brennan said the MBTA proposed the site in response to Cohasset's interest in moving the station to the village center. Instead of going by the north of the Strawberry Parfait outdoor restaurant, the tracks would run by on its southern side.

The alternative plan also calls for the MBTA to expand the municipal parking lot on Brook Street from 100 to 450 parking spaces. One hundred of those spaces would be clearly marked as municipal parking, Brennan said. This lot would contain 50 more parking spaces than the one proposed at Barry Waste.

"We believe more people will use this station (than the North Cohasset site) because it is closer to where they live," said Barry Faulkner, an MBTA engineer.

In response to a question from committee Chairman Dean Rizzo, Brennan said the MBTA would be willing to consider reducing the number of parking spaces, but said he would "strongly advise against it." If the parking is too limited, commuters would use all the parking spaces they could find in the streets, and traffic would be increased by drivers dropping off passengers, he said.

The station plans are not set in stone, said Brennan. He added that MBTA General Manager Pat Moynahan said the recommendations of the mitigation committee will weigh heavily on a decision about the station location.

In order to build the Cohasset Village station, the MBTA would have to acquire the Carey residence at the entrance to James Lane and a portion of the South Main Street property owned by Eugene Price, according to the plans. Price said Wednesday he would be interested in selling his property for a fair price.

Joseph Rosano, owner of the Strawberry Parfait, expressed an interest in negotiating the sale of his property to the MBTA, saying he was concerned that fumes from the trains would adversely affect diners at his outdoor restaurant.

"I don't think there's any question locomotives have a nauseous odor," he said.

Brennan said the MBTA would be open to discussions, but expressed some surprise.

"We started off with the assumption you wanted the Strawberry Parfait in place as an institution," he said.

Faulkner said one possible hesitation for the MBTA is that the proposed village station would cost $3 million more than the one originally proposed for Route 3A, due to the expected excavation of a rock ledge east of Pleasant Street.

"A $3 million increase is enough to be a concern," he said.

Brennan said the mitigation committee and the MBTA need to come to an agreement on two things, the placement of the Cohasset station and how to address noise levels at grade crossings.

The next joint meeting of the committee and the MBTA is planned for Oct. 1.

Village stop mulled over

By CHARLENE VANDINI
Cohasset Mariner

The chairman of the town's mitigation committee assured a dozen residents that no concensus has been reached regarding a train station in Cohasset Village, but state transportation officials said they would like a decision within four to six weeks.

Dean Rizzo said Tuesday that the village station location was being considered because some residents have expressed a desire for this site. The village location eliminates the additional site work in wetlands areas around the former Winter Gardens property, and will cause the train to slow down and stop as it travels through the village.

He asked for a traffic impact study before a recommendation is made on the station site.

MBTA environmental affairs manager Andrew Brennan said the T could not provide a detail study with traffic counts but could provide some level of analysis. He added that the T would like to have "a real picture of where the town wants to go" within the next two months.

Vote on village station called for

A group of citizens called for a town-wide vote on a proposed Cohasset Village train station Sept. 25, saying the station would cause more problems than benefits.

A dozen abutters of the proposed site told the Citizens' Advisory Committee last week that construction would lead to property damage and parking problems if the station were moved to the center of town from its original location on Route 3A, in a site currently occupied by Barry Waste Services.

"We think there's enough question about where the station would be that it would make sense for the town to have a vote on it," committee member Peter Pearce told the Cohasset Mariner.

Traffic study needed for rail station, officials say

Selectmen want more information about increased traffic and parking in the village before deciding whether or not to back a village train station.

Dean Rizzo of the Greenbush Mitigation Committee told the board Monday that the MBTA is looking for an answer "one way or the other from us" before continuing to work on the new plans which move the station from Route 3A to the village near the town parking lot.

Selectmen Chairman Merle Brown said that was "putting the cart before the horse" and before reaching a decision, the board needed a traffic study which the MBTA should provide.

Members of the Greenbush committee also want to gauge public support for a village station.

Rizzo said some businesses had concerns but were willing to work with the MBTA. However, about a dozen residents attended the citizens' mitigation meeting last week to object to a village station (see related story), he

Open space action plan unveiled at hearing

By JASON BOUFFARD
Cohasset Mariner

Cohasset has taken the next step in retaining its small-town atmosphere.

At a public hearing at Town Hall Sept. 25, the Open Space Advisory Committee unveiled a draft of its Cohasset Open Space Five-Year Action Plan.

The plan was designed in accordance with the results of a recent town survey which polled the community's views on Cohasset's open space. It will make the town eligible for state assistance in acquiring conservation land and developing recreational resources.

A draft will be submitted to the State Division of Conservation Services within the week.

The plan addresses three main areas of importance: maintaining environmental health — namely preserving clean drinking water and protecting wetlands and forests; protecting and enhancing wildlife; and providing greater promotion of the town's open space, including better access.

Once the plan is approved, the committee will oversee a series of actions to determine which areas are most likely to be acquired as conservation land and also to assess any environmental issues that should be attended to throughout the town.

The plan addresses three main areas of importance: maintaining environmental health — namely preserving clean drinking water and protecting wetlands and forests; protecting and enhancing wildlife; and providing greater promotion of the town's open space, including better access.

The plan establishes 10 goals which will address one of the three main areas. Under each goal are a series of proposed actions aimed at achieving each goal. For instance, under the goal "safe and sufficient water supply resources" are several actions designed to help attain that goal. They include mapping the aquifers and wellhead protection zones of the Elms Meadow and Sohier Street public wells, reducing road salt use on King Street and writing and distribution an information sheet on the water quality impacts of activities by homeowners.

Planning Consultant Larissa Brown pointed out that most of the actions called for by the plan are not expensive. For example, printing information sheets and organizing volunteer groups would require

Floats' storage a problem

An irate Parker Avenue resident told selectmen Monday that they had no business allowing the yacht club to store its floats on the Hagerty property.

Russ Bonetti demanded to know why selectmen had not contacted the Hagerty committee, the conservation commission, or abutters about the matter and questioned if it was within their jurisdiction to allow the storage of floats there.

Selectmen Chairman Merle Brown said the Hagerty committee, which is studying uses for the property, is not involved in such matters and it was not a problem for conservation. Brown admitted that he did not know about the floats being stored until after they were there. Town Administrator Gregory Doyon gave the yacht club permission, Brown said.

Selectmen said they would try to find another spot for the floats. They explained the yacht club stores floats at Bassings Beach but had no place to store these new floats.

They are also concerned that the floats, which are stacked up, could pose a hazard to children.

"It's like a jungle gym," Brown said.

Bonetti wondered why the yacht club, a private group, was allowed to use town property.

Brown said it was because the club is a non-profit, town-wide service.

"If I declare myself non-profit, can I store my things there?" Bonetti asked.

Brown cut the debate short and said the board would look into the problem.

Bonetti, who raised the issue during the time set aside at 8 p.m. for public comment at the weekly selectmen's meetings, said he would try to get a spot on the agenda to discuss the matter further.

The Yacht Club floats are temporarily stored on the town-owned Hagerty property. An angry Parker Avenue resident questioned selectmen Monday about why this was allowed (see related item, this page).

Cohasset's Week

Navigation Act on target

Selectman Peter Pratt said Tuesday night that the Cohasset Navigation Act, which will re-draw the federal lines of jurisdiction in Cohasset Harbor, ld be signed by President Clinton this week.

Pratt said the bill, which was attached to waterways legislation, has passed both houses of Congress.

He said the news is significant for two reasons. Firstly, it will pave the way for the Army Corps of Engineers to access federal money to dredge the harbor channel, a project which could cost as much as $1.5 million. And secondly, it means the yacht club and Margin Street floats are no longer encroaching on federal waters.

This legislation is an important step in the joint federal/state/town dredging project in Cohasset Harbor which is critical to the future of Cohasset's commercial fishermen and recreational boaters, officials say. With the state's help, the town is responsible for dredging areas in the harbor, while the Army Corps, a federal agency, will tackle the harbor channel.

Applications due Oct. 15 for cultural council grants

Grade crossings for Greenbush on the table

By CHARLENE VANDINI
Cohasset Mariner

Cohasset could be a "whistle-free town" if the MBTA's proposed grade crossing plans are used for restored commuter rail service on the Greenbush line.

State transportation officials told the town's mitigation committee Tuesday that grade crossings create the greatest noise impact and pose the greatest safety risks, but "infrastructure changes" can address both those problems.

Andrew Brennan, MBTA manager of environmental affairs, said train whistles are required at each grade crossing, but some towns have successfully imposed whistle bans to lessen noise, and state legislation has allowed the bans.

The Federal Railroad Administration is expected to overturn all whistle bans, effective November 1, but the FRA is now developing new regulations that will waive the whistle requirement while addressing the safety issues at grade crossings.

Brennan said the grade crossings can be designed to be "idiot-proof," in response to drivers who "will take a chance on beating the train," and circumvent the gates.

Barry Faulkner, a consultant from Sverdrup Corporation, explained the streets that approach the grade crossings could be widened to allow a 100- to 200-foot long, four-foot wide, nine-inch high median to prevent cars driving around a closed gate.

In other cases, the T and the town will consider closing some grade crossings, and consolidating others that are close together.

Preliminary design alternatives for the nine grade crossings in Cohasset include the possible closing of the crossings at Smith Place, at Spring Street, at Sestito Lane and Castle Road, and at Lincoln Lane, creating a "hammerhead turnaround" where the road ends.

Access to Smith Place could be made from Cushing Road and Pleasant Street if the grade crossing is closed there, Faulkner said.

In the case of Spring Street, where there are two crossings within 450 feet, the T has recommended closing one crossing and using the medians and gates at the other.

Option 1 would close the east crossing and provide for a 110-foot median on the north side approach, and a 175-foot median on the south approach. This would require property acquisitions from two residents on the west, to allow for road widening and sidewalks, Faulkner said.

The other alternative would close the west crossing, providing a "hammerhead turnaround" on the north side of the track, removal of ledge to improve visibility around a curve in the road, and shifting the intersection at Pond Street, with a 200-foot long median on all three approaches to the crossing.

Robert Sturdy, the planning board's designee to the mitigation committee, asked the T officials to consider "something other than poured concrete with weeds" for the medians. He suggested landscaping, bricks, or cobblestones.

He also asked the T to pursue a direct communication system between the train operator and Cohasset public safety personnel, in the event of an accident, injury, or illness on the train, or a similar incident on the tracks.

In response to a question from Selectman Peter Pratt, Faulkner said there is standard design features to synchronize traffic signals so traffic does not back up. This, Pratt noted, is particularly needed at King, Forest, and North Main streets.

Pointing out that the moderator will not allow resolutions, selectmen immediately nixed the suggestion of putting the matter before voters at the October special town meeting.

But Selectman Michael Sullivan said that any vote will likely be split and it is up to the selectmen to make the decision.

"We need preliminary information from which to make a decision," he stressed.

Selectman Nan Roth said she wanted to hear more opinions about the parking and how many people would walk or drive to the station.

"I wasn't thinking 450 spaces," she said about the proposal.

Rizzo said the MBTA has allotted 350 spaces for train commuters and 100 for municipal use.

In a related matter, Michael Dick of the Greenbush Mitigation Committee asked selectmen to ask other town boards to provide guidance to the mitigation committee.

Dick explained that he's gone through the MBTA's draft environmental impact report page by page to pick out Cohasset issues which possibly need to be addressed. He cited the town's well fields, the effect of diesel emission on air quality, and zoning issues as examples.

Town Administrator Gregory Doyon said he would send a letter to the board of health, zoning board and water commission asking for them to help.

Dick, who sits on the conservation commission and fellow mitigation member Robert Sturdy, a planning board member, will provide guidance from their respective boards, Dick said.

Lawyer worries local party host won't get a fair trial

By MARY FORD
Cohasset Mariner

An attorney for a local man accused of providing alcohol to minors at a graduation party last spring is concerned that his client will not be able to receive a fair trial in Quincy because of the barrage of publicity surrounding the allegations.

Bernard Hamill said Monday he has not ruled out asking for a change in location for the trial of his client, John Lennon of Surry Drive, who is charged with serving alcohol to minors and contributing to the delinquency of a child, both misdemeanors.

Cohasset police began investigating the party last June after an alcohol-related crash claimed the life of one of the guests, Gregory Smith, 18, of Marshfield. Police sought the complaints after several witnesses, all minors, who were also guests at the party, came forward.

In August, after hearing testimony of several minors and a 16-year-old juvenile, a clerk magistrate charged Lennon with providing alcohol to a minor but said there was not enough evidence to charge him with contributing to the delinquency of a child.

Saying the matter should be heard before a judge, Cohasset police appealed. Following a closed-door hearing last week in which the juvenile testified again, a Quincy District Court judge charged Lennon with contributing to the delinquency of a child, which can carry a penalty of up to a $500 fine or a year in prison or both.

Allan Tufankjian, a Brockton attorney, representing Smith's parents, Donald and Donna Smith, in a wrongful death civil suit against Lennon, said Monday that the ruling "evidences the attitude of the people running the party of not only serving those under 21 but serving at least one 16-year-old.

"That's pretty young to be served alcohol," he said.

Hamill denies that Lennon served any minor alcohol. He said the 16-year-old's testimony was the same at both hearings.

"The witness stated unequivocally in the hearing that John Lennon did not serve her and as far as she knew, he did not know she had liquor and in no way encouraged her to have liquor.

"In spite of that, the judge issued the complaint which seems to be issued without factual foundation," he said.

Hamill said Lennon hired a bartender to monitor the serving of the alcohol. He said the bartender refused to serve Smith or any other minor and secured the liquor and put it away when he went off duty.

Cohasset police Sgt. Robert Jackson said the judge "felt he had enough evidence to issue complaints on all the charges."

Although he notes it would be very difficult to change the location of the trial, Hamill said news reports in The Patriot Ledger contain incorrect and erroneous information regarding the case which could hurt Lennon's constitutional right to a fair trial.

Smith's parents said they are concerned Lennon's attorney may attempt to discredit their son during the upcoming trial as a way to defend his client. Yet both parents believe the ordeal of a trial is necessary to prevent a tragedy like the one they have suffered from happening again.

Lennon will be arraigned on the charges Oct. 4 at Quincy District Court, Jackson said. The charge of providing alcohol to a minor can be punishable by a fine of up to $2,000 or six months in prison or both.

Mariner reporter Rob Rogers also contributed to this story.

Ten minutes for walk-ins allowed at board meeting

Selectmen set aside 10 minutes at 8 p.m. on their meeting nights to address any concerns from members of the public who have issues that are not on the agenda.

If the matter cannot be handled briefly, it will be placed on a future agenda, selectmen said.

REAL ESTATE UPDATE

IF THE IRS CALLS

QUESTION: We sold our home two years ago and took a lot of deductions. We were just audited by the IRS and I had a problem substantiating the deductions. How do you minimize this type of trauma?

ANSWER: Make a permanent file of all ownership papers – mortgage, cancelled checks showing purchase costs, etc. Also keep all evidence of home improvements – receipts, contracts, and cancelled checks.

Document maintenance costs for fixing up within 90 days of the sale. Many of these items can be deducted from your capital gains and reduce the tax you'll have to pay as well as satisfy an audit.

Village stop mulled over at mitigation meeting

But residents criticized the mitigation committee for what they considered the lack of notice of the village station.

Gail Whitehouse of Ash Street said more residents in opposition to the station would have attended the meeting but it conflicted with parent-teacher conferences at the Osgood School.

Whitehouse said there would be inadequate parking for a village station and cars would congest residential streets, as they do at other train stations.

Brennan said parking has been successfully controlled with enforcement of parking restrictions, and can be eliminated if sufficient parking is provided. A station in Cohasset Village would provide parking for an additional 350 cars

Brennan told the residents that the state officials had specifically instructed the T to evaluate village locations for train stations.

"She was talking about Cohasset," Brennan said, referring to Trudy Coxe, state secretary of environmental affairs. "I have a responsibility to do this level of analysis."

Whitehouse asked Brennan if the T could build the station at Cohasset Village even if every resident in town opposed it.

Brennan replied that the T could, but "we can live with" the other site at the former Cohasset Winter Gardens on Route 3A.

In his opinion, the village is a better location, he said, but added the T originally looked at the Route 3A site on the instructions of a previous board of selectmen in the mid-1980s.

The planning board's designee to the mitigation committee Robert Sturdy said commuters from outside Cohasset are unlikely to drive to a Cohasset Village station because the stations proposed at North Scituate and Nantasket Junction will be more convenient.

The Route 3A location "meets every 'not in my backyard' comment, but it's not convenient for anyone," Sturdy said, adding that new businesses will open on Route 3A, near the train station to serve commuters, and "further drain the economic vitality of the Village."

Brennan agreed, calling Cohasset "unique" because the majority of riders using the village station will be residents. Where train stations have been located in villages, there have been high numbers of walkers, he added.

Whitehouse and other residents scoffed at Brennan's statements that nearby residents would walk, and also at the number of Cohasset residents who work in Boston.

"They'll walk?" Whitehouse said.

Rizzo replied, "They should."

Selectman Peter Pratt said he was neither in favor of nor opposed to the Cohasset Village station, but said there is a "moral obligation" to consider the available options and allow people to evaluate them.

Towards the evaluation, Pratt asked Brennan if any funds would be available to Cohasset to pay for an independent analysis to answer residents' questions about the two sites.

Brennan said he had no ability to "give you taxpayers' money."

Pratt also questioned Brennan on the T's decision to "pick and choose" to comply with federal handicapped access requirements that the train platforms must be 800 feet long, while it has not complied with federal historic preservation requirements.

The T is complying with historic preservation review, and going through with the federal environmental review process, he said.

"We're in the middle of a historic preservation review and if anyone tells you differently, they're mistaken," Brennan said.

Rizzo said the mitigation committee will hold an open forum on an as yet undetermined date, to solicit residents' comments on the station sites.

Vote on Village station called for by opponents

The group's opposition to moving the station to Cohasset Village came as a surprise to the Citizens Advisory Committee.

"Since we've been in existence, the one thing I would say we definitely have heard is they want it (the station) there," said committee member Mary Foley.

The committee held the forum to gain more community input before finalizing its recommendations to the Mitigation Committee. About 12 citizens attended last week's meeting, in contrast to a similar hearing last August attended by only one resident.

In order to build a parking lot next to the Village station, the MBTA would blast a rock ledge east of Pleasant Street, which some citizens described as "a glacier." The blasting could cause cracks in foundations of some nearby homes, many of which are more than 100 years old, some citizens said.

"My house is going to be 20, 30 feet from that ledge," said Michael Carp, 91 South Main St.

He said the proposed 450-space parking lot would be larger than necessary for Cohasset, and suggested the MBTA either reduce the size of the lot or build a two-story garage.

Others worried the construction would limit the amount of parking already in town, through large equipment and gravel dug out of the rock ledge.

One woman, who did not identify herself, said she was concerned the station would create more traffic in the village, while other residents questioned the town's claim that a station in the Village would revitalize area businesses.

"What is the business? What's downtown? Are we planning a big shopping center?" asked Cindy MacCleave, 9 James Lane.

She suggested the town vote on the issue to draw out other residents.

"They're all home, they just don't want to come out," she said. "But if they had something to come out for, I know they would."

The committee decided to add sections to its report that will address the concerns raised at the meeting, including a recommendation that construction would not interfere with parking in Cohasset Village.

"If it becomes an issue, we can point to it and say, 'We didn't want this to be a problem, now it's a problem," Pearce said.

The committee also plans to include a recommendation that parking be made free along the length of the commuter rail.

Committee members found last week's meeting to be a success.

"We certainly did better than last time (in terms of a turnout), and we got some good comments," said Foley.

The committee plans to finalize its report at a meeting Oct. 17 and deliver the final product to the Mitigation Committee by Oct. 21.

Black tie affair given in honor of Doris Flint's cousin

Doris Flint cut short her visit to her daughter, Sandra, in Boulder, Colorado this week to return home and attend the black tie dinner given at the Loeb House at Harvard in honor of her cousin, Dr. Walter Kerr, Jr. The first professorship in urology at the Harvard Medical School was awarded in March: The Dr. Walter Stratton Kerr, Jr. Professorship.

The dinner was attended by more than 100 doctors and former students of Dr. Kerr from all over the country.

Congratulations, "Bud" — you deserve it!! Happy retirement!

Word has it that Maryanne and Sean Grady, former Cohasseters who now reside in Sandwich, have been out buying lots of little things in PINK lately.

The Gradys are the proud parents of a brand-new baby girl, Kellie Anne, who tipped the scales at a pleasingly plump 9 pounds 9 ounces on Aug. 29.

Kellie's big brothers Timmy and Tommy were on hand to welcome her along with her grandparents Rose and Joe Dooley of South Dennis and Betty and Tom Grady of Ohio.

Come and visit us soon, Kellie!

If you see Tom and Leslie Chamberlain out and about with bigger smiles than usual — we know why.

The Chamberlains recently greeted a brand-new grandson, Zachary Paul Chamberlain, who arrived on the scene Sept. 15 weighing in at a substantial 9 lbs. 5 oz.

His big brother T.J. surely has his hands full!

Zach's happy parents are Jennifer and Toby Chamberlain of Scituate. Sharing long-distance hugs are his maternal grandparents, Priscilla and Earle Williams of Woodstock, Vt. and Peter and Elizabeth Kerner of Chicago, Ill.

Kathleen Berger of North Main Street has just returned from Russia after adopting four-month old Hayley Olivia. Daughter, Alexandra, was also adopted from Russia three years ago.

Hayley joins five brothers and another sister who were all at the airport last weekend to meet her for the first time.

Welcome to Cohasset, Hayley!

What a great job Dean Rizzo, Anna Abbruzzese and others did organizing the weekly Farmers' Markets which were topped off with last week's harvest fest!

The markets provided not only a great way to buy fresh food and visit with friends and acquaintances — but got many of us down to the village and into our great shops and businesses there!

Cohasset Village is a jewel which is really starting to shine thanks to the Chamber of Commerce and committed residents and merchants who are going to MAKE IT HAPPEN!

Well done to all!

That's about all the news for this week.

Sallyann will be back next week and this editor can't wait! It's amazing how much work it is to pull together a weekly column and here at the Cohasset Mariner, we truly appreciate Sallyann's hard work and dedication over the years.

Be sure to call her with your news or drop your items off at Cohasset News on Brook Street.

EDITORIAL

The pulse of Cohasset

This week, we're starting something new.

Actually, it's not entirely new to us here at the Cohasset Mariner office on South Street in Hingham where we also edit The Hingham Journal in which we started a reader survey line a year ago with great success.

Our reader survey provides a way for citizens to call in and register an opinion about whatever the question is that week.

It's entirely unscientific and we accept the fact that some who feel strongly one way or the other may try to skew the results by calling more than once.

But still, we think it's a way to get a sense of how you feel about the issues.

This week, we kick off our survey with a question about the possibility of a village rail station.

Will a downtown stop help revitalize the village or will a Route 3A station pull business and shops away from the village? This issue, in addition to the related parking, traffic and environmental matters face selectmen as they grapple with this decision in the weeks ahead.

Selectman Michael Sullivan noted this week that any vote on where to put the station will likely be split and it's up to the selectmen to make a decision after weighing all the information on both proposed sites.

But as they compile the necessary data — selectmen need to know what you think. The reader survey could be a way to find out.

Here at the Cohasset Mariner, we think we have our hand on the pulse of the community. So please give us a call. Just dial the number and follow directions.

Please note, the survey does not replace letters to the editor, which are always welcome.

If you have ideas about future survey questions, give us a call at 749-0031.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Volunteer labor appreciated

To the Editor:

Last week, Linda Litchfield, Cohasset assistant collector, had printed in-house the second quarter real estate tax bills. This was the first time we printed them in-house, and Linda was running out of time to get them all in the mail.

So Linda called the Elder Affairs office looking for help, and of course they responded.

Virginia Anderson, Mary Andracchio, Mary Davis, Phyllis Leighton, Dot Lincoln, Tillie Nardo and her sidekick Olga Sawchuck and Connie Tolman made short work of the project.

To some this might not seem like much, but as Treasurer/Collector, it saved my very limited staff at least one week's labor.

Reader Survey question for October 3, 1996

Cohasset selectmen and the MBTA are considering having the train station in Cohasset Village which would be in lieu of the station now planned for Route 3A at the former skating rink site.
Do you support a village train station?

Press 1..... Yes

Press 2..... No

All responses to this week's question must be received by 12 o'clock noon on Tuesday, October 8.

The Cohasset Mariner reader survey is not intended to be a scientific poll. Our survey questions are usually drawn from issues currently facing our readers, to "take the pulse" of the community on a subject. Sometimes, we will ask a question just for fun.

To allow our readers to freely express their views, we do not monitor the calls, nor are we able to identify the telephone numbers of our callers. Unfortunately, this means that one person may call in multiple responses, to tip the survey results towards his own opinion. However, it is also possible for a person with an opposing point of view to likewise make dozens of calls. We hope it evens out in the end.

Our readers are invited to record a comment after registering their responses to this week's question. Please speak clearly. We will print as many responses as space permits, but we reserve the right to edit lengthy comments.

With The Candidates

Delahunt challenges primary recount results

Johnston, Teague face off in bitter ads

By ROB ROGERS
Cohasset Mariner

Phil Johnston is a man fighting a two-front war.

The Democratic contender for U.S. Rep. Gerry Studds' 10th District seat is pulling no punches in responding to blistering print and radio advertisements by Republican rival Ed Teague.

At the same time, Johnston is facing a court challenge from fellow Democrat William Delahunt following his narrow victory over Delahunt in the Sept. 17 primary and subsequent recount.

The continuing controversy over the primary vote has irritated Johnston, who has been working to marshal party resources in his campaign against Teague.

"This is outrageous," said Johnston, a resident of Tilden Road in Marshfield. "The vote was counted twice and counted fairly. It's definitely time to move forward."

Since scoring a 266-vote upset over former front-runner Delahunt in the primary two weeks ago, Johnston has received ringing endorsements from key Democratic leaders, including President Bill Clinton, Vice President Al Gore, Sen. Ted Kennedy, and — perhaps most importantly — Studds himself.

Yet the Delahunt campaign's demand for a recount — prompted by a large number of blank ballots cast in the crucial cities of Brockton and Weymouth — has prevented Johnston from tapping into Democratic National Committee funds and union donations.

"The only ramification of this recount, as far as we are concerned, was that the big money from the unions and the Democratic National Committee could not flow in until the recount was over," said Jane Lane, Johnston's press secretary. "[We need] more money for lawn signs, brochures, lapel stickers, and we haven't had that. We have been assured, as of today [Monday], that those checks were going to be cut."

More than 150 Johnston supporters participated in recounts within nine South Shore communities during the past week, Lane said. The recount added 221 votes to Delahunt's total, chiefly in the cities of Brockton and Weymouth, which provided the Norfolk district attorney with 193 votes. Yet the tally also added 138 votes to Johnston's total, confirming the candidate's election as Democratic nominee by a 181-vote margin.

"Saturday was difficult, just because [the recount] was so enormous in magnitude," Lane said. "Once we received the first two calls [from volunteers at recount sites] and hear how things were going, we knew it was going to be OK."

Although he urged his fellow Democrats "to come together for the general election" in a primary night speech, Delahunt said he planned to challenge the recount a few hours after Secretary of State William Galvin announced the results.

"I have instructed my attorneys to file legal action to contest the recount in the 10th Congressional District communities of Weymouth, Abington and Orleans," Delahunt said in a prepared statement Monday evening. "My purpose is to give voice to voters who braved a driving rain storm to vote and had their ballot 'blanked' by a flawed punch card system in these three communities. I will ask a Superior Court judge to examine these almost 1,000 contested ballots to record the clear intent of the voter to cast a ballot in this contest. We will ask for expedited action so that the Democratic Party can unite behind the winner of the recount process in the Superior Court."

The Johnston campaign urged Delahunt to restore party unity by accepting defeat gracefully.

"It seems to us that Phil has won twice now in the court of public opinion," Lane said. "Now Mr. Delahunt wants to take this to another arena. At some point, this has to stop. Phil is the Democratic candidate, his name is on the ballot, and we need to go forward."

Teague, for his part, has said that he understands the need for a recount and does not care whether he will face Johnston or Delahunt in November.

"It makes no impact. It never did and never would," Teague said, in a Sept. 19 campaign visit to Kingston.

Teague, a state representative from Yarmouth and the state House Minority Leader, has already begun an aggressive media campaign against Johnston.

A radio advertisement by the Teague campaign plays heavily upon Johnston's connection with former Gov. Michael Dukakis, whom Johnston served as former state secretary of health and human services. The ad suggests Johnston supported the prison furloughs Dukakis received widespread criticism for during his 1988 presidential campaign against George Bush.

"Ed Teague is trying to make this campaign a debate about the '80s and Dukakis," Johnston said. "I am trying to make it about the '90s and Newt Gingrich. Dukakis was a good governor, and I am proud of the role I played in helping the elderly and uninsured. But Dukakis is gone, now, and this campaign is not about recycling old issues — it is about Medicare, Medicaid, education, the environment and protecting a woman's right to choose."

Johnston has also dismissed as "erroneous allegations" claims by the Teague campaign that his volunteers have conducted high pressure "push polling" telephone calls, one of which allegedly reached Teague's 15-year-old daughter.

While Johnston has called Teague's advertisements "venomous, personal and factually wrong," Teague accused Johnston of beginning the round of negative advertising during the primary race, in which Johnston radio ads accused Delahunt of misspending campaign funds.

"Johnston and his dirty trick campaign consultant will do anything to try to win this campaign — just like he did in the primary against Bill Delahunt," said Teague, in a press release subtitled "Filthy Phil is At It Again." "I will not engage in slimeball tactics like Mr. Johnston. He ought to be ashamed of himself."

Although the two candidates are still establishing their debate schedules, both have agreed to meet in a Community Newspapers-sponsored debate Oct. 15 and on other occasions with the League of Women Voters and Marshfield radio station WATD. The two have also scheduled an appearance on the "Clapprood and Whitley" talk show on radio station WRKO.

Cohasset recount nets six votes for Johnston

By MARY FORD
Cohasset Mariner

Town Clerk Marion Douglas said Democratic congressional candidate Philip Johnston picked up a net gain of six votes over his nearest challenger, William Delahunt, following the Cohasset recount Saturday.

Cohasset was one of several towns on the South Shore and Cape Cod in the 10th Congressional District which conducted recounts of the Democratic ballots cast in the Sept. 17 primary election for the congressional seat being vacated by U.S. Rep. Gerry Studds, D-Cohasset.

Initially, Johnston received 275 Cohasset votes and after the recount, which was conducted from 10 a.m. to about 1:30 p.m. at town hall, he had 298. Norfolk County District Attorney Delahunt had 107 votes and picked up 17 in the recount for a total of 124.

Third-place finisher Ian Bowles went from 80 votes to 77, a loss of seven, Douglas said.

Cohasset and the other towns in the recount use the punch-card ballot system. If a card is not punched enough so light shines through, the ballot-counting machine records it as a blank. There were 79 blanks in the primary in Cohasset in the Democratic congressional race and 40 after Saturday's recount, which was done by hand.

In the district, Johnston's lead over Delahunt was narrowed from 266 to 181 votes. Delahunt's campaign said Monday, Delahunt will contest the recount in Weymouth, Abington and Orleans and ask a superior court judge to examine the about 1,000 contested ballots (see related story this page).

Douglas, who pointed out that "every voting system has its quirks," said she wouldn't object to trying out optical scanning ballot machines during a quiet election in Cohasset. Buying new machines would require town meeting approval, she said.

Troopers, small business group back Ed Teague

Ed Teague, the GOP nominee for the 10th Congressional District seat, received endorsements this week from the National Troopers Coalition and the National Federation of Independent Businesses.

The National Troopers Coalition lauded the Yarmouth Republican for his support of mandatory minimum sentencing, the death penalty and truth in sentencing laws.

The coalition also praised Teague support for the death penalty for those convicted of killing a police officer.

Meanwhile, the nation's largest small-business advocacy group, NFIB praised Teague for opposing burdensome business regulations.

Teague has been a self-employed insurance broker since 1975.

EDITORIAL

The pulse of Cohasset

This week, we're starting something new.

Actually, it's not entirely new to us here at the Cohasset Mariner office on South Street in Hingham where we also edit The Hingham Journal in which we started a reader survey line a year ago with great success.

Our reader survey provides a way for citizens to call in and register an opinion about whatever the question is that week.

It's entirely unscientific and we accept the fact that some who feel strongly one way or the other may try to skew the results by calling more than once.

But still, we think it's a way to get a sense of how you feel about the issues.

This week, we kick off our survey with a question about the possibility of a village rail station.

Will a downtown stop help revitalize the village or will a Route 3A station pull business and shops away from the village? This issue, in addition to the related parking, traffic and environmental matters face selectmen as they grapple with this decision in the weeks ahead.

Selectman Michael Sullivan noted this week that any vote on where to put the station will likely be split and it's up to the selectmen to make a decision after weighing all the information on both proposed sites.

But as they compile the necessary data — selectmen need to know what you think. The reader survey could be a way to find out.

Here at the Cohasset Mariner, we think we have our hand on the pulse of the community. So please give us a call. Just dial the number and follow directions.

Please note, the survey does not replace letters to the editor, which are always welcome.

If you have ideas about future survey questions, give us a call at 749-0031.

Volunteer labor appreciated

To the Editor:

Last week, Linda Litchfield, Cohasset assistant collector, had printed in-house the second quarter real estate tax bills. This was the first time we printed them in-house, and Linda was running out of time to get them all in the mail.

So Linda called the Elder Affairs office looking for help, and of course they responded.

Virginia Anderson, Mary Andracchio, Mary Davis, Phyllis Leighton, Dot Lincoln, Tillie Nardo and her sidekick Olga Sawchuck and Connie Tolman made short work of the project.

To some this might not seem like much, but as Treasurer/Collector, it saved my very limited staff at least one week's labor.

The Cohasset Mariner reader survey is not intended to be a scientific poll. Our survey questions are usually drawn from issues currently facing our readers, to "take the pulse" of the community on a subject. Sometimes, we will ask a question just for fun.

To allow our readers to freely express their views, we do not monitor the calls, nor are we able to identify the telephone numbers of our callers. Unfortunately, this means that one person may call in multiple responses, to tip the survey results towards his own opinion. However, it is also possible for a person with an opposing point of view to likewise make dozens of calls. We hope it evens out in the end.

Our readers are invited to record a comment after registering their responses to this week's question. Please speak clearly. We will print as many responses as space permits, but we reserve the right to edit lengthy comments.

Delahunt challenges primary recount results

Johnston, Teague face off in bitter ads

By ROB ROGERS
Cohasset Mariner

Phil Johnston is a man fighting a two-front war.

The Democratic contender for U.S. Rep. Gerry Studds' 10th District seat is pulling no punches in responding to blistering print and radio advertisements by Republican rival Ed Teague.

At the same time, Johnston is facing a court challenge from fellow Democrat William Delahunt following his narrow victory over Delahunt in the Sept. 17 primary and subsequent recount.

The continuing controversy over the primary vote has irritated Johnston, who has been working to marshal party resources in his campaign against Teague.

"This is outrageous," said Johnston, a resident of Tilden Road in Marshfield. "The vote was counted twice and counted fairly. It's definitely time to move forward."

Since scoring a 266-vote upset over former front-runner Delahunt in the primary two weeks ago, Johnston has received ringing endorsements from key Democratic leaders, including President Bill Clinton, Vice President Al Gore, Sen. Ted Kennedy, and — perhaps most importantly — Studds himself.

Wave washes away Skippers

Abington drops Cohasset to 0-2

By JIM O'SULLIVAN
Special to the Mariner

Despite strong individual efforts last Friday night, the Cohasset High football team was unable to triumph over the Abington Greenwave, bowing by a score of 39-15. Sophomores Raheem Shepard and Jordan Fiore, and senior Matt Belson all put forth strong efforts, however they were not enough, as the visiting Skippers dropped their second of the season.

Belson's sack in the backfield stalled Abington, but could not prevent a 3-yard TD run. Belson and junior Andy Hamilton stopped the two-point conversion, leaving the score 6-0, in favor of the Greenwave. The kickoff was run back to the 37 by sophomore Jamie DeMichele, but the Skippers could not gain a first down and were forced to punt. Sophomore Mike Rossi booted it away, giving the home team possession on its own 34.

On the next play, Belson came charging through the line and snatched the ball from a hapless running back, then rumbled 34 yards for a touchdown. The play moved so quickly that the spectators were stunned, unsure of what had happened. But ecstasy soon spread on the Skipper bench as the boys in blue rejoiced their first score of the season. John Kasameyer's extra-point attempt sailed through the uprights and the Skippers held the lead, 7-6.

Unfortunately, that would be the last time the Skippers had the edge as the Greenwave marched determinedly downfield, capping the drive with a 4-yard touchdown run, followed by the two-point conversion. Hamilton damaged his medial cruciate ligament on the play (MCL) and was forced to leave the game. Doctors estimate that Hamilton will be out for 4-6 weeks, leaving the Skippers in an interesting plight at middle linebacker, a position which Hamilton had nailed down. Lucky for Cohasset, sophomore Jordan Fiore was able to step in and more than hold his own.

In spite of a 20-yard sprint by Belson on their next drive, the Skippers were forced to punt. In a drive which resembled its previous one, the home team rolled down the field and scored again, but the Skippers were able to stop the two-point conversion, making the score 20-7.

On their next possession, the Greenwave were able to reach the endzone, despite a goal line stand by the

Scoring drought hits field hockey squad

By JOE REARDON
Cohasset Mariner

The scoring funk that hung over last year's Cohasset High field hockey team like a menacing rain cloud has emerged over the Lady Skippers over the past week. And unless the team breaks out of it soon, there could be trouble ahead.

Cohasset has dropped its last four consecutive games for a 3-5 record on the season. But most disturbing is the fact that the Lady Skippers are not playing bad field hockey. They've been in every game and pushed their competition to the limit.

Head coach Debby Bostwick is not panicking over the recent events and is confident Cohasset will be part of this falls Division 3 South Sectional tourney.

"We're in a better position than we were last year at this time," she said. "We have to capitalize on our opportunities. Hull and Hanover know when to do it and that's why they're in the tournament every year."

The Lady Skippers lost its most recent heartbreaker on Monday, a 3-1 defeat at the hands of Norwell. The Lady Clippers scored first, but by halftime Cohasset was on the board. Kate Ridge drilled a shot past the Norwell goaltender to knot the game, 1-1. Kristen Reynolds and Emily Collins were credited with the assists.

Cohasset actually dominated play in the second half, but wound up allowing two more goals. The girls peppered the Norwell goalie with several shots, but weren't able to close the gap to pull out a tie.

Ironically, the Lady Skippers probably

Fall is here, along with the gripes

Reardon

Finally, the clouds have parted and we're starting to get the first wisps of true fall weather. Warm, windswept afternoons have provided the perfect conditions for schoolboy sports. The temperature at Friday night football games is cooler, though hardly unbearable.

But alas, even with the delightful afternoons we've been waiting for after the rainy weather, the fall sports season brings with it certain headaches for sports reporters. And they can come from any direction.

My personal pet peeves are just that, mine. I can't speak for the other reporters, but just maybe they can relate to a few of the "...things that make me go hhhmmm."

• How many times do I have to explain, in great detail, to youth coaches that it's impossible to cover their games. I mean, do you start with the peewees, mites, midgets, juniors or traveling teams? And while we're on the subject, who would win in a fight a peewee or midget? I mean, who's bigger?

• What's with this fascination with players shaving their heads? I understand if the whole team is going to shave off its hair, you really don't have much of a choice if you're on the roster. And it is harmless. I remember the Matignon hockey team used to get Mohawks when it came time for the tournament, but where did the tradition begin with the Skippers, which appeared as if it would be successful, but could not hold. And the Greenwave rolled on, tallying still another touchdown, despite a backfield stuff by Jamie Buick, Kevin Duffy and the omnipresent Belson. Abington, having learned its lesson after being stuffed on three of four conversion attempts, decided to kick it, making the score 33-7.

The Skippers punted on their next possession as Rossi sent it spiraling downfield, giving sophomores Luke Caldwell and Adam Sasso enough time to race downfield and bury the unsuspecting punt returner. This next series showed fans a glimpse of Cohasset's defensive potential as Belson, Jerry Cogill and Shepard all made convincing tackles, forcing Abington to punt.

Grant Emde and Shepard were both able to gain first downs and quarterback Pat Hurley completed a pass to lanky end Jamie Buick, setting up a touchdown run from 7 yards out. Belson did the honors, giving him his second touchdown of the game, this time behind the key blocks of Fiore, John-Paul Laugelle and senior Doug Cameron. Shepard rushed for the two-point conversion, making it 33-15.

Caldwell, Cogill and Fiore provided the coverage on the kickoff and Fiore took it one step further, coming up with a solo tackle in the backfield. Sophomores Benny Roine and Caldwell combined for a tackle and Andy Curran crashed in to make one on the next play. However, this could not stop Abington from scoring its fifth and final touchdown of the game, bringing the final score to 39-15. Cohasset tried valiantly on its next drive, with Hurley connecting over the middle to Justin Golden and Shepard and Cogill both rumbling for 15 yards, but it was too little, too late, as the horn sounded before the Skippers could muster another scoring drive.

This Friday, the Skippers tackle the Norton Lancers at 7 p.m. Cohasset will be all fired up for its homecoming game, and the squad is looking for its first win of the season.

played their two best games of the season against Hull and Hanover, the two strongest teams in the SSL. In the 5-3 loss to Hanover, Cohasset had "great offensive opportunities," and led the Lady Indians, 2-1 at the half.

"We had that sense of glory for a little while," Bostwick said.

Lauren Dooley stuffed in her first goal of the season, while Katie Buckley did a good job at link and Sue Gill made big contributions off the bench.

"By looking at the score you couldn't tell how good we played," Bostwick said. "The defense played well against an experienced team."

Cohasset dropped a frustrating 1-0 decision to Notre Dame of Hingham, a game that came after two strong games against Hull and Hanover.

Bostwick felt the team was in a small rut after the two emotional games and the team wasn't cutting to the ball hard enough and the defense was holding back too far. Emily Collins scored the only goal in what Bostwick could only call "a heartbreaking loss."

Despite the 5-1 loss to the Lady Pirates of Hull, there were a number of positive performances from Cohasset. Whitney Cook came off the bench and scored the Lady Skippers' lone goal, taking a weak-side pass and cracking it past the goalie. Collins, Katie Devine and Jo Hurly all played well, as did sweeper Jill Magner, who put in a very consistent game.

Again, the lack of chances put Cohasset at a disadvantage. The Lady Skippers did get a boost when goaltender Jackie Hurley read a pass beautifully and sprang to the left side of the net to make an inspiring save with 30 seconds to play in the half.

Cohasset must now win five of its final eight games to qualify for the tourney, but could get in by tying some of the teams it lost to in the first half of the season.

"We do have a killer schedule next week with four games," Bostwick said, "but if my girls can get themselves healthy, I think we can do it."

Middle schoolers crush Wixon

The seventh- and eighth-grade football team is not only a success in the minds of parents and coaches, the squad isn't doing too bad on the field either.

Cohasset locked up in a scoring battle last week, but thanks to the three touchdowns from Greg Figuerido and two more from Brian Krupcazak, Cohasset defeated Dennis-Yarmouth's Windsor Middle School, 42-30.

Cohasset got off on the right foot when, on the opening kickoff, Nick Bolster gave the squad great field position with a 75-yard return. A few plays later Figuerido bashed in from the 6 for his first touchdown. Krupcazak scored on touchdown runs of 60 and 40 yards off the end reverse for a 26-22 Cohasset lead at the half.

Figuerido went all the way on the opening second-half kickoff for a 70-yard return.

After a Wixon score, Cohasset used up the final six minutes of the clock on a 75-yard mark down the field. A 15-yard boot leg from Jason Browne and a 15-yard gain by Danny Trowers set up Figuerido's third score of the game, a 12-yard run.

Fall is here, along with the gripes

whole shaved head thing?

• There's nothing worse for a reporter than trying to take notes when there's a slight drizzle. You may as well be using an invisible ink pen. Of course, you do go through notebooks slower but that's only because your pens are rendered useless. Ink takes a holiday.

• I make the mistake at least once every fall in not wearing enough layers of warm clothing for a football game on a freezing cold day. For some reason I never believe that, yes, long underwear is in order when you cover games on the South Shore. You can gauge bitter cold when Abington football coach Jim Kelliher wears a sweatshirt under a white, short-sleeved shirt. In Hull it's tough to tell. Head coach John Anderson wears shorts straight through the entire season, regardless of the temperature.

• And you can't forget the parents who live out their unfulfilled sports goals through the talent of their children. They're pathetic individuals and they're out there, at every level, in every sport. We've all seen them. It's parents like these who wind up turning their kids into ex-athletes because the games are no longer fun to them.

• I hate taking a phone call and having to listen to some parent vent about something they read without identifying who they are. Isn't that a crank phone call? They know who I am. If they had any backbone at all, they could at least have the courtesy to give their name. But those days are over. The minute a person refuses to identify him or herself, the conversation is over. Call "Sound Off" you coward. Don't waste my time.

• And the great cheerleader debate drones on and on and on. Are they athletes or are they "airheads" with pretty faces. For the record, I've seen many of them compete on teams in the winter and spring. For starters, they're not airheads. And as far as being athletes goes, you try doing some of the choreographed routines they perform without winding up with shooting pains in muscles you never knew you had. I'm putting my vote in the athlete ballot box.

• I often find myself at football games trying to figure out how many yards a running back gained on a rush, what yardmark the ball is on and all the other statistics that go along with the game. Eventually I'll miss a play because my head's buried in my notebook and I have to find out what the play was, how many yards were gained or lost and what down it is. Then it's right back to the notebook getting down that information just as the quarterback barks out "hike." It's a vicious circle.

• I have a new respect for field hockey, but it still seems as though the referees are whistle happy, calling every infraction in sight. There comes a point where you have to let the kids play the game and overlook the little things, particularly when there are two high-calibre teams playing.

But enough about my gripes. The sun is shining, teams are on the field warming up and it's almost game time.

Head coach Torin Sweeney said he was pleased with the way the team played and its reception by the parents and players.

"The fan support has been good and the kids really enjoy it," Sweeney said. "Everybody really picked it up a notch."

The seven graders play at St. Sebastian on Friday, while both grades play next Thursday at home against Somerset.

Group vetoes work for tax break proposal

By MARY FORD
Cohasset Mariner

The town will not go forward with a proposal giving Cohasset's senior citizens credit toward their real estate taxes in exchange for work performed after all.

The issue was raised a year ago and again last April after John R. Dwyer, 80, of Old Pasture Road told selectmen that seniors, because they have no children in the schools, are a bargain for the town and a work-for-taxes program deserved strong consideration.

But two weeks ago, the committee appointed to study the proposed program nixed the idea.

In a letter to selectmen, the committee cited difficulties in paid temporary help working with volunteers; the possibility of jeopardizing the abundance of town volunteers; and inequality for seniors, who are house-bound and cannot perform volunteer work, as potential problems.

They also said only five people responded to announcements soliciting interest about the program in the senior newsletter.

The committee — which consists of T. Gerard Keating of the Council on Elder Affairs (CEA), CEA director Kathy Bryanton, ·Treasurer/Collector Joseph Buckley, Town Clerk Marion Douglas, Town Administrator Gregory Doyon, and Board of Assessors Chairman James Lagrotteria — recommended that other alternatives be sought to provide tax relief.

Selectmen said that they would ask assessors for advice on how to go about expanding some of the town's tax abatement programs.

Reached by telephone, Dwyer said he was disappointed but not surprised by the decision not to go forward with the program.

"I understand they rejected it because of the number of volunteers," Dwyer said.

"But if other towns can do it, it's incredible that this town can't," he said.

A tax relief in exchange for work program is in its second year in Duxbury. Marshfield is considering adopting a similar program.

Currently in Cohasset, disabled veterans qualify for property tax abatements. Surviving spouses and those over 70 may qualify if they meet certain income and net worth caps. The town also allows tax deferrals of property taxes for seniors by placing a lien on the property with the taxes and interest being recouped when the property is sold. For more information about abatements, please call the assessors' office at 383-9900.

Village design day planned

The Cohasset Chamber of Commerce plans a two-day design session during which village ideas are brought to the table and hashed out with the end result being the development of a plan.

Dean Rizzo, chamber vice president and one of the driving forces behind the village revitalization effort, told selectmen Monday that the Chamber is hiring an architectural firm to help draw up the plan.

He invited all town boards to bring their ideas to the table from 8 to 11 a.m. on Oct. 19 at the Community Center. Rizzo said the point is to look at everything in the village from parking to lighting and aesthetics. The plan is drawn up and presented the following day when everyone can have a look and change things if necessary.

Rizzo explained that having a plan would enable the village to apply for grants. He asked for permission to request money from the MBTA to help cover the cost of conducting the session. The MBTA is considering relocating the Greenbush train station to the village.

Selectmen gave Rizzo the go ahead to contact the MBTA and were enthusiastic about the concept of a village plan but wouldn't give any guarantees they'd support the results.

"It's a great idea and will be fun to see what happens but we don't want to be bound by the outcome," Selectman Nan Roth said.

EEE virus of concern to residents

The Massachusetts Department of Public Health monitors both the actual and probable presence of the EEE virus in local mosquito populations and releases timely information to the general public.

The Cohasset Mosquito Control Committee urges all Cohasset residents to take the following precautions:

- If you have areas of stagnant water on your property, either drain the areas or treat them with mosquito dunks available from hardware stores or garden centers.
- Avoid outdoor activity during peak hours of mosquito feeding in the early morning and early evening.
- If an individual must be outside during these hours, wear long-sleeved shirts and long pants and use an insect repellent that includes DEET, 10 percent or less for use on children and less than 30 percent for adults. DEET should never be used on infants.

For additional information, call the Cohasset Board of Health at 383-9900, Ext. 121, Charles Gainor at 383-0498, or the Plymouth County Mosquito Control Project at (617) 585-5450 from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. limited resources.

The idea of attaining more open space in Cohasset has been well received by town residents, even in the face of the considerable amount of work which must first be completed. According to the community survey, many residents are prepared to make sacrifices to secure more open space. Roughly one-third of about 260 residents who responded to the survey said they would be willing to donate money to help the town acquire more land.

Many reported that they would be willing to sell some of their own land to the town at a "bargain price" or put a conservation restriction on their own property.

About half of the respondents felt the town doesn't have enough conservation land and that it is very important that more land be acquired.

Currently, about 30 percent of the town is classified as open space, comprised mostly of Wompatuck State Park and Whitney and Thayer Woods.

Brown said many residents are attracted to the idea of keeping Cohasset a place with a relatively limited amount of development. Additional open space is a means to that end.

In addition to attaining more conservation land and developing better recreational facilities, Brown hopes the systematic study of the town's natural assets will develop a greater degree of environmental awareness throughout the community.

Old and rare books is topic

Cohasset Elder Affairs will sponsor a lecture, "Treasures in your Attic: Old and Rare Books," Thursday, Oct. 24, at the Senior Center, 3 North Main St.

Kenneth Gloss, proprietor of the nationally known Brattle Book Shop in Boston, will speak at about 1:40 p.m., following the council's luncheon.

"New England homes are treasure troves for old and rare books that have increased in value over the years," Gloss said, "and we're inviting those attending to bring any volumes they what to know about to the lecture for a free verbal appraisal."

Gloss has worked in Brattle Book Shop since childhood, succeeding his late father, George Gloss, a well-known figure in both Boston and antiquarian circles, as proprietor upon his death several years ago.

He is a member and past president of New England Antiquarian Booksellers Association, member of Antiquarian Booksellers Association of America, Bostonian Society and Massachusetts and Rhode Island Antiquarian Booksellers.

Gloss will bring to the lecture several examples of interesting books, magazines and ephemera from the store's private collection, including a 1912 World Series scorecard and old Life magazines.

For further information, call Brattle Book Shop at (800) 447-9595.

Two free flu clinics offered

Two free flu clinics will be held in October, sponsored by the Social Service League of Cohasset and Cohasset Board of Health. The first will be held Saturday, Oct. 19, from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m., at Bates Hall, Second Congregational Church, and the second clinic is scheduled for Saturday, Oct. 26, at Cohasset Town Hall.

Senior citizens will have the opportunity to receive flu shots before the townwide clinics as follows:

Tuesday, Oct. 15, from 10 to 11:30 a.m., at the Senior Center and Friday, Oct. 18, from 10 a.m. to noon at Harborview senior housing, 60 Elm St.

Pneumonia vaccine will be available to individuals age 65 and older and those with chronic heart or lung conditions. The pneumonia vaccine is a one-time vaccination except in rare cases where a physician is required to make an evaluation. The clinics will administer first-time vaccinations only.

The Mass. Department of Public Health is also providing tetanus vaccine and is urging those who have not had tetanus booster in the last 10 years to do so at the flu clinic.

All three of the above vaccines can be administered simultaneously with few or no side effects. There is no charge for any of the immunizations.

For further details, call the League office at 383-0771 or 383-0821 (Monday-Friday, 8:30 a.m. to 3 p.m.)

Elder Affairs news is noted

Seniors are invited to participate in the SHARE (Self Help and Resource Exchange) program. For $14 and two hours of volunteer work a month, a food package worth $30 to $35 is available. A typical package consists of meat, fruit and vegetables.

A smaller order is available for $8, which suits a single individual or small family.

Income is not a deciding factor, and the program is not government-subsidized. Cash only is accepted as payment.

Sign-ups will be held Oct. 7-11, from 9 a.m. to noon, at the Senior Center.

Oct. 19 is bagging day at 141 Will Drive, Canton, and Oct. 26 is distribution day at Deer Hill School from 8 to 10 a.m. Individuals may sign up for the next month's food package at the same time.

Suggestions for volunteering include serving and assisting with senior lunches Tuesday or Thursday, driving the senior shuttle, bagging fruit and vegetables at the SHARE warehouse on Will Drive and assisting seniors with shopping.

For more information, call John Kierce at 383-2067 or Rose Kierce at 383-0578.

The Mariner welcomes letters to the Editor.

Walk to fight breast cancer

Join the American Cancer Society's annual 5.7 mile Making Strides Against Breast Cancer Walk at 8:30 a.m., Oct. 6 on the Charles River Esplanade. Cohasset's Maryanne Clougherty has arranged for free transportation from town hall to the Esplanade. Please call her at 383-9589 for more information. Proceeds from the event will be dedicated to the American Cancer Society's breast cancer research, education and patient support programs in Massachusetts.

Former resident awarded Harvard professorship

Dr. Walter Kerr Jr., of Milton, formerly of Cohasset, was awarded a Professorship of Urology at Harvard Medical School Friday, Sept. 27.

This first-named professorship at the school was established in March. The $2 million-plus chair was funded by the Amelia Peabody Foundation and Mr. and Mrs. Charles Bradley.

A urologic symposium in honor of Dr. Kerr was held at Massachusetts General Hospital, followed by a black-tie dinner at the Loeb House at Harvard, which was attended by many of Dr. Kerr's former students and associates from all over the United States.

Dr. Kerr attended Thayer Academy, graduating from Harvard in 1938 and University of Pennsylvania Medical School in 1943. Upon graduation, he was appointed to Mass. General, where he eventually became chief of urology. He also served as president of the American Urological Association in 1976.

Dr. Kerr is also a member of the American Association of Genito-Urinary Surgeons, the Clinical Society of Genito-Urinary Surgeons and the American College of Surgeons. He retired from Mass. General in 1991 and now spends his time traveling between Milton and his summer home on Squirrel Island, Maine.

Dr. Kerr was recently interviewed on Continental Cablevision local TV for Cohasset Historical Society. His subject was the Barron/Bancroft legacy.

Community center classes

Two new classes are being offered at South Shore Community Center, 3 North Main St.

At Seasons Café of Norwell, Mat Donegan will lead participants in a sampling of hearty appetizers, corn scallion pancakes with smoked salmon and creme fraiche and basil polenta. And for a party dish, try loin of lamb stuffed with spinach, served with roasted peppers and garlic and a rosemary glaze. Presentation techniques and other party ideas will be offered to "make you the caterer" or learn how to work with a caterer to enhance a party.

The class meets Wednesday, Oct. 16, from 7 to 9 p.m. ($30/$35 non-members).

Cake decorating with Regina O'Brien is being offered Mondays, Oct. 8, and Nov. 4, 18 and 25, from 7 to 9 p.m. The $45 ($50/non-member) fee includes supplies (pastry bag, tips, flat knife, etc.)

The creative skill of cake decorating will be taught in the introductory class, along with applying decorations and writing on a cake. Learn how to sculpt a clown and make baby booties and other whimsical cakes. O'Brien is the former owner of It Takes a Cake and has run her own business for the last 10 years.

Midlife career transitions to be discussed on Oct. 22

The Social Service League of Cohasset will sponsor a meeting Tuesday, Oct. 22, from 7:30 to 9 p.m., offering the opportunity to hear a panel of experts discuss the practical, financial and psychological aspects of the job market for those at midlife. Competing personal responsibilities outside of work which impact the process will also be addressed.

Included in the discussion will be career re-engineering for the millennium; condensing life experiences onto a resumé; finding hidden financial resources; jobs in an improving job market; second careers; and relocation.

Panelists will be Employment Specialist Michelle Sweeney, JVS, skills training program; Steve Etkind, EdD, vice president, Private Health Care Systems and Cohasset Counseling Associates; and Nancy Socoli, director of education, Consumer Credit Counseling Services.

The meeting will take place at the Lightkeepers Residence, 96 Border St., Cohasset Harbor. There is no charge, but seating is limited. To register or to obtain directions, call 383-0771.

Consignment shop has seasonal offerings

An Irish woolen red cape, antique Mexican jewelry, Austrian Geiger jackets and Italian silk scarves and men's sweaters and mink coats are highlights of Cohasset Consignment Shop's fall and winter sale items.

Consignment shop manager Andy Merrill announced that holiday items include a man's tuxedo, Halloween clown suit, velvet dresses for all ages, cashmere scarf and sweater and beaded cocktail bags.

Proceeds from the newly enlarged shop on Route 3A, Cushing Plaza, finance the varied programs sponsored by the Social Service League, which services individuals living in Hingham, Hull, Scituate, Norwell and Cohasset.

From Oct. 3 through Oct. 24, sales and consignments will be made from 6 to 8 p.m. Regular shop hours are Monday through Saturday, 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Volunteers are welcome and are asked to call 383-0771 or 383-0687.

AAUW to meet Oct. 8

Vicki Donlan from Spence Center for Women's Health will speak at the Tuesday, Oct. 8, meeting of the American Association of University Women, Hingham-area branch, at 7:30 p.m. in the library media center of Plymouth River School, off High Street, Hingham. The topic will be "Health Care for Women."

Donlan is the regional marketing director for the Spence Center for Women's Health and is responsible for Spence's three centers, located in Braintree, Cambridge and Wellesley.

Donlan was co-founder and first executive director of South Shore Women's Business Network and was honored by the U.S. Small Business Administration as New England's Women in Business Advocate for 1994. She is on the board of directors of the Center for Women & Enterprise, Inc., an organization providing business technical assistance to women pursuing self-employment in the metropolitan Boston area.

Donlan is a frequent speaker for business, professional and trade organizations on topics ranging from networking, marketing and sales to healthcare.

AAUW promotes equity for all women and girls, lifelong education and positive societal change. Its monthly meetings are free and open to the public.

Chicago soloist to perform at St. Stephen's Church

As part of its "Music at St. Stephen's Concert Series," St. Stephen's Church, Cohasset, will present mezzo-soprano Evelyn Czaja in recital Sunday, Oct. 6, at 3 p.m. Dr. Elaine Kwon will accompany Czaja in works of Bach, Schubert, Donizetti, Ralph Vaughan Williams, Persichetti and Dvorak.

Czaja sang with the former Repertory Opera Theater of Oak Park, Ill., Chicago Opera Theater, DuPage Opera in Illinois, Lake Shore Symphony and the Northwest Symphony. She is an avid stage director and has been music director for several area high school musicals.

Czaja holds a bachelor of music degree from Rosary College, Illinois, and a master of arts in applied vocal pedagogy from Northeastern Illinois University, Chicago. She also teaches private voice and is a member of the Music Teachers National Association, National Association of Teachers of Singing, Musicians Club of Women and MacDowell Artists Association.

The church is located at 16 Highland Ave., Cohasset, and is handicapped accessible. Free-will offerings will be accepted at the concert. For more details, call 383-1083.

For further information or to register for a museum pass or program, call 383-1348.

PERSONAL FINANCE

To thine own self be true: three hang-ups to avoid

Edited by Elizabeth MacDonald
WORTH MAGAZINE

It's been said that it takes a special kind of person to succeed in the stock market, and that may be true. There are certainly many more personality types in the world than there are successful investment personalities.

YOUR MONEY'S WORTH

That's probably why many people who enter the investment game are advised to change themselves. Squeamish types are told to develop thicker skins, lest the market's inevitable ups and downs make them miserable. Perfectionists are warned that the market's relentless tendency to point out our imperfections will drive them crazy, and so on.

The problem is, we're all squeamish to some degree (my apologies to any investors who can watch their stocks drop five points in an afternoon without losing their appetites); we all have a bit of the perfectionist in us, in the sense that we want to do well. Worst of all, trying to change these and other traits can be a frustrating — and losing — battle. Here are three hang-ups investors often face, and ways to make money in spite of them:

•An itchy sell finger. Many people buy into the benefits of long-term investing, but their very interest in investing sometimes gets in the way. By checking the newspaper every day, they frequently get the feeling that a specific stock has become overpriced. Even though fundamentals are still strong, the stock seems to have gotten ahead of itself. What to do?

If this strikes a familiar chord, try establishing a trading portfolio. There's no rule that says investors have to manage their entire portfolios uniformly. Investors can create an outlet for their impulses by devoting a small portion of their stock holdings to a portfolio within a portfolio, one that holds exactly the same stocks, just fewer shares. Then, if International Game Technology looks overpriced, an investor can sell it from his trading portfolio while holding onto the majority of his original position.

A trading portfolio gives those panicky feelings a course of action, but they won't have every cent riding on them (remember, the trading portfolio is small). Can a trading portfolio help overall investment results? Obviously, that depends on the timing of the trades, but consider this: If the trading portfolio outperforms the long-term portfolio, great. If not, at least an investor has learned that those "feelings" aren't a very good predictor — without paying a high price.

•Falling for hot tips. It's an old story. An investor hears about a stock at a business lunch. Then, at a cocktail party, a neighbor offers the same hot tip. Of course, hot tips are risky, so he gets a research report, talks to his broker, and reads the annual report. Then he buys the stock.

When was the decision to buy really made? When a person really wants to buy something (anything), he is going to buy it — a new shirt, a polo pony, you name it. Investors are almost uniformly incapable of conducting meaningful "post-hot-tip" research. What happens instead is that we spin any extra facts about the company into a rationale for what we already want to do — buy. Once the rose-colored glasses are on, an obsolete copper-smelting operation suddenly looks like a turnaround candidate, that daunting debt service will be easily paid off by growing profits, and the retiring founder didn't really run the company anyway.

Here's another option. Invest a small amount upon hearing the initial story — then investigate to see about buying more or selling out. Why in the world would an investor want to do anything that naive? Wasn't "Invest, then investigate" the rallying cry of the long-since discredited "go-go" portfolio managers of the 1960s?

It's not really as illogical as it sounds, especially given that some investors would end up buying the stock anyway. The "invest (a little), then investigate" approach gives an investor a reason to do objective research and the ability to act, whatever the result of the secondary investigation — i.e., to buy a bigger position in the case of good news, or to sell the initial stake if the story turns out to have worms. The worst thing that could happen is that they'd run up a few extra commissions. Consider that a (very cheap) insurance policy.

•Missing out on big moves. This also will sound crazy, but every once in a while, investors should buy a stock that their instincts have told them to avoid.

I am not suggesting that investors disregard the fact that a company is in a cash squeeze and buy anyway. Nor should investors ignore declining market share, increasing inventories, or a host of other ominous developments. Bad is bad.

Sometimes, though, the reason for not buying has more to do with a personal quirk than a company deficiency. These are the situations that demand rethinking.

A particularly common quirk (one that I would be remiss not to own up to myself) is misplaced contrarianism.

Being too much of a contrary investor means always wanting to get in on the ground floor. When presented with a stock that has already gone up a few points, they pass, on the highly subjective grounds that it's too late. Case in point: A broker I know at Merrill Lynch reported having suggested his own firm's stock to an institutional portfolio manager at the dawn of the great bull market in 1982. The manager decided to pass — not because the broker was plugging his own stock, but because it had already gone from 25 to 28. Alas, Merrill shares eventually topped 100.

It's silly to feel left out just because the first move may be over. If the story is unexciting, that's one thing — but any meaningful rebound of a cyclical stock will surely amount to more than three points. Whenever investors feel themselves getting in the way, they should consider turning the tables and buy anyway.

COLLEGE SAVINGS PLAN

College costs are growing faster than your kids.

Your kids won't stay little for long. So you should be spending your time on bedtime stories, crayon drawings, and what's under the bed–not on worrying about college tuition.

Even so, the day will be here before you know it. That's why we offer a savings plan that can take the worry out of planning for college, with its own fact kit to get you started.

The Fidelity College Savings Plan can make it simple to figure out a plan that keeps pace with rising tuition costs. There's a worksheet to help you calculate what you may need to save, and information on a range of no-load, low-minimum mutual funds that have been selected especially for this program.[1] Plus, we offer a Starter Account Option that can make the whole thing affordable, allowing you to invest as little as $100 a month.[2]

Once you set up your plan, that's all there is to it. You can even have contributions automatically deducted from your paycheck or another account.

The sooner you start saving for college, the easier it will be to cover that tuition bill once it arrives. Get your free College Savings Plan Fact Kit. Call us today. It's time

We can help you keep pace.

The Grand Tour

with Ginger Ferenz 383-2863

Margaret Wheelwright enjoys looking out of her front windows across the street at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Brian Cogill of 66 Church St. She especially enjoys the view at night when the house is warmly lit, making a cozy scene to passersby. Margaret feels the Cogills have turned their home into one that looks like an 'enchanted cottage' and we must agree. They have added numerous touches to decorate, including the wreath on the front door, the flag and the window box brimming over with bright, salmon-pink impatiens.

Police investigate break-ins in Hingham and Cohasset

Police in Hingham and Cohasset are investigating what they believe to be related house-breaks.

In both cases a light-colored station wagon with wood paneling was seen in the vicinity of the breaks.

Hingham Police Detective Gerald McInnis said police responded to a report on Sept. 25 that men were seen throwing computer equipment into a quarry off Whiting Street. A short time later, a resident of Gardner Street returned home to discover his home had been broken into and his computer equipment stolen.

On Sept. 24, police in Cohasset said a burglary was reported by a Doane Street resident, whose house had been ransacked. A computer, video cassette recorder, and jewelry, with an approximate total value of $5,500, were taken.

McInnis said the vehicle was leaking oil, and traces were found at the Doane Street address in Cohasset, at the Gardner Street residence, and near the quarries.

He also said the two break-ins may be related to a third burglary in Weymouth where credit cards were among the items stolen.

Two men used a stolen credit card to buy jewelry at the Bradlees department store at Hingham Plaza, and then attempted to return the items at the Bradlees store in Quincy.

Police divers will attempt to recover the items thrown into the quarry, he said, because analysis may reveal fingerprints. While the quarry is as much as 60 feet deep, the items may be caught on ledge nearer the surface.

School News

Foundation fundraiser is Oct.6

The CEF will formally open its fifth year with a public fund-raiser at the South Shore Arts Center Sunday, Oct. 6, from 4 to 7 p.m. Pam Speed, the chairperson for the event has entitled the gathering, "An Evening for Education." The occasion is an important part of the foundation's community outreach.

The evening will showcase the works of Cohasset students in the arts and graphics and feature Cohasset's principals as special guests of the CEF. Along with high school principal, Curt Collins, incoming headmasters, Paul Callahan (Deer Hill) and Merilee Cantelmo (Osgood) will be on hand to meet with the community and discuss their plans for the future. With the current major project of the CEF being a replacement of the high school language lab, a working model of a state of the art laboratory will be available to demonstrate the technology being considered.

Refreshments will be provided by the high school economics class and the PSO Diversity Committee will be offering their newly published Diversity Cookbook featuring ethnic recipes and gastronomic delights from around the world. A variety of valuable door prizes and demonstrations on various CEF projects are also planned.

Tax-deductible tickets for the evening are available from Directors of the CEF or by calling Pam Speed (383-2572), Mike Hurley (383-9509) or leaving a message on the CEF line at 383-2833.

People interested in learning more about the mission of the foundation and its activities are encouraged to call the CEF at 383-2833 or to write the Cohasset Education Foundation, P.O. Box 224, Cohasset, MA 02025, for a copy of our brochure and additional information on our programs. A registered non-profit organization, all donations to the project fund are tax-deductible and dedicated to enhancing the educational environment of Cohasset Public School students.

Art boosters start new year

Families who have a student at Cohasset Jr./Sr. High School and believe a well-rounded education includes an appreciation for the arts, are invited to join the Arts Boosters, which benefits students and teachers.

The organization's main focus is to promote and support the arts at the high school. The group helps the faculty by providing the support to put on such events as concerts, art shows, drama workshops, a literary magazine and an awards night for students.

This year students will perform in a musical, "Mikado," which will need additional volunteers for the various tasks associated with such an undertaking.

Assisting the Arts Boosters provides an oppor[illegible] become involved in a child's school without tak[illegible] year-long commitment.

A meeting will be held Thursday, Oct. 10, at 1 p.m. in the audio-visual room at Cohasset High School for those who would like to help out, or call Donna O'Donnell at 383-6113 or Debby Niessink, 383-6428, for more information.

PAC meeting is slated

The Parents Advisory Council of Cohasset invites all parents and guardians of students receiving services under Chapter 766 from the Cohasset School system to an evening of informal discussion with the newly appointed Director of Student Services Lynn Silva.

The meeting will be held Tuesday, Oct. 8, at 7:30 p.m. in the Deer Hill School library. For further details, call PAC Chairman Kim Maynard at 383-2707.

Family health program slated

Project Safeguard is a family approach to adolescent health-related issues and substance abuse. The Cohasset Jr./Sr. H.S.'s seventh grade class will attend this program during regular school hours. Workshops will address issues of self-esteem, harassment, drug and alcohol prevention, peer pressure etc. Seventh grade parents are urged to attend and sixth grade parents are invited to volunteer and view what may be on the agenda for next year.

The program goals are:

— to provide an environment for parent/student interaction

— to improve parent/student communication

— to strengthen self esteem of parents & students

— to foster community awareness and commitment to family issues/values

— to build skills in young people that will empower them to more successfully avoid harmful choices.

This approach to prevention education is unique because it brings students and parents together at an off-school site for an all-day conference. The sessions will be located in churches around the Common as well as the auditorium in Cohasset Town Hall. The material to be covered during the program has also been reviewed and approved by the seventh grade team and Jr./Sr. High Principal Curtis Collins.

This will be an important day for your child and the Health Education Program, and the entire seventh grade team are hopeful that at least one parent of each child will attend. If that is not possible, parents may want to designate a family member/friend to accompany their child for the day.

Further information and registration form will be forthcoming; in the meantime, please mark your calendars for Wednesday, Oct. 16, 7:45 a.m. to 1:40 p.m., and reserve the day to participate in the Cohasset education process and help make learning a family experience.

This program is being funded with grant money as well as additional money from The P.A.L.S. for wellness program (Police Assisting Local Schools) which is administered by Police Chief Brian Noonan and Health Education Coordinator, Michael Gill.

Ratepayers seek rebellion

Water users reach boiling point over bills

By MARY FORD
Cohasset Mariner

Months of protesting impending soaring water rates hasn't yielded results, some angry Cohasset residents say.

So now that the bills are here — those affected plan to take matters into their own hands by calling for their fellow Massachusetts-American Water Company water users in Hull, Hingham and the north part of Cohasset not to pay their bills.

"We plan to march into the State House with these bills," said Maria Plante of Grace Drive.

About 350 homes in the North Cohasset area of town are on Hingham water, provided by Mass-American, a private company, whose $40 million treatment facility went on line last April. The rest of town is served by Cohasset town water.

Armed with their latest bills — which for the first time reflect a full quarter's usage and other charges to help pay for the new treatment plant — the residents said their situation is critical.

"This is a desperate, desperate situation here," said Diane Sullivan, 702 Jerusalem Rd.

Selectmen urged residents to register their complaints with their office in hopes of bolstering the possibility of obtaining rate relief through the Department of Public Utilities, which allowed the rate

Coyotes, deer come to town

By MARY FORD
Cohasset Mariner

The influx of coyotes in the region has been a long time coming, according to Greg Mertz, director of the New England Wildlife Center in Hingham.

He explained the coyote migration from the West began about 100 years ago. The animals have been in Massachusetts for 50 years and on the South Shore less than 10.

Due to numerous coyote sightings, Cohasset officials expressed concern this week that the animals might be dangerous and may be frightening deer, driving them from the woods into town.

Selectman Michael Sullivan asked the press Monday to look into the matter.

"The theory is that the coyotes are running the deer out of the park," he said.

Earlier Monday Police Chief Brian Noonan asked the Mariner to find out, "Why are they (coyotes) here? And what are they looking for?"

He said coyote sightings have been reported at the cemetery at Joy Place, and on Border Street, Nichols Road, Route 3A and South Main Street.

Under new law, sex offenders register in Cohasset

By CHARLENE VANDINI
Cohasset Mariner

Under the requirements of a new law that went into effect last week, Cohasset Police now have a registry of three convicted sex offenders who live in town.

Chief Brian Noonan said persons convicted of committing sex offenses since August, 1981, are required, as of Oct. 1, to register with their local police departments. They must provide their name, address, work address, Social Security number, physical description, vehicle description and registration information. They must also provide the information on the nature of the sex offense, with the date and place where it occurred. Police will also photograph and fingerprint the offenders.

The offenders must report to the police station annually for a period of 20 years from the date of the conviction or from their release from custody or supervision, to verify the accuracy of the information on file. Offenders who have been convicted two or more times must register annually for life.

They must also notify police of any changes in residence or employment.

'People have a right to know.'
— Police Chief Brian Noonan.

Failure to comply with these requirements carries a fine or imprisonment, Noonan said.

Sex offenders will be classified by the state Criminal History Systems Board, which will review the histories of thousands of convicted sex offenders in Massachusetts, to determine where they should be placed in one of three categories, based on the likelihood of a repeat offense.

At this point, a week after the registration deadline, police have no guidance on the categories where the offenders' names will be placed.

Much of the information is in the "input stage" now, he explained.

Noonan said that under the law, where there is determined to be a low risk of a repeat offense, no community notification is required. A level two designation, where there is a moderate risk of a repeat offense, requires police to notify organizations in the community that are likely to encounter the offender.

Police are obligated to provide community notification in the cases of a level three offender, where the risk of a repeat offense is high.

But public notification is not required until the offenders are evaluated by the Sex Offender Registry Board.

Apart from the obligations of the police to notify the community, residents over the age of 18 may request information on any convicted sex offenders who live or work within one mile of the residents who request the information. By appearing in person, and submitting a written and notarized form, a person may ask police to check on an individual by name, address, or description, or may request general information on any person living or working nearby who is a convicted sex offender.

This information can also be obtained from the state Criminal History Systems Board, which will keep a record of all requests for information.

Noonan said there are no plans in Cohasset to adopt a policy similar to one implemented in several North

Drug & alcohol board plans town-wide petition

Members of the Drug & Alcohol Committee met Tuesday to discuss devising a petition they will circulate throughout the town to unite the community in stopping the illegal purchase and use of drugs and alcohol by minors and the illegal distribution of those substances by adults to minors.

As part of its efforts, the committee will be actively involved in Project Safeguard, a day-long event scheduled for Oct. 16 which has been designed to bring seventh-grade students and their parents together at an off-school site for an all-day conference made up of a series of short presentations on issues pertaining to families today. For more information about Project Safeguard, see page 13.

The agenda for the Drug & Alcohol Committee's next meeting on Oct. 22 will include finalizing a distribution strategy for the petition and a review of petition verbiage.

Yacht Club floats to stay on the Hagerty Property

Over objections from a Parker Avenue resident, selectmen will allow the yacht club to store some of its floats on the Hagerty property.

Last week, Russ Bonetti complained bitterly to the board about the floats being stored there. He questioned their authority to grant permission for that use of the property, which town meeting appropriated the money to buy back in 1993.

Since last week, the yacht club moved some of the floats and lowered the others down so they are not stacked up presenting an attractive nuisance to children, selectmen said.

Selectman Ronnie McMorris said the floats should be moved. She said they smell, attract flies and look like a junk heap.

But Selectman Michael Sullivan said the floats are already there and should be allowed to stay this year. He said the yacht club should pursue other storage alternatives next year.

"The smell and flies will go away," Sullivan said.

Selectman Peter Pratt noted that the yacht club had spent money to bring the floats over there after getting permission from Town Administrator Gregory Doyon.

Pratt said any fault for the decision lies with selectmen who did not think clearly through what matters the town administrator should make a determination on and what should remain with selectmen.

Bonetti said 1/2 of the available land there at high tide is now covered with docks.

"This deprives people of the full use," he said.

On Bonetti's request, selectmen will ask town counsel to review the 1993 article to determine if they have the authority to permit this type of use of the property without asking town meeting approval. Taxpayers bought the Hagerty property — which was the site of Cohasset Colonials, a furniture kit company — for town-wide recreational use.

Selectmen Chairman Merle Brown said the yacht club cannot use its own parking lot for docks storage because it is used a turnaround for plows in the winter.

Osgood reuse group meets

Selectman Peter Pratt said the Osgood School reuse committee, which includes two members of the housing authority, had a successful first meeting. He said the committee has a lot of ground to cover between now and Sept. 1, 1998 when the new school — replacing the aging Osgood School — is slated to open. The committee is charged with finding the best use for the building.

Cohasset's Week

Silt storage is a problem

Selectmen will look into the cost of and logistical problems relating to bringing barges into Cohasset harbor to dry dredged silt.

The town's harbor dredging project could start next fall but selectmen must come up with an area to dry the putrefying silt removed from the harbor. The silt must be "dewatered" before it's shipped to an upland landfill.

One proposal is to use the the sailing club turnaround and the staging near the wharf on Government Island. But this week, selectmen didn't want to commit to that site until the use of barges had been explored.

They are worried that if the silt takes longer to dewater, extending the process into the summer, the sailing club would not be able to function. They are also concerned that the silt which will be piled up behind jersey barriers will be smelly and unsightly, a situation which could have a negative effect on social events at the Lightkeeper's House.

Upcoming meetings noted

The following meetings have been posted outside the town clerk's office at town hall:

Schools want to gear up for 21st century

By ANDI WEISSMAN
Special to the Mariner

New technology and additional staff members are the preliminary budget concerns facing Cohasset's three schools, administrators told the School Committee last Thursday night.

"These are things we need to look at to move into the 21st century," said Merilee Cantelmo, principal of Osgood Elementary School.

Principals of both elementary schools and the Junior/Senior High School said their schools will need more computers for students, as well as staff to teach students how to use them.

Although Deer Hill Elementary has a computer lab, it is not always available, said Principal Paul Callahan. Each of the three upper grades has its own cart with two computers each, which must be shared between the classrooms, he said.

Computers will also be needed for the junior high school division of the high school, which officials hope to split into two separate schools, according to Principal Curtis Collins.

"Most of the technology in the school is located on the high school side," he said. "We're certainly going to have to have computer equipment on this side of the building."

Callahan and Cantelmo also requested additional technical staff to teach elementary school students how to use computers.

"We need someone who is going to lead us where we are going to go," said Callahan, who added he would like the school to have a World Wide Web site within five years.

The elementary schools also said they lack some technology necessary to communicate with parents and other schools, such as Internet access and fax machines. Both elementary school principals asked the committee to consider purchasing new copier machines for the schools.

"We need to move into the '90s," Callahan said. "This is 1996, and we still haven't got some of the technology we need."

Both Callahan and Collins requested new public announcement systems for their respective schools.

"I'm not sure how old it is, but there is no way of communicating into the halls," Callahan said. "If all the classroom doors are closed, you can't hear a message coming over (the PA) in the halls."

Officials from Osgood and Deer Hill elementary schools asked for a full-time nurse, saying there is only one nurse assigned to split her time between the two school.

"Right now, if a student is injured or ill, they are cared for in the nurse's absence by office staff," Cantelmo said.

Cantelmo asked the School Committee to reinstate a full-time reading teacher. She said Osgood lost the position last spring when federal mandates directed funding toward more disadvantaged students.

Administrators requested more special education assistants and activity aids, as well as support for professional development seminars.

Student representative Ely Kahn suggested the committee consider whether the schools could provide textbooks for Advanced Placement courses. Students in those courses currently have to purchase their own books, some of which cost as much as $80 each, he said.

The courses may also need updated textbooks, the principals said. At Osgood, the most recent text is a 1991 math book, said Cantelmo.

In other business, the School Committee took under consideration a warrant article for the upcoming Town Meeting regarding the purchase of new school buses. Under the plan, presented to the committee by school Superintendent Stephen Hart, the school system would purchase two new buses both this year and next, and one for each of the two years following.

Each bus will cost approximately $45,000, making cash purchases preferable to financing or leasing-to-own the buses at 5 percent interest rates, he said.

Coyotes come to town

Deer have also been reported on Nichols Road, Jerusalem Road, Border Street, Government Island and Route 3A, Noonan said.

But Mertz said coyotes are not responsible for increased deer sightings.

He explained that deer, which "browse" an area and move on, have found that Cohasset agrees with their palates.

"Deer are a drifting population," Mertz said. "They work on neighborhood stripping off what they can reach and drift into the next."

Cohasset has an abundance of rhododendron, hydrangea, barberry, cedar trees and arborvitae which are like "candy" to deer, he said.

"It's the best thing since pecan pie to deer," Mertz said.

He said coyotes are omnivorous — meaning they'll eat anything. The animals usually weigh less than 25 pounds and resemble a small German shepherd-type dog. They are very shy of people, Mertz said.

Coyotes like small animals such as rabbits, squirrels and the occasional cat. They'll also eat small birds, ducks geese, carrion (road kill) and plants.

"The reason the numbers are creeping and crawling up is the food source is there for them," Mertz said. "They'll eat and survive on almost anything."

He dismissed the idea that coyotes are responsible for missing cats, which he said are too clever and vicious for coyotes although a coyote eating a cat does happen occasionally.

"I guarantee more cars hit missing cats than coyotes," he said.

Mertz suggested residents keep trash and garbage cans covered. Coyotes can carry rabies and any animal that is acting strangely should be avoided, he said.

Water company faces flood of complaints

By MARY FORD
Cohasset Mariner

Officials from the Hingham water company that serves North Cohasset did not get a warm welcome on their recent visit to town.

They say they can't give customers a rebate on their bills for discolored water and their plans to establish a committee to include concerned citizens did not assuage the anger of those affected.

Mass-American vice president Keith Bossung tried to explain why North Cohasset residents have experienced some water discoloration to selectmen and a handful of citizens last week.

But the residents and selectmen said it's not fair to have to pay top dollar for a product that's not been perfected.

"While you're practicing, we shouldn't be paying what we're paying," said Diane Sullivan, 702 Jerusalem Rd.

Bossung blamed the problems on recent flushing which forces water more quickly through the pipes clearing them of residue and mineral build up deposits which then temporarily come with the water through residents' faucets into their sinks and washing machines.

He stressed that with the new Hingham plant, which went on line last April, and flushing and treatment programs underway, problems will subside and water quality will ultimately be better and more consistent than was the case prior to the construction of the new plant.

Mass-American officials say users are paying about 150 percent more in their water bills under new rates which went into effect last spring (see related story). The rate increase, approved by the Department of Public Utilities, is being appealed by Hingham and Hull, which, along with North Cohasset, are on Hingham water.

Part of the rate increase pays for the water company's new $40 million treatment facility off Main Street in Hingham.

"It's most unfair," said Diane Sullivan about getting inferior quality and having to pay more for it.

Bossung said the company is trying to get the water mains between the plant and the users clear so they can deliver quality water.

"That will take about another year," he said. "For that we apologize."

He explained that a corrosive inhibitor will help keep the pipes in good condition once flushing is completed.

Selectmen agreed that North Cohasset users ought to get a rebate on their water bills until the flushing is finished.

"It's like three-day old bread, it's not top quality," said Selectmen Chairman Merle Brown, adding the users should not have to pay top price.

But company treasurer Rod Nevirauskas explained that the rates are set by the DPU and cannot be changed without authorization from the state agency.

Virginia Ferenz, 1 Windy Hill Rd., asked for the company to reimburse residents for the cost of purchasing bottled water for drinking an cooking.

"The water meets all standards, it is safe to drink," Bossung said.

"Then why is it still discolored and tastes terrible?" Ferenz asked.

Bossung said the company would look into having free bottled water available to Cohasset residents during the flushing program. Water is available at the Hull fire department but that is "quite a drive for Cohasset residents," Selectmen Chairman Merle Brown pointed out.

"It's a good suggestion to have it closer by," Bossung said.

He also said the company was dealing with users' stained clothing as a result of discolored water on a case by case basis.

"We're working with individuals to get their things cleaned and make it right," Bossung said.

hike.

"They're (water company) not giving the service we want for the price," Selectmen Chairman Merle Brown said.

Reached by telephone, Eileen Commane, operations manager at Mass-American, cautioned that these bills reflect summer usage which is usually higher. She did not know how productive a march on the State House would be.

Eileen Colwill, 155 Hull St., brought her bill to Monday's meeting which showed a 500 percent increase from $67 to $337 and excessively high estimated water usage of 69,564 gallons over the quarter — about 772 gallons a day. Colwill said on Monday that her family is very conscious of conservation and their water use is kept to a minimum.

Upon hearing Colwill's usage, Commane said that was "very high" for a single family. She explained the estimates are based on prior water consumption.

"They may well have a leak in the house," she said explaining that to check for leaks, residents can read their water meter before going to bed and then again in the morning. The readings should be the same.

Russ Lennon, 20 Tad Lane, said his bill went from $101 to $346. He also said he is so conservative with water that he uses water from his air conditioner to water plants.

Diane Sullivan, who displayed a pair of white tennis shoes stained yellow from being washed with discolored water in her house, said her bill went from $97 to $327.

Commane said Mass-American will send its customers a sheet explaining the breakdown of the new bills which have five charges including a surcharge and charges for the treatment facility and maintenance.

Bills prior to the rate change reflected only a service charge and volume charge.

Selectmen said they would ask the state attorney general's office to look into the high rate charges. They also planned to check with town counsel to make sure that Cohasset users won't be charged more to offset lower charges for Hingham and Hull if those towns are successful in their appeal of the rate hike to the DPU. Cohasset did not join in that appeal under advice of counsel, who said it would be better for Cohasset to launch its own appeal based on water quality and service.

Selectmen also planned to ask Mass-American officials to their meeting Tuesday (Oct. 15) to explain the bills.

Cohasset High in energy program

Cohasset High School is participating in the Energy Retrofit Program in conjunction with Eastern Edison, Supt. Stephen Hart said.

Under the program, which encourages energy conservation, Eastern Edison will replace current lighting systems in the school with more energy-efficient lights. Cafeteria and exit lights are among those that will be replaced, Hart said.

"What happens is Eastern Edison helps to support this by paying the brunt of the costs. We pay about $9,000 and they pay around $12,000," Hart told the Mariner. He added that the amount of energy and money that will be saved over a two-year period should cover the costs of replacing the lights.

Shore towns, where all persons involved with youth activities, such as coaches or scout leaders, submit to background checks. The local schools may do this, he noted, but are more likely to go through the Criminal History Systems Board, rather than through the Cohasset police.

While he supports the law, he is not sure it can withstand a court challenge.

"People have a right to know," Noonan said, calling the law a protection of victims' rights. Crimes against property are different from crimes against people, he said.

"This is a small town," he added. "Everyone knows everyone anyway."

The Gjestebys are in the news again!

Hat's off to CHS '75 grad, Ingrid (Gjesteby) Janes of Longmeadow, Mass., who — as one of the members of the Grande Meadows Tennis and Health Club team — captured the championship at the U.S. Tennis Association Div. 2.5 national tournament on Sept. 27-29 in New Orleans. Ingrid's team took the title with a 3-2 victory over Southern California!

And that's not all the Gjesteby family news. Kari Gjesteby (Arne's sister) came all the way from Norway with her family, husband Mikael Klinberg and daughters to enjoy a lobster bake at the Gjesteby home over the weekend. Kari is a director of Norges Bank in Oslo and is former under secretary of state in the prime minister's cabinet.

Janine DiTullio, staff writer on "Late Night with Conan O'Brien," attended the Emmy Awards as a nominee for "Best Writers of a Comedy Show." Her sister, Lisa Swain of Cohasset, attended as Janine's guest. They both enjoyed the glitz and excitement of the awards show, the Governor's Ball and a few days of California sunshine!

They thoroughly enjoyed the limo ride, red carpet treatment at Pasadena Civic Center and hobnobbing with the stars. Get this one — they even stood beside George Clooney while waiting for their limo after the ball.

Meanwhile, Janine is writing the monologues and sometimes the comedy skits on the show. She also does her stand-up — just did a gig at Caroline's in New York. Maybe next year Conan will win, then we will probably see Janine!

VFW Post 9146 of Cohasset is going to hold a yard sale a week from Saturday, Oct. 19, at 211 North Main Street (the home of William Higgins). The hours are 8 a.m. to 1 p.m., so you can start there and go on to others! They promise to have lots of good stuff, so make it a point to check it out!

On Sunday, Oct. 20, there is going to be a special event. It's the 80th anniversary of Cohasset boy scouting. Troop 28 sent out invitations to more than 1,000 past and present residents who have benefitted from and contributed to their association. An afternoon of reminiscing, acknowledgements and renewed camaraderie is planned. The gathering will be held at Kimball's By-The-Sea from 1 to 5 p.m. There will be a reception from 1 to 2 p.m., followed by a chicken dinner from 2 to 3:30 p.m. The program, "Scouting — Past, Present and Future," will take place from 3:30 to 5 p.m.

Great idea, isn't it?! We'll be sure to give you a full report!

We certainly hope Jan Brown feels much better as she reads this. She is a patient at South Shore Hospital.

Happy birthday greetings travel all the way to Maine this week. Sue Fone celebrated a birthday Oct. 8. We know it was a great one, because she is a great gal who deserves nothing but the best! Here's to many more happy birthdays, Sue! We love and miss you!

Here is a request from Cohasset Food Pantry. They are in need of mayonnaise, canned fruit and vegetables, soup, jelly and jams, paper products, toothpaste, laundry detergent and toilet tissue. Don't forget, when you "buy one, get one free," give the free one to the Pantry!

Oct. 20 is a big day for for Marge and Harry Ritter, who will be celebrating their 52nd wedding anniversary! Be sure to congratulate them when you see them. That is a wonderful happening indeed! Best wishes to a great couple!

We were certainly saddened to hear of the passing of Doris Tower, who was part of a Cohasset legend that will always be remembered. She was the nicest lady, with a wonderful family — she surely will be missed. Our thoughts are with her family at this time.

Forum on village stop is Oct. 23

Time is growing short for the town to decide whether or not its train station should be in the village or out on Route 3A.

For planning purposes, the MBTA says it needs an answer in the next four to six weeks.

To that end, officials plan a public forum to address the station issue Oct. 23 in the town hall auditorium.

Will a train station in the village revitalize Cohasset's downtown? Will commuters walk to the station?

What impacts will the construction, blasting have? How about traffic?

If the station stays out on Route 3A at the former skating rink site, will it draw business and shoppers away from the village?

These are just a few of the many questions that residents have about a project which will play a significant role in town.

The train is going to change things. Some say, it's badly needed and will be a great asset while others think the train will destroy the town we love.

But no matter on which side of the tracks you stand — we think regarding the village station proposal, it's important that Cohasset citizens act on the assumption that the train is coming. That means those opposed to the train should put their feelings aside for the time being to help decide which station site is best.

If Cohasset gets the train and the station is built — the decision on where that stop ends up will be critical not only for us today but to future generations.

Our related survey question provided some interesting results (see page 11). We don't claim that it is scientific and recognize the fact that some people may have called in more than once. But we think it shows that Cohasseters are waking up to the village station issue.

Selectmen are grappling with how to tap public opinion. They are considering handing out "yes or no" ballots on the village station issue which registered voters would then drop into a ballot box as they sign in at the special town meeting Oct. 28.

But no matter what a vote shows — the onus is on the selectmen to make a final decision on the village station.

As Selectman Peter Pratt said: "This is the largest single discretionary decision facing the town in community planning in the later half of the 20th century."

Although the town and selectmen are split on the train — it's important that selectmen reach a consensus on the station issue, there's too much riding on it.

Thanks for Farmers' Market support

To the Editor:

The Farmers' Market is about to close for the year. We have heard several encouraging words from the many patrons, and we are looking forward to a successful market next year. The Farmers' Market was created through the work of Village revitalization efforts to bring more activity to Cohasset Village and create an open-air market atmosphere for the community. We feel we have established a new venue for commerce and community gathering.

The market would not have succeeded without the support of the many people who patronized the vendors; the diligent efforts of Anna Abbruzzese and Barbara Anglin; and support from Aquarius Sunrooms, Inc. and Cohasset Chamber of Commerce.

Many individuals and organizations also contributed to the success of the Harvest Festival in Cohasset Village. We would like to thank Cohasset Rotary Club, Tedeschis and Mary Marciniak for their generous donations.

We would also like to thank the following, who helped with the many activities:

Stevermans Farm; Betty Kelley and her ponies; Rudolph Adamo Salon; South Shore Art Center; Cohasset News for their balloons; face painters Claire Cardel, Carol Deane and Gail and Kathy Flynn; South Shore Community Center; Seaside Gymnastics; Rockland Trust; Red Lion Inn; The Artist Son Gallery; Silver Spoon Café; Mark Purcell; businesses who joined the cooperative advertising effort; and local newspapers for their continuous support. The cooperation of Cohasset Police Department and the Highway Department was essential to the smooth Village transformation.

Cohasset Chamber of Commerce understands the importance of a cooperative community and business environment, and we are dedicated to future efforts such as the Farmers' Market. If you have any suggestions for the improvement of the market or possible future activities, please let us know.

Dean Rizzo, vice president,
Cohasset Chamber of Commerce

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Cohasset Village station is a bad idea

To the Editor:

The plan to construct the train station, with its 450 car parking lot and 800 foot concrete platform, in Cohasset Village is definitely a mistake. This enormous lot (as large as the Music Circus') and platform (approximately the length of three football fields) will increase traffic and congestion of the narrow streets surrounding the village, not to mention the increased noise and pollution from the nine-car diesel trains stopping and starting in the village 24 times a day.

The need to cut trees, blast ledge, and demolish someone's home to make room for this parking lot, and the additional $3 million it would cost, makes this proposal ludicrous.

The assumption that it will help to re-vitalize the businesses downtown is wrong. Take a look at Quincy Center and see what the train station did for those businesses. Also, how many Cohasset residents are actually going to use the train, let alone walk to it? People will have to take their cars anyway.

The contention that the station will be "hidden" is wrong. You will be able to see it from South Main Street, Ripley Road, Pleasant (unless they close it off and erect a huge wall!) Depot Court and Brook St. The Common won't be as pleasant either, with the increase in noise, traffic and pollution so close by.

This is not Petticoat Junction we're talking about. This is the MBTA and the Red Line! I'm reminded of the song "They paved Paradise and put up a parking lot – You don't know what you've got 'til it's gone." Take a ride to Whitman, Abington or Randolph on Route 139 and see what these stations look like.

Please attend the next mitigation meeting and let our town officials know the townspeople of Cohasset want the station out of sight on Route 3A, not in the heart of Cohasset Village.

Flowerbox help appreciated

To the Editor:

The Village Renaissance Committee wishes to thank all those who helped make our recent "flowerbox project" a success. In particular, we thank Ann Whelan for organizing the project; Anna Abbruzzese and Francie Andrews for helping to select and plant the flowers; Lou Simeone and Bud Ahearn for building additional boxes to meet demand; and the village merchants for purchasing the boxes and tending the flowers. The colorful displays made strolling through the village a pleasure this summer.

Results of Reader Survey question for October 3, 1996

Cohasset selectmen and the MBTA are considering having the train station in Cohasset Village which would be in lieu of the station now planned for Route 3A at the former skating rink site. Do you support a village train station?

Yes 55

No 72

Your comments:

The train is a travesty. To put it in downtown Cohasset will ruin our beautiful town.

The village station is a horrible idea. The 3A station is a little bit better. But the train will kill us financially. I vote to kill this project.

I'm very much in favor of a village station and it makes total sense in every way.

I think the train is a bad idea, but if it has to come, let it stop in the village.

I wish the selectmen would wake up and not just lay back and let this happen. I drive 3A every day, and I've lived here 6-1/2 years by choice. Quincy Square is fraught with accidents with people running for the train. The free cash fund in Cohasset will be gone and I hope we're ready to fight all these meritless lawsuits that are going to result, because we live in an litigious society. I grew up in Hyde Park and I chose to live here, and it was a quiet enclave in the city of Boston until the train came through. The complexion of the town changed, the taxes changed. It's not the same section of the city of Boston because of the traffic and the nightmare problems. This is not a good thing.

I'm very concerned about the traffic that would be coming into town to access the train. I've heard many contradictory statements from the mitigation committee and others interested in the relocation of the train site about people walking to the village which seems to be contradicted by adding 350 parking spaces to the village parking area. Although there are two committees working on this issue, no one has truly reached out in a survey such as this with regards to people who would be impacted by a downtown train station. Given the new nature of this proposal—one of the mitigation committee members it's only within the last 4 to 6 weeks that this idea has been in circulation—it's very important for the newspaper to alert people to this proposal. At least with the train on 3A we won't have more traffic downtown, particularly when you consider we'll also be dealing with the attendant backups when the train is passing through town 24 times a day.

The reason we don't need a train station in Cohasset Village is that everyone in the area will drive to our town to park in our area, all around the town, and along the streets, trying to find a cheap place to park. Some of the downtown merchants may think they'll stop in on the way to their cars they might stop in, that doesn't mitigate the difficulties and inconveniences for the townspeople. I strongly think we shouldn't have a station in downtown Cohasset.

I really don't believe the village is big enough for a train station, a platform, and a garage for 450 cars. I don't see how the train station will revitalize the village and bring shoppers in. I cannot envision people coming to Cohasset Village to shop. It's just going to be too cumbersome.

I'm new to town, but I think a village train stop would be excellent. I love the village but I think it needs a pick-me-up. It seems to be going no where. I love the idea that people can walk to the train. At Route 3A, no one can walk to the train station.

I am opposed to the village station. My main concern is traffic. In order for cars to reach the village, they pass through wholly residential roads: Main Street, Pond Street, Beechwood Street, Sohier Street are all residential roads. If the parking garage were on Route 3A, that is a road that's designed to handle traffic. At that site a parking garage could be built to handle even more cars. I don't think it will impact our property values one way or the other if we have the station in the village or on 3A. I do believe Cohasset residents will drive to the station no matter where it is. Therefore 3A is a better site.

I support a whistle-stop in Cohasset Center, but I'd also like to see a station on Route 3A because there's more area for parking.

I am not in favor of having the train station in Cohasset Village. I work in the Village 3, 4, 5 times a week. I find the parking is awful right now. I can hardly find a place at 9:30 in the morning. Let along if I work at noon, it's impossible to find a space in the parking lot. There are too many things going on at the Community Center and the Art Center that take up all the parking spaces. Plus everyone who works in town is supposed to park in back. I understand that 100 parking spaces will be allotted to the town. What prevents commuters from using the free spaces before they have to use the paid parking? That is my biggest complaint.

I think it will not add to the beauty of the village at all to put a station there. I think it won't bring business into the town. It'll be dirty, noisy, and dangerous. I don't want the train at all, but if it has to come, the station would be better on Route 3A. Thanks for having this survey.

I'm not in favor of a station in Cohasset Village. When I first heard the train is coming, and the station would be on 3A, I thought that didn't make any sense at all. When I worked in Boston, I took the bus. It was very convenient. I didn't have to shovel my car. But the more I've thought about the station downtown, while it might be nice to walk to the train, there's the rest of my life to think about, and my kids' lives. It won't revitalize the village. Having a parking lot with 450 cars rather than a parking lot for 100 cars, doesn't make sense for Cohasset. It will change the character of the village. There are so many children's activities right down by the station: two nursery schools, the art center, the community center, the teen center, the library. Kids on their bikes will have to deal with commuters rushing to the train.

Keep the train station on Route 3A. The traffic and pollution will be unbelievably horrible. Please don't ruin our village and the neighborhood adjoining it.

I will use the train to commute, and I will walk to the village station.

Greenbush is fiscally irresponsible

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

To the Editor:

In the Oct. 3 issue of the Hingham Journal was an article entitled "Macmillan Still Touts Rail Tunnel Under the Square; MBTA Owns up to Noise Impacts." There were some astounding figures in regards to the total construction cost of the Greenbush restoration project. The original projected cost of $215 million in itself is probably outdated, taking into consideration inflation since the figure was originally quoted. And, if you add the cost of the Hingham tunnel (which Hingham will most probably get) of $100 million, plus an additional $3 million if the Cohasset station is moved downtown, plus the additional cost of capping the landfill in Scituate, plus a quarter of a million dollars for every four-way gate system which the MBTA has stated they will use on this line in lieu of disruptive train whistles, plus the amount of money which has already been spent prior to the actual appearance of the train, we could be talking about a project that will cost Massachusetts taxpayers a half a billion dollars, just to remove 1,300 cars from the roads! Include this cost with $20 million a year for maintenance of the line and it becomes almost unbearable.

The MBTA is out of control!

Massachusetts already has the third-highest debt load in the nation and 70 percent of this is attributable to the MBTA. The restoration of Greenbush is a mistake for many reasons but even its biggest supporters have to question whether the cost is justifiable considering the MBTA's own low ridership projections.

I have to ask if this is what Gov. Weld calls fiscal responsibility. Who does transportation secretary and MBTA Chairman James Kerasiotes answer to that he can spend the State's money without discipline? The answer is William F. Weld, our self touting, "fiscally conservative" governor.

High court awards primary victory to Delahunt

By ROB ROGERS
Cohasset Mariner

The state Supreme Judicial Court has upheld last Friday's decision by Superior Court Judge Elizabeth B. Donovan to name William Delahunt the Democratic candidate in the race to succeed Gerry Studds in the 10th Congressional District.

The six court justices ruled Tuesday that the 646 ballots cast by Weymouth voters using an antiquated punch-card system should be considered votes — as Donovan and the Delahunt campaign contended — and not blanks, as the Johnston campaign and a Sept. 30 recount claimed.

Last Friday, after examining 956 disputed ballots from nine communities, Donovan awarded 469 of the disputed votes to Delahunt and 177 to Johnston. The change meant that Johnston, declared the victor in the Sept. 17 primary by 266 votes, had now lost to Delahunt by 108.

"Now that the wishes of the Democratic voters has been made clear, it is time for the party to put the primary campaign behind it and gear up to help ensure a Democrat-controlled 105th Congress," Delahunt said in a prepared statement which referred to the three weeks since the primary as a "hiatus" caused by "faulty ballot counting machines."

Johnston conceded victory to Delahunt Tuesday afternoon.

"Although I disagree strongly with it, I accept the court's decision," Johnston said in a prepared statement. "I am very proud of the thousands of volunteers who produced a miraculous near-victory in this election. They worked hard because they're committed to a government which cares for its people. I will continue to work with them to bring about progressive change in our district and country. I congratulate Mr. Delahunt on his victory and wish him well."

Donovan announced her decision Friday at the very moment first lady Hillary Clinton and other Democratic leaders were pledging their support for Johnston at a Quincy rally.

UNEASY ALLIES William Delahunt and Phil Johnston, Democratic contenders for the 10th District Congressional seat held by retiring U.S. Rep. Gerry Studds, pledge to support one another while awaiting the results of a state Supreme Judicial Court contest to determine which of them will be their party's nominee.*

"It was a majestic, jubilant demonstration, the happiest moment of [Johnston's] life," said Jane Lane, Johnston's press secretary. "And yet it was awful — I couldn't look at them — because at that point I knew."

Donovan's decision was merely the latest unpredictable turn of events in the Democratic campaign to succeed retiring U.S. Rep. Gerry Studds, D-Cohasset.

Long considered the likely victor in the primary, Delahunt, District Attorney for Norfolk County, urged his fellow Democrats on the night of Sept. 17 to "come together for the general election."

When Johnston narrowly defeated him at the polls, however, Delahunt — after some hesitation — called for a recount in six communities — including two, Weymouth and Brockton, in which voters cast an unusually high number of blank ballots. Observers had predicted large victories for Delahunt in Weymouth and Brockton. The Johnston campaign asked for recounts in three additional communities, including Cohasset.

The Sept. 30 recount reduced Johnston's lead to 175 votes, but kept the former state representative and New England director of health and human services squarely in the winner's circle. The Delahunt campaign challenged that recount in Plymouth Superior Court. Following Delahunt's court victory, Johnston appealed that decision before the Supreme Judicial Court.

Both Delahunt and Johnston agreed prior to yesterday's Supreme Judicial Court decision that the ruling would end the primary campaign, and that the loser of the court battle would support the victor as the Democratic candidate.

In a Monday press conference at the Weymouth Town Hall, both candidates declared their contention for the Democratic nomination has not sabotaged their party's chance to prevail against Republican candidate Ed Teague — described by one Boston newspaper as "the luckiest man in politics" — in the Nov. 5 election.

"[The controversy has] frozen political contributions to both of us," Johnston said. "But there is a silver lining to all this, in that all of you are here talking to us, and not Ed Teague. The last three weeks have focused on the Democratic drama, and in a political sense that could be helpful to us."

"Historically, the Democrats have had contentious primaries, and this has just been an extension of the primary," Delahunt said. "But after the primary is over, we always come together.

"If the Democratic voters had a tough choice between Phil Johnston and me, all the voters have an easy choice between my Republican opponent and me," Delahunt said, following the Tuesday decision.

Two hours after the candidates pledged their support for each other, attorneys for Delahunt and Johnston squared off before the Supreme Judicial Court.

Johnston's lawyer, Dennis Newman, argued that in order for the disputed ballots to be considered votes, the court must be able to "sufficiently establish with reasonable certainty the intent of the voter." Newman claims that in "90 to 95 percent" of the disputed ballots, no "reasonable certainty" can be established, because the ballots do not show a pattern of markings. One ballot, for example, might show a cleanly-punched hole for one office and an indentation for another.

Newman also suggested voters might have been confused by the presence of Assistant District Attorney Robert Delahunt, who is running for state Senate in the Plymouth-Norfolk District, on the ballot.

Delahunt's lawyer, Mike Mone, said in every case where a ballot is in question, the court should assume a vote was cast.

It would seem unlikely, Mone argued, that 20 percent of Weymouth's voters would brave a driving rainstorm on their way to the polls and then choose not to vote in the most hotly-contested race on the Democratic primary ballot. Discounting those disputed votes as blanks would disenfranchise Weymouth's voters, Mone said.

A representative from Secretary of State William Galvin's office told the court every day it delayed a decision on the primary vote past Wednesday would seriously impact the printing of absentee ballots for the general election.

Although Donovan's decision "suspended" the Johnston campaign's activities, Lane said she is confident the campaign will still be able to use donations from the Democratic National Committee and other major supporters to pay for expenses incurred since the primary. The campaign has established a separate legal defense fund to pay for the costs associated with the recount, Superior and Supreme Court cases.

Lane admitted it might be difficult, following Friday's heartbreak and the bitter words exchanged between the two campaigns in recent weeks, to support Delahunt should he win the courtroom battle.

"We'll just have to swallow our hard feelings and go forward for the greater good of the Democratic party," said Lane, who estimated the campaign's chances in Supreme Judicial Court as "50-50." "All of us are hurt by this, but we have to get over it quickly to ensure that Ed Teague does not take that seat."

Norma Fenochietti, a Johnston supporter who campaigned for Studds in 1972 and has since served with the state and national Democratic committees, said she had never experienced anything like the current 10th District campaign.

While she is confident her fellow Democrats will rally together and defeat Teague following the Supreme Judicial Court's decision, Fenochietti hopes the party can avoid such divisive contests in the future.

"The most I know is that the law in this state says if the margin of victory is less than half of one percent of the vote, a candidate can ask for a recount," Fenochietti said. "There's also a loophole that says if the margin of victory is greater, a candidate can ask for recounts in certain precincts, which is what happened here. I don't think that should happen. I think there should only be recounts across the whole district, the way the law is stated."

Bill Delahunt makes Cohasset appearance

Just two hours after a Superior Court judge ruled Bill Delahunt the winner in the Sept. 17 Democratic congressional primary, the Norfolk County district attorney made a Cohasset appearance.

Delahunt's nephew, Robert Delahunt, a democrat of Weymouth was about to debate incumbent state Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, at the Second Congregational Church Friday evening when Bill Delahunt arrived and sat quietly in the back of the room.

However, the Fox network (Channel 25) news anchorman and TV camera and were soon on the scene to grab Bill Delahunt for a comment about the judge's decision. Phil Johnston of Marshfield immediately appealed the superior court judge's ruling naming Delahunt the winner but Tuesday, the state Supreme Court upheld her decision (see related story this page).

The debate, which will be televised on cable-TV at a date and time to be announced, was sponsored by the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce. Wigmore Pierson served as moderator and questions were posed to the candidates by Mary Ford, editor of the Cohasset Mariner; Andrew Nelson, reporter for the Patriot Ledger; and Paula Knowles of the TinyTown Gazette.

The candidates debated Greenbush, worker's compensation, county government and charter schools among other issues.

PSO help sought

Many different fund-raising events are being sponsored by the PSO this year, including gift-wrap sales, a fall dance and silent auction etc. The success of these events requires the work of many individuals with many different talents. If you would like to join a committee for one of these events or help out in any manner, please call Tomi Bukowski at 383-6771, Lesley Faber at 383-2071, Patty Smith at 383-2773 or Jane Wasel at 383-0121.

Health advisory group to meet

The Cohasset Health Education Advisory Committee will meet for the first time this year at 7 p.m., Monday, Oct. 21 in room 206 at Cohasset High School.

Any parent or resident interested in promoting health education in the schools is welcome. The committee meets four times a year. For more information, call Mike Gill, 383-6103.

Family health program slated

Project Safeguard is a family approach to adolescent health-related issues and substance abuse. The Cohasset Jr./Sr. H.S.'s seventh grade class will attend this program during regular school hours. Workshops will address issues of self-esteem, harassment, drug and alcohol prevention, peer pressure etc. Seventh grade parents are urged to attend and sixth grade parents are invited to volunteer and view what may be on the agenda for next year.

The program goals are:

— to provide an environment for parent/student interaction

— to improve parent/student communication

— to strengthen self esteem of parents & students

— to foster community awareness and commitment to family issues/values

— to build skills in young people that will empower them to more successfully avoid harmful choices.

This approach to prevention education is unique because it brings students and parents together at an off-school site for an all-day conference. The sessions will be located in churches around the Common as well as the auditorium in Cohasset Town Hall. The material to be covered during the program has also been reviewed and approved by the seventh grade team and Jr./Sr. High Principal Curtis Collins.

This will be an important day for your child and the Health Education Program, and the entire seventh grade team are hopeful that at least one parent of each child will attend. If that is not possible, parents may want to designate a family member/friend to accompany their child for the day.

Further information and registration form will be forthcoming; in the meantime, please mark your calendars for Wednesday, Oct. 16, 7:45 a.m. to 1:40 p.m., and reserve the day to participate in the Cohasset education process and help make learning a family experience.

This program is being funded with grant money as well as additional money from The P.A.L.S. for wellness program (Police Assisting Local Schools) which is administered by Police Chief Brian Noonan and Health Education Coordinator, Michael Gill.

Open house at Notre Dame

Notre Dame Academy, 1073 Main St., Hingham, will hold an open house Sunday, Oct. 27, from 1 to 5 p.m. All interested girls and their parents are invited to attend. Notre Dame is a Catholic college-preparatory high school for young women.

Visitors will have an opportunity to meet with students, faculty and administrators and take guided tours of the school. Registration for the Archdiocesan entrance exam set for Saturday, Dec. 14, will also take place. The exam will be administered at Notre Dame.

For more information regarding the open house or exam registration, call the admissions office at 749-5930.

Derby open house set

Derby Academy, 56 Burditt Ave., Hingham, has scheduled an open house for visitors Tuesday, Oct. 22, beginning at 8:45 a.m. in the school library. Jay Sadlon, director of admissions, and Linda Wakeman, parents' association admissions liaison, have planned the event as an informal introduction for parents interested in learning more about the pre-K through grade 9 school.

Headmaster Edward Foley will give parents an overview of Derby's educational program, and Sadlon will review the application process. Parents of current Derby students will lead visitors on tours of the campus, and division heads and faculty will be on hand to answer questions during and after the tours.

Those interested in attending the event may call the school office at 749-0746.

Articles reviewed for Special Town Meeting

By JASON BOUFFARD
Cohasset Mariner

Selectmen had a long list of decisions to make in preparation for this month's Special Town Meeting.

Last Wednesday night, the board met at Town Hall to deliberate on a list of 41 articles which the town will vote on at the Oct. 28 meeting. With help from Advisory Board representative Roger Whitley and Town Accountant Michael Buckley, Selectmen Merle Brown, Nancy Roth, Peter Pratt, Michael Sullivan and Roseanne McMorris rendered their decisions on most of the articles. Particular attention was given to the strains each article would place on the town's free cash fund.

After its deliberation, the board estimated its free cash expenditures at about $659,000, not far off from the target amount.

The effort to keep the free cash budget in control is at odds with an attempt to finance articles with borrowed funds. Whitley expressed a desire to borrow less this year than in the past.

Slightly more than one-third of the articles will be funded by free cash, while less than one out of 10 will require borrowed funds. Other sources of funding include state funding, taxation, overlay surplus, water revenue and water debt service.

While many articles were approved unanimously by the board, other issues sparked lengthy debate.

The board's support divided over the issue of the purchase of 12 handheld two-way radios for use by the Fire Department. The request, put forth by Fire Chief Roger Lincoln, would require a $12,000 free cash investment.

After discussing the article, the board voted 3-2 to allow that six radios be purchased, instead of the proposed 12. Some board members asked why 12 were needed when fewer than 12 fire-fighters are normally on-duty at one time.

Selectman Michael Sullivan went to task with the idea that the radios would be housed in the fire station, as opposed to remaining at all times with town fire fighters. Emergency communication equipment housed in the fire station would in no way increase the safety of fire fighters at the scene of a fire, he said. He argued that the $12,000 article was useless unless a more appropriate plan was adopted for the use of the equipment.

But Selectman Peter Pratt argued that the fire chief should be allowed to decide on the best way to use fire safety equipment. He cited that most fire fighters killed in the line of duty lose their life due to breakdowns in communication at the fire scene. Two-way radios would improve communication and increase safety for fire fighters, Pratt said.

Other notable issues included the 3-1 decision not to approve an article intended to allow the town to hire a project manager to direct ongoing major capital projects, such as the construction of the new elementary school and the DPW garage, as well as sewer and water projects.

Although Selectman Pratt argued that the level of construction activity justified the need for a project manager, other board members felt the issue should be further researched before a decision is rendered.

A motion to research the project manager issue was formally put forth by Selectman Sullivan.

Also of note was the board's approval of an article submitted by the Board of Health enabling the town to hire consultants to conduct inspections of all property serviced by on-site wastewater disposal systems. The plan will begin the process of upgrading septic systems throughout Cohasset, and a subsidy program for homeowners in need of septic system improvements will be developed in the future.

The board also discussed the need to research the possibility of eliminating town-owned buses in lieu of rented buses. Board Chairman Merle Brown stated that most neighboring towns now rent these vehicles, while Cohasset still purchases its own buses.

Appalachia Service Project registrations to close soon

The Cohasset Appalachia Service Project has begun preparations for its ASP '97 summer workcamp trip. Following a meeting on Sept. 22, the group received 24 teenage registrations. Forty-eight can be accommodated. However, there will be a cut-off date this year, and any teenage registrations received after Nov. 1 will be placed on a waiting list.

Registration packets are available at the following churches: First Parish, St. Anthony's, St. Stephen's and Second Congregational and may also be picked up in the main office at Cohasset High School. There is room for several more adults. Registrations for college age "CITS" will taken in March.

Old and rare books is topic

Cohasset Elder Affairs will sponsor a lecture, "Treasures in your Attic: Old and Rare Books," Thursday, Oct. 24, at the Senior Center, 3 North Main St.

Kenneth Gloss, proprietor of the nationally known Brattle Book Shop in Boston, will speak at about 1:40 p.m., following the council's luncheon.

Gloss will bring to the lecture several examples of interesting books, magazines and ephemera from the store's private collection, including a 1912 World Series scorecard and old Life magazines.

For further information, call Brattle Book Shop at (800) 447-9595.

Two free flu clinics offered

Two free flu clinics will be held in October, sponsored by the Social Service League of Cohasset and Cohasset Board of Health. The first will be held Saturday, Oct. 19, from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m., at Bates Hall, Second Congregational Church, and the second clinic is scheduled for Saturday, Oct. 26, at Cohasset Town Hall.

Senior citizens will have the opportunity to receive flu shots before the townwide clinics as follows:

Tuesday, Oct. 15, from 10 to 11:30 a.m., at the Senior Center and Friday, Oct. 18, from 10 a.m. to noon at Harborview senior housing, 60 Elm St.

Pneumonia vaccine will be available to individuals age 65 and older and those with chronic heart or lung conditions. The pneumonia vaccine is a one-time vaccination except in rare cases where a physician is required to make an evaluation. The clinics will administer first-time vaccinations only.

The Mass. Department of Public Health is also providing tetanus vaccine and is urging those who have not had tetanus booster in the last 10 years to do so at the flu clinic.

All three of the above vaccines can be administered simultaneously with few or no side effects. There is no charge for any of the immunizations.

For further details, call the League office at 383-0771 or 383-0821 (Monday-Friday, 8:30 a.m. to 3 p.m.)

Elder Affairs news is noted

Seniors are invited to participate in the SHARE (Self Help and Resource Exchange) program. For $14 and two hours of volunteer work a month, a food package worth $30 to $35 is available. A typical package consists of meat, fruit and vegetables.

A smaller order is available for $8, which suits a single individual or small family.

Income is not a deciding factor, and the program is not government-subsidized. Cash only is accepted as payment.

Sign-ups will be held Oct. 7-11, from 9 a.m. to noon, at the Senior Center.

Oct. 19 is bagging day at 141 Will Drive, Canton, and Oct. 26 is distribution day at Deer Hill School from 8 to 10 a.m. Individuals may sign up for the next month's food package at the same time.

Suggestions for volunteering include serving and assisting with senior lunches Tuesday or Thursday, driving the senior shuttle, bagging fruit and vegetables at the SHARE warehouse on Will Drive and assisting seniors with shopping.

For more information, call John Kierce at 383-2067 or Rose Kierce at 383-0578.

"Classrooms Without Walls," sponsored by Quincy College, are being held at the Council on Aging, 3 North Main St. They include An Afternoon with Robert Frost; Broadway, Here We Come!; Women's Writers; and Major Religions of the World (dates to be announced).

Fall classes include step aerobics, low-impact exercise, easy exercise, luncheon at noon Tuesdays and Thursdays), chi gong, Walking with Ginny, computers, woodworking, gourmet cooking (2nd and fourth Mondays and Wednesdays, 9:30 a.m.). knitting, book discussion group, 55 Alive and "Stretch and Strengthen" (introduction to yoga) with Mary Jane Butura.

A flu and pneumonia clinic is set for Tuesday, Oct. 15, at 10 a.m.

For transportation during the month of October, call 383-9112 or 9116. Out-of-town trips are planned from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. on Monday, Oct. 7, Braintree Mall; Wednesday, Oct. 9, Hanover Mall; Wednesday, Oct. 16, S.S. VoTech, Hanover; Wednesday, Oct. 23, Christmas Tree Shop, lunch at Lou's, Marshfield.

Cohasset Elder Affairs is developing a new Elder Advocacy Specialist Service consisting of a small group of volunteers who will provide assistance to frail and needy elders in the community.

The time commitment is flexible. Those interested in volunteering are asked to call Cathy Glenzel at 383-9116.

A financial education:

How to pay the freight for your child's undergraduate degree

Edited by Elizabeth MacDonald
WORTH MAGAZINE

These days, you can't find a parent of a young child who isn't biting nails off about college costs. With good reason: a four-year degree at a private college or university — never mind graduate studies — could cost more than $130,000 by the time your 7-year-old goes off to school, according to the College Board, a college cost-tracking firm in New York City.

YOUR MONEY'S WORTH

There may be a rich few for whom this kind of money represents an out-of-pocket expense, but most of us must plan well in advance to pay these bills. Mutual funds — particularly growth-stock funds — are still the best way to save for college over anything but the very short run, says Don Phillips, editor of Morningstar Mutual Funds. "Yes, you've got a little more risk, but you're also likely to get a better return," he says. The right funds can even help parents who get a late start accumulate a respectable pool of money for their kids. "The main thing is to get started," says Lisa Osofsky, a CPA and financial planner in Iselin, N.J. "Then at least you have a base to build on."

Dollar cost averaging (investing a set amount each month or quarter) can minimize the impact of market volatility. Most mutual funds have automatic investment plans, which draw regular contributions as low as $50 from your bank account.

The amount you'll need to invest will vary according to your income, your child's age, and how much of the bill you intend to pay. Say you have a 7-year-old daughter. If college, tuition, room, and board continues to rise at their current rate — about 6 percent annually — her total four-year tuition will be nearly $54,000 at a public school, and more than $130,000 at a private one. To raise $130,000, you'll need to set aside about $7,105 a year until she graduates in an investment that returns at least 6 percent annually.

That's a sizable chunk of money, which is a good reason for turning to stocks. Bonds and other fixed-income instruments may be less risky, but putting your money in bonds paying 3 to 4 percent annually won't give you the returns you need. Phillips's personal favorite for college savings is Vanguard U.S. Growth, a large-cap stock fund with a $3,000 minimum investment. It's got low fees and solid one-,three-, and five-year total returns. Another reason Phillips likes it is that it's full of well-known stocks like Walt Disney, the kind kids are likely to recognize. "It's a good way to share with them how you're saving," he says.

Washington, D.C., financial planner William Brennan likes Mutual Shares and Mutual Qualified, because in addition to growth, they offer limited amounts of taxable income. Brennan says, "My overall strategy is to try to keep the income down and focus on growth."

What should you avoid? Obviously, speculative or high-risk funds aren't suitable for something as sensitive as your child's education. Save for the sector funds, small-cap, biotech, or start-up company funds for money you're less likely to need. You should also resist the urge to try to time the markets. Once you've selected a strategy or investment, stick with it. If you have less than 10 years before your child's freshman year, start moving some of your money into fixed-income funds. Jeff Merriman, vice president of Merriman Investment Management in Seattle, suggests dividing your investment between a fund like the Vanguard Index Trust 500 and a conservative bond fund.

When your kids are within five years of college, consider short-term bond funds. Vanguard Fixed Short-Term Federal invests in bonds with maturities under three years and returns averaging 7 percent. And don't forget U.S. Treasury bills. You can now lock in a five-year rate of 7 percent — not bad if you want a guaranteed return up to the moment you send your child off to school. By the time junior is a senior in high school, most advisers recommend switching to a more liquid investment, like a money market fund, to

Airline clubs offer civilized travel

By Bruce Williams

DEAR BRUCE: The other day I was on an airplane making a connection in Houston. We were told that we were arriving on time, but that the connection from Houston to Los Angeles was going to be several hours late due to a mechanical problem. The man in the seat next to me said something to the effect of, "Well, I guess I'll go hang out in the club." I raised an eyebrow and asked, "What are you talking about? What club?" He said that all the airlines have private clubs in the airport, and that he was a member.

smart money

At the time I didn't think to ask, but now I am wondering why they would have a private club. How do you get to be a member? I had to sit outside in the terminal with screaming kids and all kinds of noise, and when I met him on the next leg, he told me had taken a bit of a rest and had a drink in a quiet atmosphere. What's the deal here? I feel I have been discriminated against. — C.W., Boulder, Colo.

DEAR C.W.: No discrimination here. Anybody can join the clubs at the airports, and most of the major airlines have them. The cost can range from $150 to $250 per year, or if you prefer, you can get a lifetime membership for substantially more. In addition, Northwest Airlines Clubs are available to any of their passengers owning an American Express platinum card.

Most of the clubs have complimentary soft drinks and pretzels, coffee, sweet rolls, muffins, and mixed drinks at the bar. They also have fax machines, many telephones, comfortable chairs, television, and clean bathrooms. Regular travelers, this writer included, generally belong to two or three clubs. That way you can find a club you belong to at almost every airport.

For casual travelers, the expense can be substantial, but for regular travelers who fly many times a year, club membership is an absolute requirement for civilized travel.

'Luck isn't on our side'

Lady Skippers suffering tough season on the soccer field

By JOE REARDON
Cohasset Mariner

The closer the game, the more frustrating things become for the Cohasset High girls soccer team.

The Lady Skippers, for example, played both South Shore League powers Abington and Hanover tough for the opening half of their matches, locked in ties of 1-1 and 0-0, respectively. However, Cohasset's strong defense just couldn't hold up under the relentless attacks of the two much deeper squads and finally succumbed to the pressure.

It has been that kind of season for the 1-9-1 Cohasset squad and its head coach Maureen O'Day-Clark.

"Luck isn't on our side this time around," said O'Day-Clark, whose team qualified for the Division 3 South Sectional tourney just one short year ago.

The Lady Skippers have been overrun with injuries to key players all season and it has taken a nasty toll. There are currently five starters nursing some sort of injury. And with just four substitutes, O'Day-Clark doesn't have a deep bench in which to work with.

Netminder Catie Campbell makes a diving stop in the Cohasset High girls soccer team's lone victory of the season over Hull.

She admits the losses have taken their toll on the team, though the girls have continued to work hard in practice and games.

"When you get this far down it's hard to pull yourself out," O'Day-Clark said. "We're trying to keep our spirits up. It's all you really can do."

Tuesday's 1-0 loss to Norton was also a backbreaker for the Lady Skippers. The tally came on a fluke shot that trickled in. Cohasset had its opportunities to score, but just couldn't find the back of the nest when the offense was in the Lady Lancers' end.

O'Day-Clark has been pleased with the play of many team members. Ali Kinchla and Andrea Freeman have both played their usual consistent defense and Alex DeRosa has done a fine job in goal with usual starter Catie Campbell now playing out of the net.

With such a young team, many of the more inexperienced players have had more than their share of playing time, which can only be a plus in the coming seasons.

"It's important to have the young kids out there," O'Day-Clark said. "There's nothing much you can do about the injuries we've had."

Cohasset Skippers drop homecoming game

By JIM O'SULLIVAN
Special to the Mariner

The Cohasset football Skippers varsity football team showed improvement last week, but suffered another defeat, this one at the hands of the Norton Lancers, by a score of 28-6. The game, which was Cohasset's Homecoming, was played in front of a sizable crowd, the biggest yet at the new Cohasset Alumni Field.

Despite its defeat, Cohasset did draw first blood. Early in the first quarter, senior co-captain Grant Emde broke free for a 28-yard scramble to the Cohasset 31-yard line. Then, senior Matt Belson burst through a gaping hole in the left side of the offensive line, cleared out by Chad Whitman and John Kasameyer. Belson bolted 80 yards for the touchdown, his third of the season, but not without a key block by Raheem Shepard, who hustled from the opposite side of the field to make the hit. However, the two-point conversion was stuffed and the Skippers would not score again.

When Norton got the ball back, Cohasset buckled down to play good defense. Sophomore Justin Golden showed textbook form on a backfield tackle, dropping Norton for a four-yard loss. Jamie Buick hustled from around end to make a tackle on the opposite side of the line. A trio of seniors, Belson, Doug Cameron and Matt Conley, combined to make a third down tackle, forcing a Norton punt.

However, Cohasset couldn't get moving on offense and was forced to punt. In a strange play, the punt was blocked, touched by Norton, then recovered by Kevin Duffy, resulting in a Cohasset first down. On third and two, Belson broke three tackles along the sideline to gain the first. Jamie DeMichele rolled for six yards, but the Skippers again punted. Sophomore

Hurley is Queen of 'Skipper Nation'

By JOE REARDON
Cohasset Mariner

Seventeen-year-old Jo Hurley had the usual reaction when it was announced last Friday night that she was Cohasset High's 1996 Homecoming Queen.

"I was shocked," said Hurley, the captain of the Lady Skippers' field hockey team. "It's something I'll always remember."

Hurley, along with Homecoming King Kevin McKenna, who captains the boys soccer team, were presented a tiara and crown, respectively, along with gifts of flowers and other presents.

Hurley and McKenna learned they were nominated for the positions at that afternoon's pep rally along with Lauren Cassino, Catie Campbell, Erica Hettstrom, Grant Emde, Matt Belson and Tom Forbes-Kittle.

Interestingly enough, all the nominees are involved in one sport or another. Besides Hurley and McKenna, Cassino is captain of the cheerleading squad, Hettstrom is an All-Star gymnast, Forbes-Kittle is on the soccer team, Emde plays lacrosse and Belson is a member of the football squad.

Hurley is currently on the lone fall team that has the best shot at qualifying for the postseason. Both soccer teams are having sub-par seasons after graduating a crop of key players from last year's tournament teams. The football team is struggling in its games after returning to the South Shore League following a seven-year hiatus.

"We have a good chance at qualifying for the tournament," Hurley said. "We have to win four more games."

Cohasset's newest Homecoming Queen plans on playing on the girls lacrosse team this spring, and after graduating, hopes to attend either Boston College or Holy Cross.

Until then, however, she's the Queen of Skipper Nation.

Skippers drop game

Mike Rossi put some leg into it, launching it 35 yards.

The Lancers finally got moving, as Shane McCauley rushed into the end zone from eight yards out. The extra point made it 7-6, Norton. On Norton's next possession, Adam Puller also scored from eight out. The second quarter finally ended for the Skippers after McCauley knotched another TD for the Lancers, bringing the total to 21-6. In the third quarter, Cohasset's defense held Norton to one score, a 19-yard TD run by Puller and it ended that way, 28-6, as neither team could push it over in the fourth frame.

Throughout the game, Cohasset was haunted by offsides penalties and poor tackling technique. Coach Knurek emphasized that in his simple postgame quote. "If we learn to stay on onsides on offense and wrap our tackles on defense, we'll be competitive."

Now 0-3, the Skippers journey to Scituate Friday to face the Sailors. The game will be played at 7 p.m.

. . . AND AWAY WE GO!

"Let's get away from it all" was the theme of a popular song many years ago. If it was a good idea then, it's an even better one now. Getting away is virtually a necessity in these days of stressful jobs and high activity lifestyles. A visit to a different climate, a change in scenery, a contrasting culture, and just doing something out of the ordinary can relieve tensions and recharge one's batteries. Those who travel often have learned, though, that the key to a successful vacation is to plan it in advance. We intend to help you with the important task of planning your vacations by bringing you up-to-date information on places to go, things to do, and sights to see. We will also share some of our favorite travel tips and suggest ways that you can make the most of those precious vacation days.

Welcome to our new column on the wonderful world of travel. We have a superior staff of professionals, offering you the world, or at least a little bit of it, for your travel pleasure. SCITUATE HARBOR TRAVEL, is a full service travel agency, highly qualified, with a reputation for saving you time, money, and aggravation. Travel today can be a complicated affair. Make it easy on yourself and call us at 545-4281 or 800-354-2720, 53 Cole Parkway, Scituate Harbor. We're easy to find, fun to visit, and charge you nothing for our services.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS THE TRIAL COURT PROBATE AND FAMILY COURT DEPARTMENT
Norfolk Division
Docket No. 95P0540E2

Notice Of Fiduciary's Account

To all persons interested in the estate of Ruth S. Silvia late of Cohasset, Ma. in the County of Norfolk.

You are hereby notified pursuant to Mass. R. Civ. P. Rule 72 that the First and Final account of Richard J. Silvia as Executor (the fiduciary) of said estate has been presented to said Court for allowance.

If you desire to preserve your right to file an objection to said account, you or your attorney must file a written appearance in said Court at Dedham on or before the 13th day of November, 1996 the return day of this citation. You may upon written request by registered or certified mail to the fiduciary, or to the attorney for the fiduciary, obtain without cost a copy of said account. If you desire to object to any item of said account, you must, in addition to filing a written appearance as aforesaid, file within thirty days after said return day or within such other time as the Court upon motion may order a written statement of each such item together with the grounds for each objection thereto, a copy to be served upon the fiduciary pursuant to Mass. R. Civ. P. Rule 5.

WITNESS, David H. Kopelman, Esquire, First Justice of said Court at Dedham this 2nd day of October, 1996.

Halloween party on Common planned

Mark your calendars for Sunday, Oct. 27, when the annual South Shore Community Center Nursery School Halloween Fair will take place. A Halloween tradition for nearly 20 years, this year's party is scheduled from 1:30 to 3:30 p.m. on Cohasset Common.

The fair will feature "spooky" fun for the entire family and include a giant circle of games of skill and luck. There will be an opening costume parade, moon walk, ghostball and refreshments.

Tickets for all games and activities may be purchased at the fair and cost 3 for $1. Most events require two or three tickets to participate.

Proceeds will benefit the SSCC Nursery School, including the school's scholarship and program funds.

For more information about the fair or nursery school, call Lynn Sheridan at 383-0036.

Family fall festival benefit

A Family Fall Festival will be held Saturday, Oct. 26, from 3 to 8 p.m. at South Shore Community Center, Cohasset. Activities will include a haunted house, scavenger hunt, hayride, costume contest, children's games, prizes, bowling, TV football party for adults, dinner, dancing to the "Grateful Dads," silent auction and raffle. Costumes are optional.

Tickets are $10 per person ($60 maximum per family) and may be purchased by calling 383-6670 or 383-6399.

The event is sponsored by South Shore Community Center, with proceeds benefitting the center, Cohasset Education Foundation and GEMS of Hope.

For further information, call Diane Tracy at 383-2551.

Green paintings on exhibit

Recently, after more than two years of perseverance at her studio in downtown Cohasset, local artist Donna Green completed the last of 23 oil paintings for a new edition of Margery Williams' famous children's class, "The Velveteen Rabbit."

"On Saturdays when I open my studio to the public, I enjoy showing the unpublished pictures for my next book. People usually comment on their favorite paintings and frequently offer encouragement. However, 'The Velveteen Rabbit' took so much longer than any of my previous books that I began to wonder if my visitors thought I would ever finish. I sometimes wondered that myself," says Green.

But finishing the paintings she did and so the Donna Green edition of "The Velveteen Rabbit" was published in December of 1995. Green remembers, "I was extremely nervous about how the book would be received. I didn't want to let down the people who had stood behind me week after week...or my daughter Monique who was my model for the fairy."

Like "The Velveteen Rabbit" story this tale has a happy ending. In just a few months, over a quarter of a million copies have been distributed in America and Canada and now new editions are under way in Germany and Australia.

On Sunday, Oct. 13, from 2 to 4 p.m., Thayer Gallery in Braintree located on the campus of Thayer Academy near Route 3, exit 17, is exhibiting all of Donna Green's original oil paintings from "The Velveteen Rabbit" at an open house. For printed directions, call (617) 837-1618.

Now is time to consign fall clothing and toys

Astute South Shore consumers may want to help their budgets by shopping at Cohasset Consignment Shop, located at Cushing Plaza, Route 3A.

Manager Andy Merrill noted new arrivals include a sterling dresser set from Shreve, Crump and Low (including mirror, brush, file and shoe horn); child's antique wooden doll cradle; and a collection of music boxes and English bone china dishes.

There are brand-name and hand-knit sweaters for children and adults as well as a large assortment of leather jackets for men and women and mink coats, hats and imported Italian gloves.

South Shore residents are encouraged to consign fall clothing and toys and stuffed animals in good condition. Consignments will be accepted Monday through Friday, 10 to 11:30 a.m., and Thursday through Oct. 24 from 6 to 8 p.m. Those wishing to volunteer may call 383-0771 or 383-0687.

Proceeds from the shop provide 60 percent [illegible] Social Service League budget. The group helps ba[illegible] women and offers support groups, flu and pneum[illegible] shots and nursing services for Hingham, Hull, Norwell, Scituate and Cohasset.

Amateur gardeners plan tour of Arnold Arboretum

The Cohasset Amateur Gardeners Club has arranged a professional guided coach tour through Arnold Arboretum Tuesday, Oct. 15.

Those interested in participating should be at St. Anthony's Church car park at 8:45 a.m. to join a carpool to the Arboretum and are asked to bring their own lunch and refreshments.

To reserve a place, call Merle at 383-9324 by Oct. 11. There is no charge for members. The fee for non-members and guests is $5.

Economist to speak at Chamber breakfast

Wayne Ayers, chief economist of Bank of Boston, will speak at a Chamber of Commerce breakfast Wednesday, Oct. 16, from 7:30 to 9 a.m. at the Light Keepers' House. The cost is $10 for members, $15 for non-members, including breakfast.

Ayers will give his views on the economy both here and abroad.

Final farmers' market

Don't miss the final Farmers' Market of the season from 3 to 7 p.m., today in the village parking lot. The weekly event is sponsored by the Chamber of Commerce and Village Revitalization Committee.

Water rate rage goes on

North Cohasset town water hookup floated

By CHARLENE VANDINI
Cohasset Mariner

Selectman Peter Pratt said Tuesday that a solution to North Cohasset residents' water complaints may be an eminent domain action against the Massachusetts-American Water Company.

For the third week, residents brought discolored and stained laundry to the selectmen's meeting, to demonstrate poor water quality and to protest skyrocketing water bills which are difficult to understand.

Mass-American president James Perry and vice president Keith Bossung attended Tuesday's meeting, to explain how the water bills are computed, and said the increases amount to, on the average, the 150 per cent increase that was forecasted when the company announced its plans for the new $40 million water treatment plant.

The water coming out of the treatment plant is "excellent," Perry said.

The water treatment plant was required to improve water quality, they said. Mass.-American kept the rates down to this level by creating a company that owns the treatment plant, and was able to finance the project at better interest rates. If conventional financing was used, the customers would have faced bills that could have been $170 per year more than those being received now.

Mass.-American is now working on a pamphlet that will be enclosed with the next water bills, which should more adequately explain the billing calculations, the company officials said.

Moderator wants time limits at town meetings

But selectmen want resolutions allowed

By CHARLENE VANDINI
Cohasset Mariner

Town moderator George Marlette wants to set time limits for town meeting debates, but selectmen turned Tuesday's discussion to the moderator's prohibition on resolutions.

Prior to Marlette's arrival, Cushing Road resident Linda Keller told the selectmen she is "deeply troubled" by the process that will not allow discussion on a Cohasset Village train station at the Oct. 28 special town meeting.

While residents are able to attend hearings on the subject, and the newspapers

Wildlife Center developing population control for animals

By CHARLENE VANDINI
Cohasset Mariner

The New England Wildlife Center is participating in a program to vaccinate deer with contraceptives, to reduce the population without resorting to killing the animals.

Wildlife Center Director Dr. Greg Mertz said the program is headed by the Humane Society of the United States, with researchers from Ohio Medical College. If successful, Mertz hopes it could be expanded to other species where populations have exploded.

Mertz said the innoculations have been made on a small herd of deer living in a six-acre conservation area in Newton. The herd has grown to approximately 40 deer.

Since the animals' diets are supplemented with hay, grain, and food pellets, the six acres is ample space for this number, he explained. But the herd cannot afford to become larger. If the animals were living in the wild, they would require four times more area to forage for sufficient food.

Rail foe seeks to unseat Mary Jeanette Murray

Says her platform includes more than train opposition

By ALICE C. COYLE
Cohasset Mariner

Nancy Buckley's last minute, primary election push to get her name on the November election ballot may have fallen short, but she hasn't conceded yet.

The Hingham resident launched a sticker campaign this week to run as the Democratic challenger to longtime incumbent state Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray, R-Cohasset.

To get her name on the ballot, Buckley would have had to receive 150 write-in votes in the September primary. When the votes were all tallied she had earned 57 votes in the election — 54 in Hingham and three in Cohasset.

According to Town Clerk Marion Douglas, Buckley can run in the November election as either a "write-in" candidate for which voters are asked to write in her name and address or use a "sticker campaign" in which she provides voters labels with her name and address to attach to the inside of the gray ballot envelope. Douglas said it means more work for the election staff who must count the sticker and write-in ballots by hand.

"It can slow down the process," she said.

Best known for her strong opposition to the restora-

Dump stickers checked

DPW Supt. Harold Litchfield told RTF employees to be more vigilant regarding "illegal dumpers."

"There have been a couple of anonymous telephone calls made to the Town Hall complaining that the employees are letting people dump their trash without a visible RTF sticker," he wrote in an Oct. 9 memo to dump employees.

"Please increase your efforts in identifying these illegal dumpers and refuse them if necessary," he said. "All vehicles are required to have these stickers except when in possession of a temporary permit issued by this office or the town clerk's office."

DPW status report

In his monthly status report to selectmen, DPW Supt. Harold Litchfield wrote the following DPW accomplishments for September:

Removal and disposal of the fence posts at the high school; rebuilding 21 basins in anticipation of road resurfacing; installing signs on Cedar Street, Hull Street and Tower Lane; moving excess sand from the parking lot back onto Sandy Beach; digging holes for, building and installing new gates at the DPW garage site; cleaning pipes at treats pond; cleaning off basin tops and flappers in anticipation of heavy winds and rain;

Cutting up and clearing away fallen trees and branches and chipping brush following storm; removal of hazardous materials from the Hagerty property; cutting back brush on Lamberts Lane; installing goal posts at the high school; digging out the walkway at Milliken Field; patching holes on Fairoaks Lane; preparing and resurfacing two sections of Beechwood street, one section of Doane Street, one section of North Main Street and all of Summer Street; mowing and trimming parks, cemeteries, schools and Common area.

Sander bid okay'ed

Selectmen accepted a bid from J. J. Gregory and Son, Inc. of E. Providence, Rhode Island for a new road sander this week. The low bid was $17,427.

Legal bills are approved

The board also voted to pay bills from Warner and Stackpole, totalling $16,189.26, for work in connection with the Cohasset Heights Landfill for the months of July and August.

Buckley wins praise

The chairman of the Dighton Board of Selectmen wrote to Cohasset Selectmen on Oct. 7 to praise Town Accountant Michael Buckley.

"Our town accountant was suddenly taken ill and was unavailable for three weeks," wrote Gene Nelson. "No one else in our town office had been trained to accomplish the town accountant's tasks. Mr. Buckley trained two of our employees on the town accountant's computer hardware and software. He was extremely patient, understanding, and offered further assistance if we requested.

"Mr. Buckley's assistance allowed our town accounting function to continue. Please pass our deepest thanks to him," he said.

Volunteers needed to sit on town boards

Interested citizens are needed to serve on the drug & alcohol committee, the mosquito control committee, the conservation commission, selectmen said. Please call the selectmen's office at 383-9900 for more information.

Ten minutes for walk-ins allowed at board meeting

Selectmen set aside 10 minutes at 8 p.m. on their meeting nights to address any concerns from members of the public who have issues that are not on the agenda.

If the matter cannot be handled briefly, it will be placed on a future agenda, selectmen said.

Cohasset's Alumni Field is within budget

New bleachers to be installed

By CHARLENE VANDINI
Cohasset Mariner

Selectmen approved the payment of almost $61,000 for work on the new Alumni Field, which is nearing completion within the budget approved last year.

Committee chairman Wayne Sawchuk told selectmen Tuesday that the town will hold back $27,925 pending the completion of the field, which is more than enough to finish the remainder of the project.

"We're within our budget. We're not asking for more money," he said.

Within the next few weeks, the lines will be painted on the track, according to official athletic association requirements, Sawchuk said. The starting lines and lanes must be surveyed to ensure that these meet accepted standards for competitive track events.

The track is constructed of recycled rubber tires sprayed with a polyurethane sealer. By using this material, rather than a colored surface, the town saved more than $20,000.

Also within the next month bleachers will be installed over newly poured concrete, and the press box will be built with volunteer labor.

By scheduling games back-to-back, the town is saving on the cost for emergency medical technicians who are required to attend the games.

The committee also negotiated a warranty on the field lights, and has a supply of bulbs to replace those that may blow out. The bulbs can be changed with the town's 100-foot ladder truck, which can reach the light towers without driving on the track, he added.

Sawchuk told selectmen he has a maintenance manual that will be turned over to the school department that maps the locations of the sprinkler heads and contains a maintenance schedule. A copy of the manual will be given to the selectmen.

With 60 per cent of the fall season's games played, the field is in good condition, and Sawchuk added that he is pleased with the committee's decision to allow it to be used this year.

By next year, the field will be in "superb" condition, he said.

Drainage problems have been noticed in six areas of the field but these will be corrected by digging trenches filled with crushed stone and perforated pipes.

"I consider it fine-tuning," he said, in response to criticism from Robert Davenport, who said field should not have been used until next year.

Parking at B&B is topic

Regarding the Bed & Breakfast of Cohasset, 6 Stockbridge St., the zoning board continued deliberations last week on proposed parking spaces adjacent to the inn. The proposal barely meets regulations on the amount of space needed for parking, and falls 11 feet short of the space required for cars to turn around in the lot instead of backing out onto the street, said member Woody Chittick.

Board members said they were torn as to whether to approve the proposal.

"I feel a little like (zoning board member) Ben (Lacey) feels in terms of setting precedents. Before, we've always emphasized lots of parking space," said Powers.

The board decided to table discussions for a few weeks.

Country club seeks water holding tank

By ANDI WEISSMAN

A representative of Cohasset Golf Club asked the Zoning Board of Appeals to allow him to build a structure that will allow the club to hold water for irrigation purposes on the greens.

The town of Hingham, on which the golf club borders, had asked the club to divert water into a nearby brook during low-flow times, club superintendent Jimmy Carrol said.

"We're losing a lot of irrigation water down the brook in the spring, and we're just trying to capture some of it," he said. "If we ever had to release water downstream, this would allow us to do that."

A Hingham couple voiced concerns that the plans would affect water levels at a nearby skating pond. Carrol said the plans called for sending water to a brook downstream, and that the pond not be affected.

The zoning board will take the matter under advisement. Member Barbara Powers excused herself from the hearing, saying she is a member of the golf club.

Cabin addition is approved

Last week, the zoning board approved an application to build an addition to a small summer cabin off of Lothrop Lane, after debating whether it could be classified as a dwelling.

The 300-square-foot cabin is little more than a guest bedroom for a nearby cottage, said member Ben Lacey. Dwellings are classified as one or more rooms with living, sanitary and cooking facilities, Chittick said.

"It's extremely interesting. If it weren't on a separate lot, if it didn't have a separate septic system, we would not give it the time of day," Powers said.

Chairman Mark DiGiacomo said he was troubled by neighbors' reports that the cabin had been damaged by vandals; however, the cabin's owners sent a letter to the board refuting those reports.

The application was granted 4-0 with one abstention from a member who had not been present at the application hearing.

Private Way Committee to seek guidance from selectmen

By JASON BOUFFARD
Cohasset Mariner

After its initial meeting Wednesday night at town hall, the newly formed Private Ways Committee will be seeking a stronger sense of direction from the Board of Selectmen.

According to committee member and Town Administrator Greg Doyon, the committee's purpose is to inventory the town's private ways and determine which are candidates for acceptance as public roads.

The committee's formation comes after a degree of public concern about services provided to private ways as opposed to public roads. Some residents of private ways have expressed dissatisfaction with the notion of paying the same taxes as their public road counterparts, but receiving less road and utilities maintenance.

Committee members include Greg Doyon; Department of Public Works Superintendent Harold Litchfield; Sewer Commission member Henry Rattenbury; Planning Board member Robert Sturdy; Ross Rosano of the Board of Assessors; and private citizens Ben Curley and David Wadsworth. Members were unanimous in their decision to seek further guidance from the Board of Selectmen.

The committee discussed at great length the historical origins of public and private roads to provide a background from which the committee will work. Robert Sturdy defined a public way as a road that has been dedicated to the town by a land owner, surveyed and then formally accepted as a public way at Town Meeting. Likewise, a formal Town Meeting action is required to make a public way private.

While boosting the mileage of accepted public roads would make the town eligible for more state aid and enable the town to use state funds for repaving on those roads, converting too many private roads to public would could open the door for unwanted development, Sturdy said.

Currently, about 11 of Cohasset's 48 miles of roadway are private. The town has not reclassified a private way as public since 1969.

Although DPW is required to plow any road with three or more houses for safety purposes, the town is not responsible for the maintenance of private ways.

According to some of those in attendance, it is this notion which brought discussion of public and private roads to the forefront. Some residents of private ways have held hopes of attaining public [redacted] status so improvements can be made to water pipes, resulting in better water pressure in area homes.

However, Sturdy cautioned that the committee's purpose should not be to accept a series of private ways as public roads. "I think we're opening Pandora's Box if you say that we should make any road that meets standards a public way," he said.

The committee hopes to have a better defined statement of purpose before meeting again Nov. 13.

Couple plans screened porch

Residents at 11 Black Horse Lane petitioned the zoning board to allow them to build a screened porch between their house and a guest apartment instead of constructing a garage on their property.

The proposed 22- by 25-foot garage had been approved by the board when the couple bought the house several months ago. However, the couple had since decided they would prefer to extend their deck, noting it would not be as intrusive into the flood plains.

The board asked the couple to submit a decision, saying it would try to approve the plans as soon as possible in order for construction to begin before winter.

The board will take under advisement a request for residents of a first-floor condominium at 131 Nichols Road to build an 11-foot extension of a bedroom.

Lacey questioned whether the board should set a precedent by allowing the extension.

"If we allow this, we will have difficulty turning down other people who want to push out walls," he said.

But DiGiacomo noted the extension would encompass a deck off of the bedroom. "It's not being pushed out; the footprint isn't changing," he said. "If the footprint were to change, it would be of more concern to me."

• In other business: deliberations on the building of a residence at 430 South Main St. continued. DiGiacomo said he would love to see a single-family home built on the lot, but questioned whether it would be financially feasible. He also said the spot may be too densely built for a residence. The board agreed to continue discussions.

Upcoming meetings noted

The following meetings have been posted outside the town clerk's office at town hall:

• Board of Health, 7 p.m., Oct. 22 , public hearing at 7 p.m., Oct. 29;

But Pratt said Cohasset is in a position, with existing by-laws and enabling legislation in place, to take over the water company pipes in Cohasset, and connect the North Cohasset customers to the municipal water supply here.

"It only takes three members of this board to trigger an eminent domain proceeding," Pratt said, "and you don't have anything to say about it."

Earlier, in response to complaints from Diane Sullivan of Jerusalem Road, Perry said the water company is not for sale.

Perry and Bossung explained that bills that have exceeded the 150 per cent increase are the result of estimated bills that were issued when water company employees have been unable to read customers' water meters. In those cases, the bills were based on the bill for the same period last year.

In the case of the bill for the Lennon household on Tad Lane, Selectman Nan Roth said the family received a bill in March based on an actual reading, for 3,700 cubic feet of water used . The June bill showed 3,300 cubic feet of water, again based on an actual meter reading. But the September bill showed 9,700 cubic feet of water used.

Last week, Russ Lennon said his water bill increased from $101 to $346.

Perry said the recent bill was estimated, based on the amount of water used by the household in September, 1995.

Selectman Ronnie McMorris said drought conditions existed the previous year, which necessitated more outdoor watering, as opposed to this year, when the rainfall has been plentiful.

Perry replied that the computer system is set up to use a similar period the previous year when an estimated bill is issued. However, residents with estimated bills can arrange for a meter reading and receive a new bill for the actual amount of water used, he added.

The Mass.-American officials also said the most recent bills reflect a full period of the rate increase allowed by the state Department of Public Works, as opposed to the June bills which were only partially calculated at the higher rates.

Mass.-American is now trying to persuade the DPU to allow monthly billing so customers can pay smaller amounts, Perry added.

With a percentage of the increased rates due to fixed costs for the treatment plant, Pratt said there is a disincentive for water conservation by customers.

To eliminate the estimated bills, selectman chairman Merle Brown urged the water company ought to speed up installation of new water meters than can be read without the meter readers being allowed into houses, which is difficult to arrange when residents are both working.

The new meters should have been installed before the new plant became operational, he added.

Brown pointed out that meters were replaced quickly for customers for Cohasset's municipal water system. Residents were instructed to schedule a time for the new meter installations and the residents were cooperative.

When Jerusalem Road resident Maria Plante displayed her stained clothing, Perry explained that using bleach creates a chemical reaction with the manganese in the water, which causes the discoloration. Customers should not use bleach in their laundry, he said.

He also said that the company's program of flushing the pipes will eliminate this problem, as built up minerals in the pipes are removed.

"We're flushing as fast as we can," Perry said.

However, the company has no plans at this time to replace the 100-year-old water pipes in North Cohasset.

Roth said she recently observed the municipal water pipes on Beach Street that were being replaced, which she described as "absolutely revolting." These are the same age as the Mass.-American's pipes in North Cohasset.

Bossung said all Mass.-American's pipes are being flushed to removed the build-up. If the flushing does not accomplish this, the company will go to mechanical cleaning and relining. Only if this does not remedy the situation would the company consider new pipes.

The age of the pipes, Bossung said, does not dictate the need to replace them.

Sullivan spurned Perry's invitation to join a liaison group to work with Mass.-American.

"I want to battle you," Sullivan said. "I don't want to join you."

Sullivan also "thanked" the water company for three weeks of "free" water. She said her water meter reading was the same three weeks after it was read for billing purposes.

Bossung said the meter was probably "stuck."

Sullivan and Plante are urging Mass.-American customers in Hingham, Hull, and North Cohasset not to pay their bills, and are organizing a formal protest next week at the State House in Boston. They planned to meet with fellow Mass.-American water users last night after the Mariner went to press at the Stop & Shop meeting room.

Sullivan said Mass.-American customers have had little or no support on the local level. A water company official told her, "' I don't know what good it's going to do to march.'"

But Perry said that statement was "inappropriate," and the employee was not authorized to say that. The water customers are "within their rights" to protest.

Joe Callanan, an aide to State Sen. Robert Hedlund invited selectmen to meet with Lt. Gov. Paul Cellucci on Friday. Hedlund has arranged the meeting with selectmen from Hingham, Hull, and Cohasset, and their state legislators to discuss new DPU hearings on water quality.

Hingham and Hull are now appealing the water rate increase.

Moderator wants time limits

print reports of those hearings, some people do not have time to inform themselves from these sources, she said.

Keller added that people also change their minds after listening to "thoughtful discussion" at town meeting.

Selectman Peter Pratt the issue of a commuter rail station at Cohasset Village or at the former Cohasset Winter Gardens site on Route 3A is one of the most important matters to face the town.

The MBTA wants a decision within six weeks on the location for the station, he said, and the selectmen should not make this "major public policy decision" without a sense of the will of the town.

"I'm not smart enough to figure that out," Pratt said.

Too many resolutions jeopardize open town meeting, Marlette said.

But selectman chairman Merle Brown said town meeting voters have made resolutions on matters for many years until Marlette prohibited them.

The resolutions give the board "a feel for what the town wants," Brown said.

Town meeting is not the appropriate forum for resolutions, Marlette said. There has been a dramatic change in Cohasset in recent years, which was underscored at the August special town meeting.

He agreed to consider debate on resolutions at the end of the town meeting business, at the suggestion of selectmen Nan Roth.

In a telephone interview Wednesday, Marlette said he liked the idea of debating issues after town meeting is adjourned. He said he would be willing to stay on to moderate the debate.

"I'd be more than happy to assist," he said.

Marlette told the board Tuesday that he has spoken with other moderators who said the time limits seem to work for a more orderly town meeting. However, he does not favor a by-law to regulate discussions at town meeting, because voters would then be unable to suspend the rule when the circumstances require it. Rather, he would like to see a rule adopted to set the time limits, to avoid repetitious discussion and to encourage speakers to quickly make their points. The time limits would also allow more speakers to be heard.

Selectman Nan Roth agreed that speakers sometimes need to be more organized, but noted that some issues require much information from several town boards and committees.

Marlette said he wants input from the selectmen.

He also said he would like to see town meeting rules printed in the warrant, so voters will know procedures for voting and other rules at the town meetings.

Wildlife Center developing population control for animals

The contraceptives create an antibody in the animals that prevent the females' eggs from being fertilized.

Mertz said the female deer are anesthetized, examined and inoculated with the vaccine. They are then given an antidote to the anesthesia and released. They are also ear-tagged, to mark them as part of the experimental program. This tag serves as a warning to anyone who may hunt the animals that they should not be eaten.

The process takes about 90 minutes. In three weeks the deer will receive booster shots that makes the vaccine effective for one year.

The program is focusing "less about the technology of the vaccine, and more about the field technology," Mertz said. An important factor in the study is the ability of the researchers to use the vaccine in field conditions. In this case, the vaccine needs no refrigeration, which makes it practical for use in wildlife habitat.

Residents in Hingham and Cohasset have reported deer sightings in various locations over the last few months, including a deer that was reported walking along North Street in Hingham Square during the early morning hours in July.

Mertz said deer will roam a wide area in search of food. The deer population in Hingham may be high one year, and then decrease as the animals move to Cohasset or Norwell.

Hingham Animal Control Officer said he has responded to calls about deer near Wompatuck State Park and on South Pleasant Street.

Cohasset Police Chief Brian Noonan said there have been numerous sightings of deer in that community: on Border Street near Government Island, Cedar Street, and Nichols Road.

Noonan said a larger problem has been flocks of Canada geese which have congregated around town, particularly at the Cohasset Golf Club, where duck hunts have been held for three years. He called these a "controlled shoot."

Cohasset Golf Club greens superintendent Jim Carroll said there are no plans for a duck hunt this year, and the the geese have been discouraged by a dog the club purchased that chases them away.

Ongoing problems with large flocks of Canada geese have prompted officials in Canton and Braintree to consider limited hunting to thin the flocks. The state Department of Fisheries and Wildlife say each goose produces one to two pounds of excrement per day, creating serious health problems when large numbers congregate in one location.

Mertz said the wildlife center is trying to obtain grants to develop a program to sterilize the ganders, to reduce the populations that have become nuisances in a number of communities.

There has been some success in "addling" the eggs of the geese, a process that kills the egg, but female continues to sit on the nest.

"The problem is that it's difficult to find the nests," he noted.

Permanent sterilization has the advantage of handling the birds only once, with long-term results.

The present flocks are the offspring of geese that were raised for hunters. Unlike their counterparts in Canada, the Canada geese flocks commonly seen in Hingham, Cohasset and surrounding towns have become a permanent population that do not migrate.

"Both are wild species," Mertz said, "but there's a genetic factor that makes one type migrate and the other doesn't."

It is impossible to distinguish one group from the other, Mertz said, so population control is the most effective way to deal with the birds.

"The technology is out there now," he said, noting the wildlife center needs the funds to implement the program.

The Mariner welcomes letters to the Editor.

EXPERIENCE POMPEII FOR YOURSELF

Every school child learns about the city of Pompeii and how that lively Roman city was stopped in time, buried almost instantaneously by some 20 feet of mud and lava from an eruption by nearby Mt. Vesuvius. Most of us have seen pictures of the excavated ruins, showing scenes of daily life "frozen" in time. Pompeii, however, is one of those places you really need to see for yourself to appreciate. No mere photograph can match the impact of actually standing in the awe-inspiring Temple of Apollo, built around the third century B.C. Other must-see sites include the Civil Forum, a huge public meeting place at the heart of the city, and the House of Vetti, a spectacular, lavishly decorated former residence of wealthy merchants. Although Pompeii met a tragic end, careful excavation and preservation have made it one of the treasured marvels of the world.

It is truly awe-inspiring to witness a way of life from long ago; to stand before a centuries-old monument, to see things you've only read about in books or heard about through family members' and friends' recollections. Don't let planning your trip become a monumental hassle, though. AROUND TOWN/Sallyann Chatterton

Beechwood harvest supper and auction are tonight!

I must begin with this — tonight, Oct. 17, is the night of tradition. Beechwood Congregational Church will hold its annual Harvest Supper and Auction at 6:30 p.m. In keeping with tradition, dinner will include ham (low sodium, low fat), cole slaw, mashed potatoes, harvest beets, string beans, beverage and dessert. The cost is $7.99 for adults, $3.50 for children. The meal is always superb, as is the auction, and a great time is always had by all! Go!

One more word from Beechwood Congregational Church, this time with regard to their 20th annual antique show and sale. More than 25 dealers will participate Nov. 2 from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. at Deer School, Sohier Street. The $3 admission and bake sale and snack bar proceeds will benefit the church. Ample free parking is available. For further information, call 383-0070 after 6 p.m.

Happy 80th birthday greetings go to Herb Marsh this week. We surely hope your big day is a special one, and that all your birthday wishes come true!

Speaking of birthdays, did you know Gertrude Young will be 94 on Oct. 29? We're telling you in plenty of time so you will be sure to send her a card to honor the occasion!

Do we ever have good news about Loni Colwill, a 16-1/2-year-old senior at Cohasset High School! Loni and her horse, Jesse, are going to the 30th annual All-American Quarter Horse Congress, the largest single-breed horse show in the world.

Loni qualified with the Mass. Youth Quarter Horse Team and was reserve all around champion for MYQHA. Loni and Jesse will be in Ohio for three days, and we wish them the best of luck and hope they will share the experience with us when they return (Loni, that is!) You are a champ in our eyes already!

Don't forget this Saturday, Oct. 19, is the VFW Post 9146 yard sale. It will be held at 211 North Main St. at the home of William Higgins, and the hours are 8 a.m. to 1 p.m.

I guarantee you will find yourself a bargain! Funds raised by the yard sale will be used to sponsor various community events and help fund their scholarship program. By the way, anyone with usable items they would like to donate may call 383-0780 to arrange for pick-up.

Speaking of fund raisers, the Art Center has a grand idea. On Friday, Oct. 25, from 3 to 8 p.m., Skinner's Inc. will offer verbal appraisals of art, antiques and collectibles. The charge is $5 per object or three items for $10. All proceeds will benefit South Shore Art Center, and you can find out how much Aunt Martha's blue vase is really worth! Neat, huh?

Here is some more news about Liz Hills, who is really thriving. She is the news editor of the school's weekly paper, writing three or four articles a week. She received the highest GPA in French III and went on to French V after being tested. Now Liz's goal is to learn German and Cantonese! Liz is in three AP classes and two honor classes. Talk about a busy person!

Hats off to Donna Green, who is exhibiting her illustrations and paintings at Thayer Gallery at Thayer Academy, Braintree. An opening reception was held Sunday, Oct. 13, and her exhibit will run through Nov. 8.

Donna has illustrated seven hardcover books, including "To My Daughter, With Love," which she also wrote. Donna is known for her wonderful pictures of children and local scenes, and her work is known all over the world!

Be sure to see the illustrations in her new edition of Margery Williams' classic, "The Velveteen Rabbit." In fact, go to see the whole exhibit and really get a thrill! She is awesome!

That's all the news for this week. Sure hope you have some to share with us. If you do, please give me a call at 383-0560.

Word comes from West Point that John N. Maynard, son of John and Anna Maynard, 20 Locust Rd., graduated from the U.S. Army Airborne school at Ft. Benning, Ga. this past summer. John received his wings and is now airborne qualified after making five successful jumps from Air Force C-130 and C-141 planes, at an altitude of 1,250 feet and at a speed of 150 miles per hour.

The jumps were done under different conditions. One was at night with full combat equipment. There was a "mass exit" jump with 32 at a time and a "Hollywood" jump, 16 at a time, done with two different parachutes — one you can steer and one you can't, you just pull down and go.

The school is famous throughout the world for training people from foreign services and all military branches of the U.S.A. including the Navy and Marines. John is now in his junior year at West Point.

Coming Clean on Clogged Injectors
▶ If a car owner uses a brand-name gasoline that contains sufficient detergents and deposit control additives, it is seldom necessary to have the fuel injectors cleaned. Back in the mid-1980s, clogging of electronic fuel injectors arose as a problem on cars equipped with multiport fuel injection systems. Such systems have an individual fuel injector to supply fuel to each cylinder in the engine. When it was found that deposits accumulated on injectors of this type to cause rough idle (and engine misfire and poor gas mileage, in severe cases), the petroleum industry quickly came up with the solution of putting special additives in their gasolines that could actually clean the injectors with the engine operating in normal use. Since then, it has not been appropriate to use rough idle as an excuse to clean fuel injectors, unless an improper fuel has been used.
▶ Using high test gasoline regularly will help cleanse your fuel injection system; even occasional use of such gas can be helpful. At SOUTH SHORE CHEVROLET-GEO, we have just what you need in a car, and we offer better deals for our customers. Our personalized service has brought customers back to us for years. Timeliness, reliability, friendliness and service excellence-- these are our promises to you. We welcome your questions-- we're here to answer them.

That time of year

To many, fall is the best liked season of all.

The air is crisp and our energy level is up. And as the leaves turn radiant shades of yellow, red and orange — Cohasset, with its abundance of trees and parklands, becomes an artist's dream.

But with all the beauty around us — it's easy to forget what's ahead.

Winter — which we realize can be every bit as beautiful as fall — brings with it the flu season. Influenza isn't like an ordinary cold — it's much more serious than that. And every year, like the hurricanes, we seem to get new ones with unusual names.

This year we have the Texas, Nanchang and Harbin strains to look forward to.

Luckily for us though, the Social Service League and the Cohasset Board of Helath conduct flu clinics with free shots that can protect us from these dangerous germs. The first clinic is from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. Saturday at the Second Congregational Church and the next one is scheduled for Saturday, Oct. 26 at town hall.

We urge everyone who falls into one of the target groups to get a flu shot. These groups include those who are over 65; adults and children who require regular medical care or follow-up; family members of high risk individuals; and those who provide essential community service such as medical personnel, police officers, fire fighters, and public works and school employees.

But even if you're not in a high-risk or target group — you probably won't regret getting vaccinated.

Injections are unpleasant — but they only hurt for a second or two. That's a small price to pay for staying healthy — which translates into not missing work or school or social events due to the flu. And best of all, you might be giving a co-worker, friend or family member a gift by not having the nasty germ to pass onto them.

Accurate news on wildlife valued

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

To the Editor:

When I first read in the Oct. 3 issue of the Cohasset Mariner that the selectmen and police chief seemed to be "passing the buck" on the Coyote situation to the Mariner, I was concerned whether this was the proper role for a newspaper with limited resources.

How mistaken I was after reading the whole article. Our community editor Mary Ford knew just what to do and who to contact for professional information, Dr. Greg Mertz, the Director of the N.E. Wildlife Center in Hingham.

The result was an excellent report, giving the facts and putting to rest rumors which often spread in a situation like this. We are fortunate to have the Wildlife Center nearby and quick to respond to requests for information.

Johnston says thanks for support

To the Editor:

I want to express my deep gratitude to the thousands of people on the South Shore, the Cape and the islands who supported my candidacy for Congress. Although the bizarre events of the past few days have been difficult to absorb, my family and I are very proud of the campaign we waged. When we began last winter, we were far behind in the polls. We were outspent by other candidates but we were never outworked. Our volunteers in every community in the district worked their hearts out for many months. They are the reason we did so well Sept. 17.

I ran for Congress because I wanted to advocate on behalf of a policy agenda which I believe is in the interests of average working people in our country. I believe that every American should have access to high-quality, affordable health care, that our public schools should be the best on earth and that our natural resources should be protected. The voters responded positively to that agenda and I am grateful for that.

As President Kennedy pointed out, life is unfair. I will always believe that a plurality of voters supported my candidacy on September 17. A recount confirmed that, but a judge ruled otherwise. Despite the pain of that ruling, my family and I will look back on the campaign as a time of joy and passion, when our friends joined with us to produce a near-miracle. We will continue to work together to advance our agenda to make the South Shore, the Cape and the islands — and, indeed, our entire nation — a better place for all our people.

Concerns on village station aired

To the Editor:

Cohasset Town Meeting voters are suddenly being asked to decide the location of the proposed Cohasset train station. Very late in the game, a new proposal suddenly came to the table: change the Cohasset station to the village instead of Route 3-A. During this entire train project, we have been discussing a very different proposal. We therefore have no time to ask our T officials for extensive studies which would make our decision making easier.

For example, what are the impacts of a rush of 350 more automobiles driving through our town center twice daily? How will our town parking be impacted? We must anticipate a certain amount of hasty drivers running late and rushing through our residential streets to catch their train. Will we as taxpayers end up needing to increase our police force to handle morning and afternoon traffic jams, parking violations in our town lot as well as our side streets? Will our public safety be affected?

What about the environmental impact on local residents? Will air quality be negatively impacted with diesel emissions, nitrous oxide, carbon monoxide and dust from the huge trains idling in a village station and increased car traffic?

Will we be able to have our windows open in summer or will noise be greatly increased from idling trains and increased traffic? Will the removal of all the ledge which is a natural sound buffer amplify this new annoyance up the hillside?

Consider the above issues, I believe that there will be significant negative impacts to local residences which far outweigh the "benefit" of walking to the train station.

Reader Survey question for October 17, 1996

Ten years ago, the board of selectmen advised the MBTA to put the commuter rail station on Route 3A. Now, the selectmen have reopened the issue of a train station in the village, and the MBTA says it needs an answer soon. A non-binding survey is set to take place at the October 28 special town meeting. How should the decision be made?

Press 1 Selectmen should base their decision on the outcome of the October 28 special town meeting survey.

Press 2 The town should incur the expense of a special town referendum on the village train station.

Press 3 The town moderator should allow a resolution on the village station at the special town meeting.

Press 4 Selectmen have enough information now to make this decision.

Press 5 The town moderator should flip a coin to decide: heads the station is in the village; tails it's on Route 3A.

All responses to this week's question must be received by 12 o'clock noon on Tuesday, October 22.

Our readers are invited to record a brief comment after registering their responses to this week's question. Please speak clearly. We will print as many responses as space permits, but we reserve the right to edit any lengthy comments.

Do you think the town of Cohasset should buy water from the Massachusetts-American Water Company and sell it to North Cohasset customers at the rate other residents pay for town water?

1 No

10 Yes

Your comments:

I don't live in North Cohasset, but I don't think it's a fair situation. I didn't vote to help them with their sewer because I wish I had sewer. Good luck. I hope we can do something to help them with their water costs.

More talk on station site needed

To the Editor:

Upon entering the upcoming town meeting, citizens are being asked to cast their vote about making a village train station or retaining the current proposed site on 3-A. Important decisions are made at town meeting, and I believe in general, we make good ones. However, in our town's history, how many decisions have been made with nary a discussion? It is a ludicrous premise to make such an important and far reaching decision without any discussion at the meeting prior to citizens casting their vote.

I can remember many instances that I entered town meeting expecting to vote a certain way but actually changed my decision after the thoughtful discussion which occurs in the normal process of debating articles. I understand that we do not have an "article" to discuss and that our town moderator ordinarily does not entertain non-binding referendums but there must be exceptions to rules in extraordinary circumstances. While well intentioned, the mitigation meeting on the 23rd will not fulfill this need to assure an informed vote.

I implore our town leaders and our moderator to allow a non-binding referendum to allow citizens the much needed opportunity to explore this issue in depth prior to asking us to cast our votes.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Cohasset Village station is opposed

To the Editor:

As I understand it, Cohasset village is about to acquire an 800-foot-long loading platform and a 450-car parking facility. Neither the village nor the surrounding side streets can accommodate what will be a severely heavy flow of traffic.

One only need remember the filming of "The Witches of Eastwick" and the challenge that brought to traffic and parking, temporarily. Should we now create a permanent traffic nightmare with this village station/stop?

Should we invite added fuel emissions from the additional cars coming and going and those idling as they await home-coming passengers?

Do we want peak hour commuter traffic competing with school buses and parents driving their kids to school?

Finally, it has been stated that the parking facility will be used mainly by the residents of Cohasset — that residents of surrounding towns won't bother getting off 3A to commute from Cohasset village. Is this fact? Opinion? Do we have this in writing? Wake up Cohasset — your town's future is at stake!

GOP meeting set for Oct. 23

Julie Guild, Cohasset town chairman, will meet with the Cohasset GOP Town Committee Wednesday, Oct. 23, at 7:30 p.m. at Cohasset Town Hall to make plans for Election Day activities Nov. 5.

Guild is encouraging all voters who plan to be out of town, away at college or physically unable to go to the polls to vote with an absentee ballot. A family member may apply for the ballot. The deadline for applying is noon the day before the election or Monday, Nov. 4.

Those who wish to do so may cast their ballot at the Clerk's Office. Ballots should be available three weeks prior to the elections. Voters may also apply in writing to

Town should vote on station

(The following letter was in the Selectmen's correspondence this week.)

Dear Selectmen,

I attended the Oct. 1 mitigation committee meeting with the MBTA where the majority of the discussion focused on the proposed Cohasset village train station. There were many people in attendance, myself included, who feel a downtown station would negatively impact our beautiful village area.

Our mitigation committee chairman stated a meeting will be held in two to three weeks where Cohasset residents could give their input as to whether or not they wanted the station built in our village or on Route 3A. The mitigation committee would then make their recommendation to you on the placement of the station based on what the majority of the residents at this meeting wanted. This is a monumental decision facing our town. A decision of this magnitude should be voted upon by all Cohasset residents whether it be on the next ballot or by mail. More importantly, before a vote is taken people need to be educated on this issue. The pros and cons of a village station need to be made public so residents who cannot attend these mitigation meetings can still make a well informed decision.

You were elected to protect the best interests of our town no matter how controversial the issue. It is time you started doing your job with respect to defending the character of our town against the MBTA. A first step would be to allow Cohasset residents to vote on where they want their station. Since you won't fight the Greenbush line in general, you owe it to the 50 percent who voted against the train at least that much.

tion of the Greenbush line of the Old Colony Railroad, Buckley said her election platform consists of more than the train — an issue on which she and Murray see eye to eye.

In addition to founding the anti-rail Coastal Coalition, Buckley noted that she spearheaded the effort to preserve Hingham's Central Junior High School building for the town. It is now slated to become a new Hingham civic center.

A supporter of term limits, Buckley said it is important to give voters a choice.

"A lot of people think after 20 years it's time for a change. I think she's done a terrific job," Buckley said of Murray. "But it's time to pass the baton."

As a legislator Buckley said she would try to be proactive rather than reactive and maintained that as a legislator she would have worked harder to prevent the Massachusetts-American Water Company's 155 percent water rate increase approved this spring by the state Department of Public Utilities. Those rates affect more than 300 homes in north Cohasset.

And while she maintains that it's not her only issue, Buckley acknowledged that the possibility of getting into the State House would elevate her opposition to the Greenbush project to a new level.

"I promise to work with energy and commitment on all issues that effect the South Shore to preserve and protect this beautiful place I call home," Buckley said in her campaign announcement (for full text see page 13).

In the meantime, Murray, who hasn't been opposed for the Third Plymouth District seat since 1988, said she's been stepping up her campaign efforts for the election, something she does every two years even when unopposed.

"Even unopposed, I run," said Murray, noting "I want to beat the blanks."

Murray, who said she takes every challenge "very seriously" is counting on her experience and involvement in legislation on multiple issues facing her district to give her the edge in November.

"Everyone has a right to run, but I've had stiff opposition before and I'm prepared," Murray said.

With The Candidates

Teague Takes Issue With 'Middle-Class' Delahunt

By STEVE ADAMS
Cohasset Mariner

With a confirmed opponent finally in place, Republican congressional candidate Ed Teague bored into Democratic nominee William Delahunt during the first week of the general election campaign, challenging Delahunt's self-described "middle class" status.

Teague cited Delahunt's refusal to release his tax returns, his use of an automobile leased by his campaign committee and charging of $100,000 in restaurant bills to his campaign fund over the past two decades.

Oh yes, and his infamous vacation at Hedonism II, described by the Teague campaign as a "Jamaica nude resort."

"Well, I'd be surprised if most people would select that as a vacation site," said Teague, a Yarmouth Republican and the House Minority Leader.

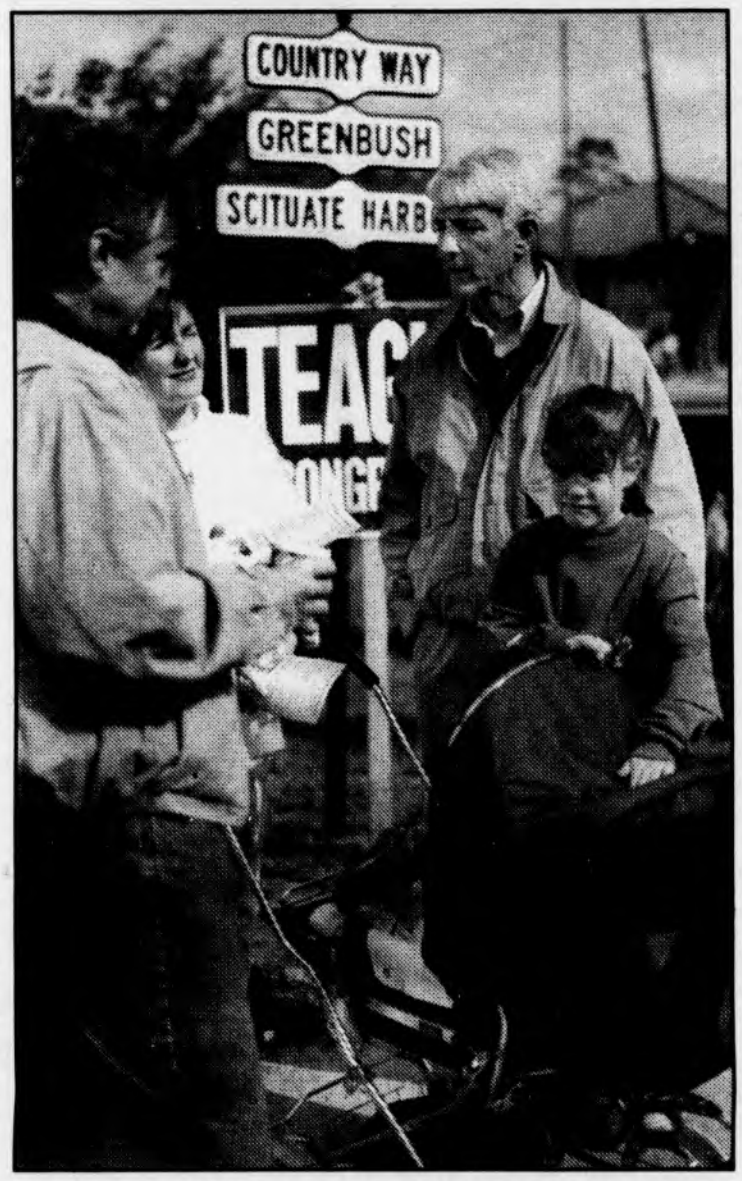
Citing Norfolk County District Attorney Delahunt's previous use of an automobile seized by his office, and his current use of a leased car, Teague questioned whether middle-class voters can identify with Delahunt's lifestyle.

Delahunt campaign coordinator P.J. O'Sullivan said the car issue "has no relevance whatsoever in who will make the best congressman."

"I don't think that anybody is surprised at Teague, who spent about $100,000 in attacking Phil Johnston before Phil was even declared the nominee," said O'Sullivan. "So I think his intentions beginning on Sept. 18 were made very clear: to do anything possible to keep the discussion away from his record, which quite frankly is frightening."

He cited Teague's pro-life stance, vote to deny abortion counseling to rape victims, opposition to a ban on assault weapons and low environmental rating from the Massachusetts Audubon Society as examples of that record.

"These are the reasons Ed Teague will talk about anything other than the real issues voters care about," said O'Sullivan.



Ed Teague talks to people at Octoberfest in North Scituate.

Teague also raised the question of Delahunt's real estate dealings, particularly his participation in a 1985 purchase of an 11-acre parcel on Nantucket.

The Nantucket Land Bank, an entity created by the legislature in 1983 to preserve open space, had planned to purchase the parcel for $125,000. Due to a delay, the property owner sold the parcel to Delahunt and three other partners for $150,000. The land bank filed suit in Nantucket Superior Court, citing an earlier purchase-and-sale agreement. A year later, the lawsuit was settled when the Delahunt group agreed to sell the parcel to the land bank for $292,650.

Teague said he finds hard to believe Delahunt's vague response to questions about whether he made money on the deal.

"I think most middle class folks would remember whether they made or lost money — and even the sum of the money if it were that large," he said.

O'Sullivan said Delahunt stated eight months ago that he couldn't recall how much money he made on the deal, but that it wasn't a large amount. Delahunt said his group paid hefty legal and consulting fees.

Delahunt has publicly acknowledged that "on paper" he may have been a millionaire during the 1980s. His real estate holdings have been transferred to a private family trust.

Teague and the Delahunt camp both downplayed the importance of a Boston Globe/WBZ-TV Channel 4 poll released Friday that showed Delahunt enjoying a 12-point lead in the race.

"There were numerous polls before the primary, all of which declared an overwhelming victory for one candidate, and all of which proved wrong," said Teague. "I would put this one in the same category as those."

"It's a poll and what it represents is a snapshot at that particular time," said O'Sullivan. "We take absolutely nothing for granted. Bill is out there working extremely hard in this shortened campaign."

The blue-and-white sign outside his campaign headquarters at 1800 Ocean Street is gone. A stack of lawn signs rests neatly on the brick staircase out front. Inside, a room alive with the buzzing of phones and bustling of campaign workers just a few days ago is quiet, now, with only a handful of volunteers picking up placards or loading campaign literature into cardboard boxes.

On the phone, a campaign worker trips over her words.

"Johnston for Cong..." she begins, then catches herself. "Johnston headquarters."

After winning, then losing, the 10th Congressional District Democratic primary in two of the most surprising upsets in the 1996 election season, former candidate Phil Johnston is adjusting to life outside the spotlight. Although still "in shock" from the Superior and Supreme Court decisions that named William Delahunt the primary victor — even as Johnston was being lauded by Democratic leaders at a party unity rally — the Marshfield resident feels anything but defeated.

"I'm still standing," Johnston said. "I feel like it's a tremendous loss. So many people have been working so hard and were so committed to what we were doing — I feel bad for them. On the other hand, I've personally gotten a lot of support from my friends and family. This has been a very strong, grassroots effort, and we are all going to remain together, to live for another day."

Johnston and his wife, Beverly, will spend this week in Florida discussing possibilities for the future. Johnston said he plans to seek some kind of public service position, and that he had not ruled out a possible return to his former position as New England director of health and Nancy Buckley announces candidacy for state rep.

Nancy Buckley of Hingham announces she is launching her campaign to unseat Mary Jeannette Murray as representative in General Court (Third Plymouth District).

Buckley has worked diligently to improve water transportation as co-founder of the Coastal Coalition. She also spearheaded the effort to save Hingham's Central Junior High School, which is now being converted to a multi-use civic center to include a new police station, senior center, town hall offices and recreational facility.

Nancy Buckley

Recognizing strong support for term limits, Buckley is confident voters will agree Murray's 20 years as state representative should not necessarily become 22.

"My candidacy gives voters a choice. There are distinct differences in our ideology, such as Rep. Murray's recent vote favoring assault weapons. I, as an ardent supporter of gun control, will work to ban the sale of assault weapons in Massachusetts.

"Another example of our differences is how I, as state legislator, would have been working actively to prevent the 155-percent water rate increase when the plant was in its planning stage, as opposed to reacting to the increase after the fact.

"I promise to work with energy and commitment on all issues that affect the South Shore to preserve and protect this beautiful place I call home."

Buckley, a lifelong Democrat, is a graduate of Archbishop Williams High School and Suffolk University, where she received a bachelor of science in business administration.

There will be a meeting Thursday, Oct. 17, at 7:30 p.m., in the Whiton Room of the Hingham Library for anyone interested in helping with the write-in sticker campaign.

This announcement was submitted by the Buckley Campaign.

Johnston looks ahead human services.

"I expect that I will be involved in health and human services in one aspect or another," Johnston said. "Once we get through the November election, I'll take a look at the political landscape and see what's available."

Johnston said he would also consider running for office again.

"I think I enjoyed the campaign tremendously," Johnston said. "I'd like to do it again, but next time I'd like to avoid any court [illegible]."

In the days following the Oct. 4 decision by Superior Court Judge Elizabeth B. Donovan, Johnston criticized Delahunt for taking the recount process out of the hands of local election officials and placing it in a courtroom. He has also commented on the apparent impropriety of placing that decision in the hands of Donovan, who had previously worked for persons now involved with the Delahunt campaign. He added, however, that he had no intention of pursuing the matter any further.

"I know if the judge had been tied to me, people would have screamed about it," Johnston said. "I don't question her integrity, but I am concerned about the appearance of a conflict.

After campaigning against Republican rival Ed Teague for three weeks — and being unable to accept donations for part of that time while the recount process continued — the Johnston campaign is now about $100,000 in debt, Johnston said.

"We will have help from people to retire that debt," Johnston said. "We have also raised some money to defray the costs of our legal expenses."

Johnston said it "remains to be seen" what the primary campaign may cost the Democratic party in terms of disillusioned voters and name recognition.

"I think Teague will attempt to exploit the situation," Johnston said. "I myself have been astonished and surprised by the intensity of emotions this case has generated. I can't go into stores without having people I have never met come up to me to express their anger about what happened. I do think it was a matter of concern to many people."

Having promised to aid Delahunt in his battle against Teague, Johnston plans to do just that after returning from Florida. He also plans to assist other local Democrats in their campaigns. The former state Representative from Marshfield even stopped Friday morning to help state Rep. Frank Hynes, D-Marshfield, hold a campaign sign by the side of the road.

"I'm a Democrat, and I believe Ed Teague should not be elected to Congress," Johnston said. "With that in mind, I am perfectly [illegible] supporting Bill Delahunt."

In campaigning against Teague, Johnston recommends that Delahunt focus on the state House Minority Leader's past voting record. He also recommends that Delahunt take his campaign away from the cities of Quincy, Brockton and Weymouth, where the Norfolk District Attorney has already built a strong voter base.

"There are a whole range of issues, from assault weapons, to choice, to the environment to education," Johnston said. "And if one looks how Bill Delahunt did in the primary, one might worry about how he would fare on the south coast, the Cape, and the islands. He'll have a lot of help, though, from [retiring U.S. Rep.] Gerry Studds, and he'll be in pretty good shape come Election Day."

In the future, Johnston said, what people will remember about the 1996 Democratic primary will be not the division that [illegible] headlines, but the hardworking campaigners who made the race so close.

"I think people will remember the energy and the emphasis on people," Johnston said. "We worked very, very hard, and we were unapologetic about our view that government should be there to help people. That was particularly reflected in our emphasis on health care."

Social Service League

Consignment shop needs influx of volunteers

Since its beginning in 1912, the Social Service League's Cohasset consignment shop has relied on volunteers. Manager Andy Merrill is sending an "SOS" to all retirees, men and women, along with newcomers in the towns which benefit from SSL services, including Hingham, Hull, Scituate, Norwell and Cohasset.

Merrill said volunteers are most needed on Fridays, but assistance is always welcome throughout the week as well, especially with the holidays approaching.

Volunteering provides fellowship and camaraderie, and most volunteers look forward to not only helping a good cause but the friendships which often develop from volunteering.

The new enlarged shop is located in Cushing Plaza, Route 3A, and is open from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m., Monday through Saturday.

Individuals interested in volunteering are asked to call 383-0687.

Proceeds from the shop benefit flu shot clinics, Meals on Wheels, battered women and Keep Well programs, along with other services provided by the League.

Men's and women's tweed jackets, a Halloween clown costume, turkey platter, travel clocks and umbrellas, along with an array of children's and teen sweaters and apparel, are currently available at the consignment shop.

Lillian Peters, a volunteer at the Consignment Shop, hangs up a child's jacket. If you can volunteer at the shop a few hours a week, please call 383-0687.

Social Service League provides help to residents

Cohasset Social Service League, founded in 1912, wishes to remind residents and newcomers to town of the services it provides. Counseling and support groups are led by professional social worker Patricia Carleton, LICSW, whose confidential service include individual, family, geriatric, marital, teen and grief counseling, advocacy and referrals. Office and home visits are available.

Meals on Wheels volunteers deliver hot, nutritionally balanced meals provided by South Shore Elder Services at a reasonable price to qualified residents five days a week.

Nursing services are provided by Public Health Nurse Judy Fitzsimmons, RN, under the direction of Cohasset Board of Health. Services include lead screening, blood pressure monitoring, home visits, immunization clinics for flu and pneumonia, cancer screening clinics; and consultations on general health, diet and medication.

"Keep Well" clinics are held each month at Harborview senior housing on the first Friday of the month, from 10 a.m. to noon.

There is a senior luncheon on the second Tuesday at the Senior Center from 11 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. Walk-in nursing hours at SSL offices, 16 Highland Ave. (at St. Stephen's Church) are Monday, Wednesday and Friday from 8:30 to 9:30 a.m. and 12:30 to 2:30 p.m.

Cohasset Consignment Shop at Shaw's Plaza is operated solely to benefit the SSL. New volunteer workers and consignors are welcome. Call 383-0687 for details.

The Social Service League also compiles a list of emergency telephone numbers, which may be found on page 157 of the Rotary Club Cohasset phone directory. For more information about the League and its services or to volunteer, call the SSL office at 383-0771 or 383-0821.

Midlife career transitions to be discussed on Oct. 22

The Social Service League of Cohasset will sponsor a meeting Tuesday, Oct. 22, from 7:30 to 9 p.m.; offering the opportunity to hear a panel of experts discuss the practical, financial and psychological aspects of the job market for those at midlife. Competing personal responsibilities outside of work which impact the process will also be addressed.

Included in the discussion will be career re-engineering for the millennium; condensing life experiences onto a resumé; finding hidden financial resources; jobs in an improving job market; second careers; and relocation.

Panelists will be Employment Specialist Michelle Sweeney, JVS, skills training program; Steve Etkind, EdD, vice president, Private Health Care Systems and Cohasset Counseling Associates; and Nancy Socoli, director of education, Consumer Credit Counseling Services.

The meeting will take place at the Lighthouse Residence, 96 Border St., Cohasset Harbor. There is no charge, but seating is limited. To register or to obtain directions, call 383-0771.

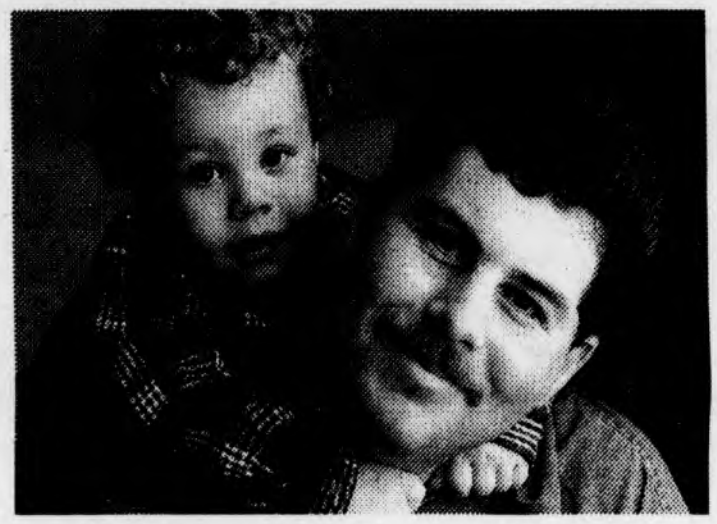
Once again, doctors rated us the best pediatric hospital in the country. But just to be sure, we got a second opinion from another expert.



David Brenner and his 22-month-old son, Rubin

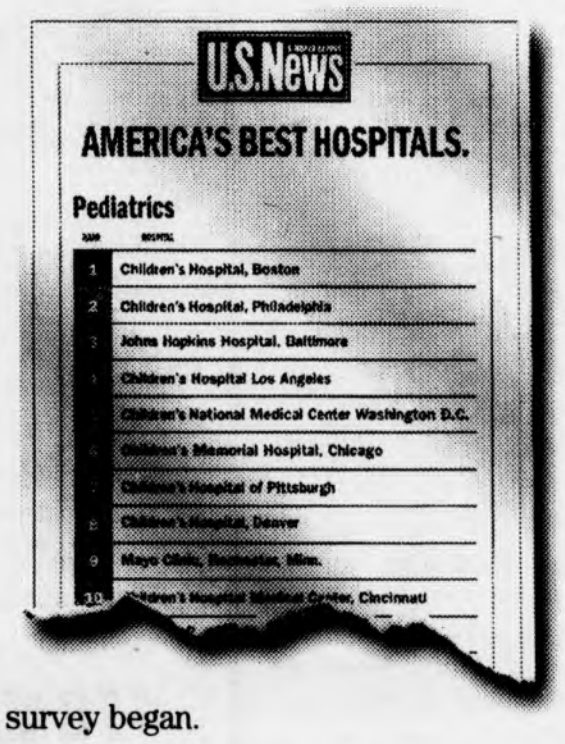
His name is David Brenner, and he's never even applied to medical school. But he's extremely qualified to judge our hospital. Because he's a parent.

David brought his son, Rubin, to Children's Hospital when, at two-months-old, Rubin was diagnosed with bronchiolitis, a respiratory illness. After a few days in our care, Rubin's breathing was very relaxed (as was David's), and has been ever since.

We were happy to get David's high approval; he told us he was impressed with how Children's doctors and nurses involved him in Rubin's care. This is the kind of rating that a survey doesn't always cover.

This is not to say that we're not proud of being ranked the best pediatric hospital in the country in *U.S. News & World Report. The survey's respondents are more than qualified to make such an assessment, because they are pediatricians from around the country. And this top ranking is something we've earned every year since the survey began.

This high standing means a lot to us. What it means to David, and to you, is that the best pediatric care in the country — from ear infections to emergencies to heart transplantation — is right in your own backyard. It means that as long as there are children with untreatable illnesses, we're looking for answers in the world's largest pediatric research center here at Children's. It means that when a sick child shows up on our doorstep, we have to have a solution. Or we have to find one. After all, it's one thing to be named the best pediatric hospital by doctors around the nation. It's quite another to be chosen as the best children's hospital by parents like David.



Children's Hospital·Boston

If the need arises, the best pediatric hospital in the country is here to help you.

Brig St. John of Galway was town's

By DAVID WADSWORTH
Special to the Mariner

On Oct. 11, 1849, an Irish "famine ship" from Galway on Ireland's west coast, bound for Boston, ran into a severe coastal storm as it entered Massachusetts Bay. Carrying a full complement of passengers and crew, many of whom were from the counties of Galway and Clare, the large two-masted sailing vessel anchored near the first Minot's Ledge Lighthouse some two and a half miles off Cohasset's shore, at the approaches to Boston Harbor, in an attempt to ride out the storm.

The ship's anchors failed to hold, and it soon struck a submerged ledge. The tragedy that ensued is still talked about on both sides of the Atlantic. The famine ship was the St. John of Galway, Ireland, and the ledge was a treacherous granite outcrop called The Grampuses. The site of the wreck was Cohasset's rocky shoreline.

Of those aboard the Irish brig, 99 souls perished; the survivors numbered just over 20. Galway-built St. John was owned on the island of Lettermullen, some 30 miles west near the shore of Galway Bay. The owner was Lettermullen's Tony Conneely, and master of the ship on that voyage was a Capt. Martin Oliver, who survived and is listed as being from Galway. His first name never appears in the records. Isaac Cummerford was first mate, and he also survived the wreck, later joining the U.S. Navy.

Many County Galway and County Clare names were represented on that voyage; their names are on the list of crew and passengers, which included both singles travelling individually and either entire families or parts of families from that area.

Near St. John that day was another brig of British registry, named Kathleen. Its anchors also failed, and it, too, was pushed towards the rocky shore. But by that particular stroke of fate which determines the destiny of those upon the sea, Kathleen would completely miss the dangerous rocks and find safety on the Cohasset shore.

Only yards distant, St. John suffered the opposite fortune and struck full upon the Grampuses. Attempts to free the vessel failed, and pounding waves began to break open its hull. In desperation, St. John's crew began to cut away masts and rigging in an attempt to lighten the ship, but to no avail. A ship's boat was launched, only to be smashed by the raging sea, and some passengers drowned.

Within an hour, the vessel's hull had broken into fragments and no longer was visible from the shore. Horrified spectators could see only great raftlike sections of wreckage rising and falling with the waves as they drifted slowly to shore. Upon one of those sections huddled a pitiful few half-drowned people who eventually would be counted among the survivors. Of the rest, only the ship's Captain Oliver, some of the crew and a few passengers were able to launch the ship's longboat and gain safety on dry land.

Once ashore, a 19-year-old girl named Elizabeth Lothrop witnessed the entire horrifying tragedy from her home near Sandy Cove. That home, a summer boarding house run by the Lothrops and Whittingtons, would be the destination of the survivors from the St. John.

worst shipwreck

Immediately, clean sheets, blankets and boiling water were brought out and carefully placed in the house, ready for use.

Elizabeth's father, Capt. Daniel T. Lothrop, a Cohasset seafarer, had departed earlier for Cohasset Harbor to assist the Humane Society's volunteer lifeboat crew in an attempt to reach the site of the disaster.

Later, Elizabeth Lothrop would write in her diary of the "horrible shipwreck" and describe the appalling power of the stormy sea as it tore the large vessel asunder, seemingly with ease. When the first survivors arrived at the Lothrop House, they were "half-drowned, more dead than alive," and in lamentable condition.

As for the Cohasset volunteer lifesavers, they launched the Humane Society's lifeboat at Whitehead near the entrance of Cohasset Harbor. Struggling through tumultuous seas into the teeth of the gale, the big rowboat headed for the Grampuses. Subsequently Capt. Lathrop would write a detailed explanation stating why the lifesavers never did reach the sunken ship.

When part of the way there, they saw the St. John's longboat with Capt. Oliver and the survivors heading past them for the shore. No attempt was made by the longboat's occupants to inform the lifesavers of the presence of others at the site of the wreck.

Soon seeing the other drifting brig, Kathleen, which was flying distress signals, the exhausted lifesavers veered off to assist that vessel, unaware that scores of people still may have been clinging to the wreckage of the St. John. Only later did those on shore become aware of the magnitude of the loss of life at that ledge. In any event, the volunteer lifeboat could have rescued only about 20 people, the number of survivors it was designed to hold.

Once ashore, a 19-year-old girl named Elizabeth Lothrop witnessed the entire horrifying tragedy from her home near Sandy Cove. That home, a summer boarding house run by the Lothrops and Whittingtons, would be the destination of the survivors from the St. John.

In the appalling disaster that befell the brig from Galway, entire families were wiped out. Patrick McSweeney drowned while trying to save his wife and nine children, none of whom survived. Of the survivors, two were taken to the Cohasset Almshouse, where they could receive intensive medical attention.

A week later, Elizabeth Lothrop visited the almshouse and was heartened to see the two women survivors much improved. A service was conducted for the victims by Father Roddan of Quincy, and about 45 unidentified victims were buried in a grave at Cohasset's Central Cemetery. Sometime after the shipwreck, Elizabeth Lothrop, in a somber train of thought, confided to her diary that having witnessed the awful event from beginning to end that day, she feared her life could never be as happy and carefree as it had been before the incident. She wrote of a profound sadness that seemed never to depart. Thus the sinking of the ship and loss of those on the vessel touched those who watched and tried to help.

Today, nearly a century and a half after the tragic event, Cohasset is sometimes visited by residents of the island of Lettermullen and Galway, who have heard the story of Tony Conneely's ship St. John and its ill-fated company who perished long ago upon the very threshold of a new and better world.

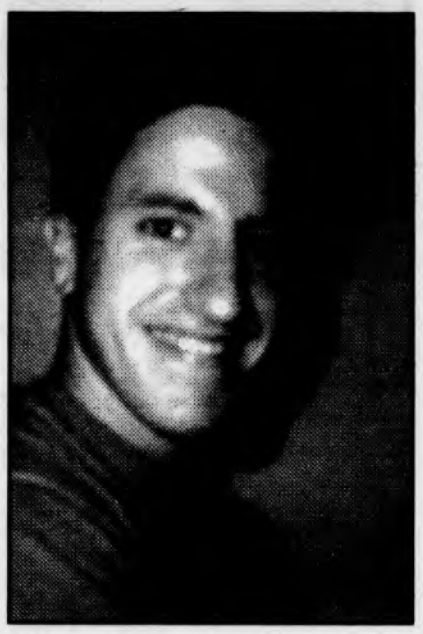
Help free Mike and support Wellspring

The town of Cohasset was glad to once again have a small, local butcher shop in the village offering fresh, quality meats. Now residents may lose the butcher at Village Butcher Shop, located on Brook Street.

Good-natured Mike Feroli has agreed to be "arrested" to benefit Wellspring, a South Shore community service agency located in Hull which provides an array of services to South Shore residents.

Feroli will be "incarcerated" unless his friends and customers agree to come by and bail him out by Saturday, Oct. 19. A mere $2 contribution will purchase a Key of Caring, which will help support Wellspring's services, including a food pantry, adult learning program, domestic violence intervention, holiday gift and food baskets, thrift shop, career guidance and counseling and social service referrals.



Mike Feroli of the Village Butcher Shop.

The sale of 75 keys will also "spring" Feroli.

Along with Feroli, Debbie, Cindy, Nancy and Cathy, the morning crew at Dwyer's Cleaning Spot, located on Cushing Highway, have also agreed to participate in the fund raiser and also need "bailing out."

Individuals and groups who have made donations are invited to stop by the Red Parrot in Hull on Sunday, Oct. 20, from 1 to 4 p.m. to celebrate the "liberation" of Feroli and other notable "criminals."

VFW seeks donations for Oct. 19 yard sale

Cohasset VFW Post 9146 is seeking donations for their annual yard sale, scheduled for Saturday, Oct. 19.

Anyone who would like to contribute saleable items is asked to call 383-0780 to arrange for pick-up.

Adult education opportunity

The Rev. Jenny Rankin, interim minister at First Parish in Cohasset, is offering a course in Spiritual Autobiography which is open to the wider community. This is a unique opportunity to explore and write about one's own spiritual "journey" and find its commonality with others. No writing experience is necessary. Through drawings and other exercises, past experience is evoked and examined. Rules of the class include attendance at all sessions (except for emergency or other unusual exception) and "the right of reticence" (no one is required to reveal any material he or she wishes to remain private). Confidentiality is essential.

The class is not only enriching and illuminating, it is a whole lot of fun! Sessions will be held on from 9 to 10:15 a.m. on six consecutive Sunday mornings starting Nov. 3. Participants will meet in the Unitarian Parish House, 23 N. Main St., which is across the street from the Meeting House on the Common. To register, please call 383-1100. Enrollment is limited.

The course will be repeated on Wednesday afternoons in January 1997, the dates and times to be announced later.

Come to the Halloween fair

For nearly 20 years, South Shore Community Center Nursery School has hosted a Halloween Fair on Cohasset Common, which has become a tradition for families throughout the South Shore. This year's fair will take place Sunday, Oct. 27, from 1:30 to 3:30 p.m.

The event offers children and parents early Halloween fun and laughter through games of skill and luck as well as creative activities. The fair is a major fund raiser for the nursery school and its scholarship and program funds.

The traditional costume parade will step out at 1:30 p.m. Encircling the common will be the school's very own favorite friendly witch. Grand marshall of the parade for 16 years, she first led the parade accompanied by her favorite little "warlock," her son. Last year her 1-year-old grandson joined the parade.

Activities will include cupcake decorating, donuts on a string and monster paws, 15 different games, ghostball, a treasure hunt, pumpkin-carving contest, carousel and moon walk. Pumpkins for the contest may be dropped off at the common at 1 p.m.

The fair is designed for all children and appeals in particular to children ages 2-8, according to Lynne Sheridan, director of the nursery school. Children leave each game with a prize or treat.

Tickets for games and activities are three for $1 and may be purchased at the fair. Most activities require two or three tickets to participate.

In the event of rain, the fair will be held inside the community center, directly across from the common. For more information, call 383-0036.

Dawna Hammers at coffeehouse

The Coffeehouse Off the Square, located in Old Ship Parish Hall, 107 Main St., Hingham, will present Dawna Hammers and Manuel Santos with his group, Bambule, Saturday, Oct. 19, at 8 p.m.

Tickets are $5 at the door, with proceeds benefitting Central American Medical Relief.

There will be an open microphone and refreshments. For more information, call 545-2798.

Last gasp for tourney

Field hockey team still in running for postseason berth

By JOE REARDON
Cohasset Mariner

With the boys and girls soccer teams both having disappointing seasons, the Cohasset High field hockey squad is the only team this fall with a chance at qualifying for postseason play. But four-game scoring slump two weeks ago has put the squad's back against the wall.

Coach Debby Bostwick's crew was 4-5-3 coming into this week after an exhausting string of games. With four games left, Cohasset needs to reach 16 points. The squad has 11.

The Lady Skippers have two scenarios in which to qualify for the tourney. They must either win one game and tie three, or win two and tie two. That doesn't sound like an overwhelming challenge, and it normally wouldn't be. But when you add first-place Hull and perennial tourney qualifier Hanover to the mix, the Lady Skippers have little, if any, room for error.

Bostwick, however, is very pleased with the team's play and believes Cohasset has a decent shot if the girls put their best efforts out.

"They have a real positive outlook," Bostwick said, "and they're playing as hard as they can, so I can't complain.

"We're really taking the hard route."

Cohasset outplayed the Carver Crusaders in its 0-0 tie at Carver last Friday, but the combination of strong goaltending and wet field conditions were enough to slow the Lady Skippers enough for the Lady Crusaders to escape with a stalemate. Cohasset put 10 shots on net and had two corner shots, but weren't able to finish up the plays once inside the Carver zone.

"We need to play to win and the kids know that," said Bostwick, who feels the girls are as intense as they've been all season.

Jackie Hurley proved to be the star in the team's 0-0, Oct. 8 tie at East Bridgewater. The stalemate was a retribution of sorts after the Lady Vikings defeated Cohasset, 2-1, in the first meeting of the year between the two teams.

Hurley was the dominant force for the Lady Skippers, stopping 21 shots, including a spectacular save on a penalty stroke awarded to East Bridgewater.

"Jackie was spectacular for us," Bostwick said. "She kept us in the game."

Whitney Cook and Kelly Lordan both had solid games and broke up a number of plays coming off the bench for Cohasset, and the starters put consistent pressure on

Skippers still looking for first victory

BY JIM O'SULLIVAN
Special to the Mariner

Last Friday the Cohasset Skippers varsity football team bowed to the Scituate Sailors by a score of 33-0 at Scituate, dropping their record to 0-4. The Skippers' play improved in the second half, as they only surrendered six points, but were still unable to punch through the solid Sailor defense to score.

Less than two minutes into the game, Scituate registered a 34-yard rushing touchdown, but failed to kick the extra point. Sophomore Jamie DeMichele returned the kickoff to the Skipper 30, but the visitors immediately gave up the ball, surrendering an interception, which turned into a 44-yard runback for another score. This time, the extra point attempt split the uprights and the Skippers were quickly down by 13.

DeMichele sprinted to the 34 on a reverse during a kickoff return. Senior Matt Belson carried to the 38 and quarterback Pat Hurley took a well-executed draw play down to the 43, leaving the Skippers three feet short of a first. Cohasset's punt team came out, but Belson took the fake punt all the way to the Scituate 35. However, the Skippers couldn't capitalize and the home team got the ball back with its second interception of the game. This time, though, the Skipper defense tightened with a great play by Jamie Buick, who made a nice tackle. Belson and Jarred Batts combined for a takedown and sophomore Justin Golden crushed a Scituate runner trying to recapture an errant lateral. These plays forced a

Editor's note to high school coaches

Because of the number of afternoon and night games during the week and an earlier sports deadline, I will no longer be able to contact coaches in the evening. I will be calling coaches on Sundays in the afternoon evening and Mondays from 9 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. This will free me up to cover afternoon and evening games during the week and give coaches a definite time range when they can call me back. Coaches can also call me at any time during the week at (617) 340-1006. If I'm not in I will return your message.

Sailor punt.

Once again the Cohasset offense sputtered and turned the ball over to Scituate, who capitalized with a 2-yard TD run. Cohasset got the ball back, but punted once again. This time, the Sailors ran it 52 yards for the score. After the two-point conversion was tacked on, the score was 27-0. The Sailors had scored 14 points in the closing two minutes of the first half.

Another Scituate interception set up the final Scituate score, a 1-yard touchdown run. The Skipper offense failed to get moving and punted again. And again, Golden made a nice backfield tackle, dropping the Sailors for a loss. Pat Murphy pounced on a fumble, gathering the ball in for the Skippers. Freshman QB Joe Pergola lofted a perfect spiral for a 35-yard connection to Buick. Belson carried to the Sailor 45 and Golden took a reverse around end for a gain to the 37. But the Skippers couldn't gain another first and the haggard defense came out for another effort. Buick notched a sack and Golden collected his third backfield tackle of the game and forced a Sailor punt.

Hurley, rolling out of the pocket, somehow threaded the needle to Buick along the sideline for a 5-yard gain, but the Sailor defensive backfield picked off its fourth interception on the next play. Jordan Fiore and Greg Boyne teamed up to take down a Sailor ballcarrier and Pergola jumped in for a tackle. Boyne then dove on a fumble, but the game was out of reach at that point and the Skippers lost their fourth game of the season.

This week, Cohasset treks to Carver to take on the Crusaders. The Skippers will be searching for their first win of the season and will be fired up from last week's loss to Scituate.

Dance program starts

The South Shore Community Center dance program is beginning an exciting new season with new and innovative classes for young dancers of all levels. Donna Joyce Viau returns from Gloucester this year as director of the program.

This program creates an environment where the child is part of a group, working together with fairness and friendship as the emphasis. It is important for these students to be motivated to work hard at something, and have fun at the same time, to be expressive and creative and to enhance their individuality and to believe that dreams can become goals and goals can be reached. The program develops group ideas and choreography, creates scenery and costumes, incorporates singing, sign language and more.

The students have the opportunity to showcase their work by performing both onstage and in informal studio-like settings to allow families and friends to see the progression of their work. This is an atmosphere where everyone participates, individual strengths are enhanced and novice skills are developed. Positive reinforcement is the key. Enrollment is ongoing for members as well as non-members of the center.

For more information, please call Joyce, Tuesday and Wednesday, or Stephanie Church, Monday through Friday, at 383-0088. Classes are held Tuesdays and Wednesdays for ages 3 to 15.

Girls night out

Girls night out will be held Friday, Oct. 18, from 6:15 to 8:15 p.m. for ages 5 to 8 years old. The cost is $15. Limited sign up, so sign up today.

Enjoy a fun-filled evening with gymnastics, bowling, make your own pizza, and obstacle course. Everyone receives a special gift just for coming. There will also be prizes for bowling and obstacle course winners. Call the center at 383-0088 for more information.

the Lady Viking goalie. But, that nemesis of not being able to put the ball in the net came back to haunt the Lady Skippers once again.

Amazingly, the tie was the second in a string of three after wrapping up Notre Dame of Hingham, 2-2, on Oct. 7.

The Lady Skippers took a 2-0 lead in the first half on goals from Meghan Connolly and Natale Cheel at the five- and 10-minute marks and Cohasset looked to be on its way.

Notre Dame cut the lead to 2-1 just before the half when they scored on a defensive corner on a shot that was accidently deflected in.

Cohasset beat Scituate two days later, 1-0, at home when Cheel blasted home a pass from Lauren Dooley at the 15-minute mark of the second period.

The Lady Skippers used a swarming offense to pepper Scituate with 22 shots on goaltender Meghan Duffy.

"She was unbelievable," Bostwick said. "We should have beaten them five zip."

Bostwick decided not to make any substitution changes because the team was playing so well together. "I told the players I was going to keep them out there and the girls on the bench said they were doing good and they should stay out," Bostwick said. "Everything went right for us."

Hopefully that will continue long enough to get Cohasset a berth in the South Sectional tourney.

Former Cohasset resident Richele Mein (Sargent) and her husband, Willie, reached the summit of Mt. McKinley in Alaska on June 19. Mt. McKinley (20,320 ft.) is the highest peak in North America and known for its extreme weather conditions.
Richele and Willie, both avid rock climbers and back country skiers, completed their unguided expedition in 19 days. After being flown onto the Kahiltna Glacier, they traveled over snow and ice, encountering storms with winds more than 100 miles per hour and temperatures dropping to -40 degrees Fahrenheit. Although they encountered unusually cold and stormy weather on the lower mountain, they summited on a clear day.
Richele and Willie have just relocated to Boulder, Colorado where they own and operate a snowboard binding company called Mein Mountain. Richele is also working as a physical therapist.

Sixth-graders host spaghetti dinner

The Deer Hill sixth-grade class will sponsor a spaghetti dinner to help raise funds for their outdoor education program in November. The dinner will take place on Oct. 23, from 6 to 8 p.m. at the Cohasset High School cafeteria. The cost of tickets will be $5 for adults and $3 for children under 12 and senior citizens. Tickets are available through sixth-grade students, at the Deer Hill office, or may be purchased at the door.

The outdoor education program will take place on Nov. 18-20 at Camp Bournedale in Plymouth. This will be the students' second fundraiser. They also held a car wash on Saturday, Oct. 5, at the Deer Hill School.

Special Olympics Seeks Volunteers

The Massachusetts Special Olympics needs volunteers who can spend a few hours a month working on the management team and special events for the New Norfolk Area, which includes Avon, Braintree, Canton, Cohasset, Dedham, Hingham, Holbrook, Hull, Milton, Needham, Newton, Norwood, Quincy, Randolph, Sharon, Stoughton, Walpole, Wellesley, Westwood and Weymouth.

Management volunteers with experience in marketing, fund-raising, competition and volunteer recruitment are important in assuring that the area provides an opportunity for athletes to compete.

Open house at Notre Dame

Notre Dame Academy, 1073 Main St., Hingham, will hold an open house Sunday, Oct. 27, from 1 to 5 p.m. All interested girls and their parents are invited to attend. Notre Dame is a Catholic college-preparatory high school for young women.

Visitors will have an opportunity to meet with students, faculty and administrators and take guided tours of the school. Registration for the Archdiocesan entrance exam set for Saturday, Dec. 14, will also take place. The exam will be administered at Notre Dame.

For more information regarding the open house or exam registration, call the admissions office at 749-5930.

Derby open house set

Derby Academy, 56 Burditt Ave., Hingham, has scheduled an open house for visitors Tuesday, Oct. 22, beginning at 8:45 a.m. in the school library. Jay Sadlon, director of admissions, and Linda Wakeman, parents' association admissions liaison, have planned the event as an informal introduction for parents interested in learning more about the pre-K through grade 9 school.

Headmaster Edward Foley will give parents an overview of Derby's educational program, and Sadlon will review the application process. Parents of current Derby students will lead visitors on tours of the campus, and division heads and faculty will be on hand to answer questions during and after the tours.

Those interested in attending the event may call the school office at 749-0746.

Harvest supper tonight

Beechwood Congregational Church of Cohasset will hold its annual Harvest Supper and Auction Thursday, Oct. 17, at 6:30 p.m.

In keeping with tradition, dinner will include ham (low sodium, low fat), cole slaw, mashed potatoes, harvard beets, string beans, beverage and dessert for $7.99 ($3.50 for children).

Children, spirituality and family is topic Oct. 19

Author/educator Dr. Gretchen Wolff Pritchard, minister of Christian Nurture, will present "Children, Spirituality and Family" Saturday, Oct. 19, at 7:30 p.m. at St. Stephen's Church, 16 Highland Ave., Cohasset. Parents, grandparents, teachers and all who touch the spirit of children at every age are welcome to attend.

The presentation will be followed by dessert and coffee and an opportunity to meet informally with Pritchard. A donation of $3 is requested.

Pritchard has had an interest in the spirituality of children since her own childhood in a family that did not attend church. She sought out baptism at age 14 and has continued in Christian education ever since.

She has been minister of Christian Nurture at St. Paul's Church, New Haven, Ct., since 1979, and is the author of four books on children and spirituality. Her focus for parents, grandparents and teachers is in helping children incorporate the story of God's compassion into their lives.

Family fall festival benefit

A Family Fall Festival will be held Saturday, Oct. 26, from 3 to 8 p.m. at South Shore Community Center, Cohasset. Activities will include a haunted house, scavenger hunt, hayride, costume contest, children's games, prizes, bowling, TV football party for adults, dinner, dancing to the "Grateful Dads," silent auction and raffle. Costumes are optional.

Tickets are $10 per person ($60 maximum per family) and may be purchased by calling 383-6670 or 383-6399.

'Dracula' performances set

Cohasset Drama Club will present "Dracula" for theatergoers who enjoy thrills, surprises, shudders and sensations Oct. 18, 19, 23, 25, 26 and 30 and Nov. 1 and 2.

Two Cohasset residents are members of the cast, including Meredith O'Hayre as the Ghost Wife and Angi Walsh as Mrs. Fern.

Performances will be held at Cohasset Town Hall at 8 p.m. Tickets are $10 and may be purchased at Buttonwood Books in Cohasset or at the door on the night of the performance. The play, directed by Sally Wright, is an adaptation of Bram Stroker's "Dracula."

Dave Houvck as Prof. van Helsing and Christie Temberton as Flora rehearse for Cohasset Dramatic Club's production of 'Dracula' on stage at town hall.

The event is sponsored by South Shore Community Center, with proceeds benefitting the center, Cohasset Education Foundation and GEMS of Hope. For further information, call Diane Tracy at 383-2551.

Come to the Halloween fair

For nearly 20 years, South Shore Community Center Nursery School has hosted a Halloween Fair on Cohasset Common, which has become a tradition for families throughout the South Shore. This year's fair will take place Sunday, Oct. 27, from 1:30 to 3:30 p.m.

The event offers children and parents early Halloween fun and laughter through games of skill and luck as well as creative activities. The fair is a major fund raiser for the nursery school and its scholarship and program funds.

The traditional costume parade will step out at 1:30 p.m. Encircling the common will be the school's very own favorite friendly witch. Grand marshall of the parade for 16 years, she first led the parade accompanied by her favorite little "warlock," her son. Last year her 1-year-old grandson joined the parade.

Activities will include cupcake decorating, donuts on a string and monster paws, 15 different games, ghostball, a treasure hunt, pumpkin-carving contest, carousel and moon walk. Pumpkins for the contest may be dropped off at the common at 1 p.m.

The fair is designed for all children and appeals in particular to children ages 2-8, according to Lynne Sheridan, director of the nursery school. Children leave each game with a prize or treat.

Tickets for games and activities are three for $1 and may be purchased at the fair. Most activities require two or three tickets to participate.

In the event of rain, the fair will be held inside the community center, directly across from the common. For more information, call 383-0036.

A small victory over taxes

By Elizabeth MacDonald
WORTH MAGAZINE

It seems, as the years pass and the process of accretion takes over, that the trauma of tax time sticks fresh in both our memory and wallet. Second to April, no other time brings up this most painful duty than when the holidays blow out our wallets. With that in mind, we offer this strictly legal list of tax breaks to stick on your refrigerator door. We hope it will help make the rest of your year a little less painful.

YOUR MONEY'S WORTH

The exemptions and deductions below come from the Office of Management and Budget in Washington, D.C., which annually delivers a list of tax expenditures — tax breaks that cost the government billions — to congressional tax-policy analysts. We also consulted Commerce Clearing House, a tax publishing firm in Chicago, and certified public accountants Janice Johnson of Coopers & Lybrand and Sidney Kess, both of New York City.

"By paying attention to these breaks," says Johnson, "an individual who earns $100,000 annually in adjusted gross income could save an extra $3,000 a year." Other incidental breaks exist in the law — for a more complete list, consult your tax pro.

•Nontaxable distributions. If you receive a dividend that includes a return of your capital, typically the case with utility shares, you may owe no tax on that amount. Ask the company you invested in to separate the taxable and nontaxable dividends.

Also tax free: Dividends paid as stock, stock rights (which let shareholders buy newly issued stock at a discount), stock received in a split, mutual fund dividends that represent tax-exempt interest, and dividends on insurance policies (so long as they don't exceed your net premiums).

•Retirement plans. Retirement plans cost the government about $66 billion annually. Experts say the deficit will eventually force Congress to tax these benefits. So max out while you can on 401(k) contributions, individual retirement accounts, Keoghs, and simplified employee-pension (SEP) plans, and consider after-tax contributions. These retirement plans are not all equally suitable for every taxpayer. Kess says, "The IRS requires no annual reporting and plan documentation for SEPs, plus they can be opened any time before taxes are filed, unlike Keoghs."

'An individual who earns $100,000 annually in adjusted gross income could save an extra $3,000 a year.'
Janice Johnson
Certified public accountant

•Life insurance. Money received by the beneficiary of a life insurance policy is not taxed. However, that rule applies to the principal amount only — not interest. Also, up to $5,000 in death benefits from company-provided life insurance is tax-exempt (the same rule applies to the estate of the deceased employee). That amount must be prorated if there are multiple beneficiaries.

•Legal settlements. This is a complex, evolving area, but in general, you don't have to pay taxes on awards from lawsuits filed for personal injury, sickness, libel, damages, or race, sex, or age discrimination.

•Employer-provided benefits. The IRS will forgo an estimated $60.7 billion this year by not taxing these. However, "if you get better health benefits because you're a top executive, but other employees have to self-insure or get less coverage, you'll have to pay tax on the difference between the annual benefit payments," says Kess.

•Dependent care. A growing number of companies are offering on-site child care. Such benefits are tax-exempt up to $5,000 in value. Ask your employee-benefits department for a year-end statement of the value of the services you used. Also, taxpayers who furnish more than half the total support for a parent, child, in-law, or other household member who earns less than $2,500 annually may claim a sizable $2,500 exemption. That applies even if your parent resides in a nursing home, so long as you are head of your household and provide over half of the support, including nursing-home fees.

•Gifts and inheritances. No income tax is owed on property received from a gift or inheritance.

•Real estate. Two breaks stand out: If you are age 55 or over and have lived in your principal residence three out of the last five years, you are eligible for a onetime exclusion of up to $125,000 in profits from selling your home. The OMB says this rule will save taxpayers $4.7 billion this year. Also, income from renting a residence for less than 15 days each year is tax free.

•Scholarship and fellowship grants. You owe no tax on scholarship and fellowship grants awarded by a nationally accredited educational institution for tuition and course-related fees, books, supplies, and equipment.

How to choose a financial planner

By Samuel J. Liang

Many people approach the challenge of choosing a financial planner with skepticism, even fear, and for good reason.

Unfortunately, we have all heard stories of unscrupulous impostors who take advantage of unsuspecting "clients." It comes as little or no consolation that their victims are sometimes the wealthy and the famous as well as those, like the rest of us, who are not so well-off and nowhere near as well-known.

Choosing a financial planner demands the same care as you would give to choosing a physician or attorney. There is plenty you can do to avoid potential pitfalls.

Inquire of any financial planner you meet, regardless of their backgrounds, about any certification he or she may have. Certification isn't a guarantee, of course, but it does demonstrate that the individual has studied the essential aspects of financial planning.

Financial planners may charge fees in one of several ways.

Fee-only financial planners charge hourly or flat fee rates for their services. They do not earn income from the products you buy.

Commission-only financial planners do not charge you directly. Instead, they earn income from commissions paid them by the companies whose products, such as insurance policies, mutual funds, and annuities, which you choose to buy.

(Samuel J. Liang of Burlington is a registered financial consultant with the Newton-based New England Advisory Group.)

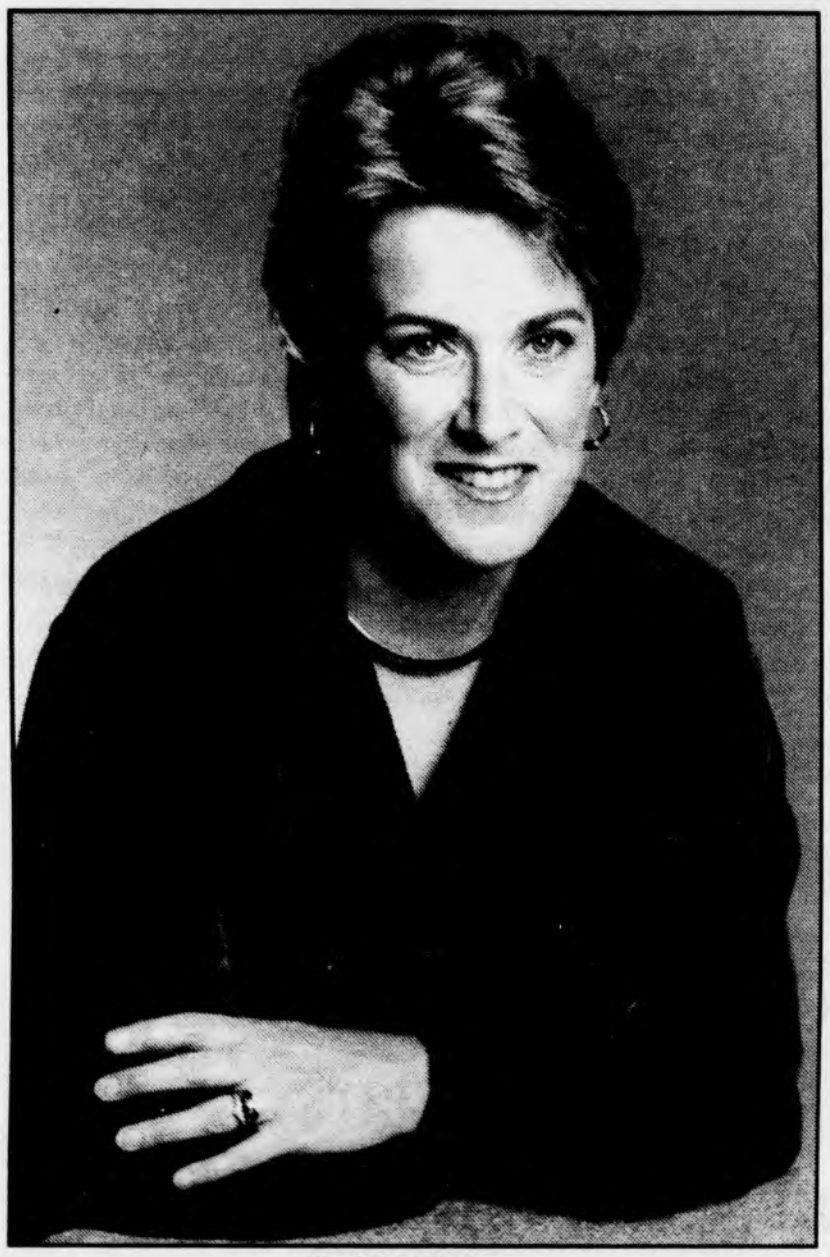
Zildjian appointed trustee of Berklee



Craigie Zildjian

Craigie Zildjian of Cohasset, vice chairman of the board of the Avedis Zildjian Company, has been appointed to the board of trustees of Berklee College of Music, Boston.

Zildjian is also North American general manager of the Avedis Zildjian Company, a worldwide leader in the manufacture of percussion instruments, and has initiated various music scholarship programs, including a fund at Berklee in memory of her grandfather, the company's founder. She has worked with Boston music educators to help launch Zildjian's Inner City Program, offering percussion clinics to Boston-area high school and middle school students.

Zildjian holds a master's in education degree from Boston University, an M.S. in personnel and human resource management from American University and has studied guitar and piano.

Her father, Armand Zildjian, a long-time Berklee trustee, has been named to the college's board of overseers.

Christy Mihos wins award

Cohasset resident Christy Mihos, president and CEO of Christy's Market Inc., has been named the 1996 Labouré Center Service Award recipient. The Labouré Center, located in South Boston, is a community service center of Catholic Charities of the Archdiocese of Boston which annually provides comprehensive health, education and social services to more than 2,500 infants, children, teens, adults and elders in South Boston, Dorchester and the South End.

Sr. Maryadele Robinson, DC, director of Labouré, made the announcement at the center's Fourteenth Annual Reception last spring at Anthony's Pier Four Restaurant in Boston. In presenting the award, Robinson cited Mr. Mihos' "generosity in providing for the nurturing of the children in Labouré Center's Early Childhood Program."

Labouré was established in 1907 in response to childcare needs of immigrant families in which parents worked long hours to provide basic necessities. Currently, daycare is available at Labouré every weekday for 78 children age three months through six years so that parents may work, attend school or job training, or receive counseling to improve parenting skills.

The service award has been presented annually since 1982 to an individual(s) in recognition of outstanding support of and commitment to the goal of Labouré — to strengthen the family unit and enhance the stability of families through a partnership of staff, volunteers, neighbors, business and community leaders.

Stolen pocketbook found in fatal Hingham crash

A pocketbook which police said was stolen from a home on Black Rock Road on Oct. 9 was found in the black Mercedes driven by Michael Subenko of Marshfield and Weymouth, which was involved in a fatal car crash last Thursday in Hingham.

Police Sgt. Robert Jackson said a burglary at the Black Rock Road residence was reported to police at 5:20 p.m., Oct. 9. A VCR, jewelry, along with a woman's pocketbook and credit cards were taken.

"Subsequently through work with Hingham police detectives and State Police, the pocketbook was found in the vehicle operated by Subenko," Jackson said.

He said Cohasset police will seek a warrant in Quincy District Court for Subenko relating to the breaking and entering. Jackson said another burglary in the Black Rock Road area is also under investigation.

Subenko was arraigned on Tuesday before Judge Patrick Hurley of Cohasset in his hospital bed at Beth Israel Hospital on charges relating to the Hingham crash which claimed the life of a Weymouth woman. Subenko is being treated for injuries sustained in the accident.

Vandalism is investigated

Cohasset police are investigating 13 incidents of motor vehicle vandalism which involved tire slashing and cars being "keyed" on the sides, Sgt. Robert Jackson said Tuesday.

The incidents which were all reported on Oct. 14 occurred on Forest Avenue, Sohier Street, Jerusalem Road Drive, Jerusalem Road, Deep Run, Fern Way, Joy Place and South Main Street. He said the tires appeared to have been slashed with a knife. The perpetrators were probably in a motor vehicle because the incidents were so widespread, he said.

Two school busses were also damaged.

"The stop signs on the busses were bent and the wire harnesses to them were disconnected," Jackson said.

Jackson said owners of the damaged motor vehicles called the police station after waking up Sunday morning, so the vandalism probably occurred sometime late Saturday night or early Sunday morning.

He urged anyone who has heard or seen anything suspicious to call the police at 383-1055.

Route 3A enforcement up

Due to the increasing number of accidents at intersections along Route 3A, police are stepping up enforcement of red light violations and improper turns, Police Sgt. Robert Jackson said.

This past week, police issued about 15 citations, he said.

"There is a high incident rate of people going right through red lights," Jackson said. "I recommend people look both ways to ensure that everyone has stopped (before proceeding at an intersection).

"Drive defensively," he said.

State grant for PALS

Police Chief Brian Noonan has learned that the PALS for Wellness program will receive a $12,081 state grant for FY'97, which started July 1.

PALS is Cohasset's DARE-like program in which police officers work with the schools to help educate students on a myriad of social issues.

"We are all well aware of how important drug and violence resistance education has become to the young people of our communities," state Secretary Kathleen M. O'Toole of the Executive Office of Public Safety wrote in a letter to Noonan.

"The detrimental effects of violence, alcohol, drug and tobacco use continue to effect us all.

"The PALS program provides critical education and further empowers our children while it strengthens the community as a whole," she said.

REAL ESTATE UPDATE

TURN-KEY CONDOS

QUESTION: I'd like to buy a condo as a second home but don't have the time, inclination or money to furnish it. Any thoughts?

ANSWER: Investing in a condominium as a second home can make a great deal of sense.

You can expect: rental income possibility; outstanding tax benefits; and all the joys of ownership in that the equity builds up as the mortgage is reduced and the value of the property should rise in this market.

If you don't want the bother of decorating, there's the "turn-key" condo and it is particularly popular in resort areas. It comes completely furnished and ready to move into.

Public Notice

PUBLIC NOTICE OF ENVIRONMENTAL REVIEW

PROJECT: Mary Soutter — Bank Stabilization

LOCATION: 71 Atlantic Ave. (Whitehead Road) Cohasset, MA

PROPONENT: EAS Survey, Inc.

The undersigned is submitting an Environmental Notification Form ("ENF") to the Secretary of Environmental Affairs on or before 10/17/96.

This will initiate review of the above project pursuant to the Massachusetts Environmental Policy Act ("MEPA", G.L. c. 30, secs. 61, 62-62H). Copies of the ENF may be obtained from: EAS Survey, Inc., 141 Route 6A, Box 1729, Sandwich, MA 02363. Copies of the ENF are also being sent to the Conservation Commission and Planning Board of Cohasset, where they may be inspected.

The Secretary of Environmental Affairs will publish notice of the ENF in the Environmental Monitor, will receive public comments on the project for twenty days, and will then decide, within ten days, if an Environmental Impact Report is needed. A site visit and consultation session on the project may also be scheduled. All persons wishing to comment on the project, or to be notified of a site visit or consultation session, should write to the Secretary of Environmental Affairs, 100 Cambridge Street, Boston, Massachusetts 02202, Attention: MEPA Unit, referencing the above project.

Weekend walkathon and fair to support wildlife center

By ALICE C. COYLE
Cohasset Mariner

Take a walk on the wild side this weekend and support a good cause — the New England Wildlife Center (NEWC).

The center is hosting a wildlife fair and walkathon Sunday to raise awareness about, and funding for its many programs.

Founded more than a decade ago, the center has been putting wounded wild animals back on their feet and back into their natural habitats ever since.

A non-profit organization dedicated to preserving wildlife, NEWC is one of only two professional wildlife hospitals in New England. In addition to wildlife medicine, the center focuses on education and humane research. NEWC also serves as a teaching hospital offering dozens of internships to students in veterinary programs.

Funded by donations from private companies and its members, NEWC costs $260,000 to run each year. This weekend's fair and walkathon is a fund-raiser to help the center meet its budget, said NEWC board member Lynn Ford.

According to Ford, the center treats more than 4,000 sick, injured and orphaned animals (168 species) each year. Many of the center's patients are treated for ailments stemming from manmade hazards including geese poisoned by lawn chemicals, coyotes and foxes hit by cars, and hawks and owls injured by flying into power lines.

After receiving treatment from the center's veterinarian and licensed wildlife rehabilitator, most of the animals are released back into the wild.

Animals that can no longer survive in the wild, become permanent fixtures at the center making visits to elementary schools all over the state as part of NEWC's educational programs. Alarius, a 1-1/2 year-old, Great Horned Owl with cataracts is one of the center's permanent residents and he'll be on hand, literally for this weekend's events.

The wildlife fair will get underway at the center starting at 11 a.m. and will feature jugglers, clowns, carnival games, wild animal exhibits, hay-rides and more. Youngsters can bring their sick stuffed animals by the Teddy Bear clinic or hug a real baby bunny at the "Hug a Bunny" exhibit. The wildlife center's two-mile walkathon steps off at 1 p.m. at Bare Cove Park. There is a $5 registration fee for the walk and prizes including gift certificates from Etonic, New Balance and Eastern Mountain Sports will be given to the top pledge-getters. The walkathon registration fee will be waived and T-shirts will be given to walkers who raise more than $35 in pledges, Ford said. For information on the event or for sponsor sheets the walkathon call the New England Wildlife Center at 74[illegible] 5387.

Marlette installed as 100th Master of Masonic lodge

George L. Marlette of Cohasset was installed Sept. 28 as the 100th Master of Old Colony Lodge A.F. and A.M., Masonic lodge, Hingham, which was founded in 1792. Marlette, a practicing attorney in Brockton, is Cohasset Town Moderator.

Installing Master was Frederick M. Shaw Jr. of Hingham. A special charge to officers and personal message was delivered by past Master The Honorable Charles E. Black, presiding Justice of the District Court Department, Quincy Division, and the regional administrative Justice.

A reception, which was attended by more than 100 guests, followed at Congregation Sha'aray Shalom, Hingham.

Old and rare books is topic

Cohasset Elder Affairs will sponsor a lecture, "Treasures in your Attic: Old and Rare Books," Thursday, Oct. 24, at the Senior Center, 3 North Main St.

Kenneth Gloss, proprietor of the nationally known Brattle Book Shop in Boston, will speak at about 1:40 p.m., following the council's luncheon.

Gloss has worked in Brattle Book Shop since childhood, succeeding his late father, George Gloss, a well-known figure in both Boston and antiquarian circles, as proprietor upon his death several years ago.

Gloss will bring to the lecture several examples of interesting books, magazines and ephemera from the store's private collection, including a 1912 World Series scorecard and old Life magazines.

For further information, call Brattle Book Shop at (800) 447-9595.

Glass flowers are on agenda

The Community Garden Club of Cohasset will hold its monthly meeting Tuesday, Oct. 22, at 9 a.m. in Walton Rodgers Hall, St. Stephen's Church.

The topic will be "The Glass Flowers of Harvard." Guest speaker will be Henry T. Callan, who will use slides to tell the story of the beautiful masterpieces created by a father and son in Germany to aid in the teaching of botany at Harvard.

THIS WEEK

Welcome to Our New Look

The Cohasset Mariner premiers a colorful new look this week, the first major make over since its debut in 1978.

The pages you hold still contain all the local news, sports, letters, editorial and cartoon, community events, school news and award-winning photography that have distinguished the Cohasset Mariner for more than 18 years. We think our new format will provide those features with the style and organization they deserve.

In our flag, we've retired the ship's wheel and replaced it with a color rendering of historic Minot's Ledge Lighthouse as symbol of Cohasset tradition.

Village Station Vote Could Draw a Crowd

Special Town Meeting is Monday

By Mary Ford
COHASSET MARINER

Voters will be asked to appropriate upwards of $600,000 of the town's free cash for a range of capital items at the Special Town Meeting which gets underway at 7:30 p.m., Monday at Cohasset High School auditorium.

Town Moderator George Marlette said he will start the meeting promptly after the required quorum of 100 registered voters is reached.

With a non-binding "straw poll" on the village train station being held as residents check in, reaching a quorum shouldn't take long, Marlette said. The possibility of moving the railroad station, originally proposed for Route 3A, is proving to be nearly as controversial among Cohasseters as the debate over whether or not to restore the Greenbush Line has been.

Marlette and Town Clerk Marion Douglas have formally asked for extra checkers and an additional detail officer to ensure that the voting goes smoothly. They are determined that the train vote not interfere with the business before town meeting. Selectmen did not act on their written request at their meeting Tuesday.

To keep the meeting moving along, Marlette will limit the amount of time spent discussing articles — which number 38 for this special town meeting — by restricting the time that proponents, board members

Town Can't Stem Tide

Flood Gates Now Open for Full Drainage Study

By Mary Ford
COHASSET MARINER

As the town pulled together to battle the worst flood in memory which damaged 50 to 60 homes and businesses — officials realized the town's drainage problems must be addressed in their totality to avert a future disaster.

While faulty tidal gates at the mouth of James Brook in the Cove have been blamed for minor flooding in the past — this week's mammoth flood proved the problem is more complex, Selectman Peter Pratt said.

The record-breaking nor'easter dumped more than 8-1/2 inches from 8 a.m. Saturday to 8 a.m. Tuesday in town, proving too much for James Brook which extends from Scituate Hill at Cohasset Heights Landfill off Route 3A to the harbor. The excess water backed up into the village onto Ripley Road, Sohier Street, Smith Place and the James Lane and Pleasant Street neighborhood prompting town officials to declare a state of emergency on Tuesday.

Selectmen Merle Brown and Peter Pratt, Town Administrator Gregory Doyon, DPW Supt. Harold Litchfield, Fire Chief Roger Lincoln and Police Chief Brian Noonan huddled in the selectmen's office Monday afternoon to plan for the worst.

Bob Knurek positions his hose to pump out his basement on Pleasant Street. Knurek said his furnace was damaged in the flood.

Fears escalated as water in flooded areas continued to rise despite low tide and the open tidal gates in the Cove. To complicate matters, the water department reported that the water levels in the reservoir were coming perilously close to the limit — which, if exceeded, would have necessitated shutting the plant down to prevent untreated water from mixing with treated water in the system.

Joanne Lehr organized a shelter at the Second Congregational Church which was not used although at least two families in town did have to leave their homes during the flood.

After calls to the state for help proved fruitless because of flooding elsewhere, the town was able to rent a tractor with a pump used to drain cranberry bogs to help empty some of the water from James Brook basin. While the gates were closed at high tide, the pump sent thousands of gallons of excess water through rubber pipes across Border Street and Memorial Park into the harbor.

Cohasset's Week

Unified Effort Against Water Company

Selectman Peter Pratt said Cohasset should contact officials in Hingham and Hull to coordinate their actions against a 150 per cent water rate increase that affects customers of the Massachusetts-American Water Company in the three towns.

Last week, Pratt, selectmen Ronnie McMorris and Nan Roth joined officials from Hingham and Hull, state legislators, and representatives of the executive office of consumer affairs in a meeting with Lt. Gov. Paul Cellucci, to voice their complaints about the water rate increase.

McMorris noted that Mass-American must report its actual costs at the end of the year, in comparison to the estimates it submitted at the time of the rate case before the state Dept. of Public Utilities.

Roth said Cohasset should keep the issue of water quality in the forefront of the discussions, since Hingham and Hull seem to be objecting about the rates and "really ignoring [water] quality."

She added that Cohasset should continue to be aggressive in its dealings with Mass-American, and cannot "sit back" now.

From a strategic point, Cohasset should consider laying new water pipes to connect the Mass-American customers in North Cohasset to the town's water supply, selectman Michael Sullivan said. This action might be preferable to an eminent domain taking of Mass-American's 100-year old pipes, since Cohasset does not want to own an interest in another water system and old pipes that serve a small percentage of the population.

North Cohasset resident, and Mass-American customer, Maria Plante said that with new sewer pipes being laid in the area, this might be the best time to also lay the water mains. She noted that contractors have told her that both sets of pipes can be laid in the same trenches, providing the sewer pipes are at least 18 inches lower than the water mains.

Jersusalem Road resident Diane Sullivan formally requested that the town purchase water from Mass-American and re-sell to the North Cohasset residents, at the same rate paid by residents with town water service.

Pratt agreed with Selectmen Sullivan said this would be difficult to do.

Plante and Diane Sullivan, who have regularly attended recent selectmen's meeting complain about their water rates and water quality, said they are pleased with the response they have had for the planned "march" on the State House next week. However, the women noted that their posters and notices have been displayed at various businesses in Cohasset, but the police department has refused to allow them to post a notice of the march there.

Ten Minutes for Walk-ins

Selectmen set aside 10 minutes at 8 p.m. on their meeting nights to address any concerns from members of the public who have issues that are not on the agenda.

If the matter cannot be handled briefly, it will be placed on a future agenda, selectmen said.

Dump Hours Could Change

Selectmen have approved, pending comments for the public works superintendent, a request from transfer station personnel to change the hours of operations there, allowing them two consecutive days off.

Selectmen said this week that the transfer station could be closed on Mondays and opened on Thursdays.

The old schedule was for the transfer station to be open Mondays, Wednesdays, Fridays, Saturdays, and Sundays. On the new schedule, it will be open Wednedays, Thursdays, Fridays, Saturdays, and Sundays.

Chairman Merle Brown said this should represent little inconvenience to residents since the transfer station is not now open to the public on Mondays. Workers are there to do maintenance and clean-up only, Brown said, and this work can now be accomplished on Thursdays.

Brown suggested that the hours be changed to 7:15 a.m. to 4:15 p.m., to allow more time for clean up that may be necessary on Thursdays, when the transfer station is open to the public.

The workers will be allowed to have a day-off on Thursdays, to compensate for any "Monday Holidays" that occur.

License Transfer at Log 'n Line

Selectmen unanimously approved the beer and wine license for the Log 'n' Line restaurant from Panos Kulterides to Richard Piasecki.

Piasecki said he has lived in Cohasset for 10 years, but has worked in the food service industry since age 14. Until purchasing the local restaurant, he was a district manager for area Boston Market restaurants.

While he expects to do some minor remodelling of the Ripley Road restaurant, much of the business will remain the same family restaurant for the immediate future.

Eventually, he hopes to open the restaurant for dinner, but wants the beer and wine license only to offer those beverages to customers dining there.

Upcoming Meetings Noted

The following meetings have been posted outside the town clerk's office at town hall:

- Board of Health, public hearing at 7 p.m., Oct. 29;
- Planning Board, 8 p.m., Nov. 6.
- Sewer Commission, 6:30 p.m., Oct. 30 & public meeting, 7:30 p.m., Nov. 18.
- Board of Assessors, 6:30 p.m., Oct. 30.
- Private Ways Committee, 7:30 p.m., Nov. 13.

All meetings are at town hall unless otherwise noted. Room locations are posted on the bulletin board in the vestibule at town hall on the day of the meeting. Check with the town clerk or the particular board's office at town hall (383-9900) for any cancellations.

PUBLIC NOTICE
TOWN OF COHASSET, MA
COHASSET SEWER COMMISSION

ATTENTION
COHASSET RESIDENTS
IN THE STRAITS POND AREA

Dear Cohasset Resident:

In accordance with Articles 4 and 5 of the March 30, 1996 Special Town Meeting, the Cohasset Sewer Commission has been directed to implement the design and construction of the North Cohasset Sewer System including its interconnection to the Town of Hull. Tutela Engineering Associates, Inc. has been retained by the Sewer Commission to facilitate the acquisition of required easements. In order to adequately construct the wastewater collection system and individual service connections, Tutela Engineering will be visiting property owners of the proposed North Cohasset Sewer System over the next several weeks to confirm an acceptable location for individual service connections and to prepare and execute all permanent easements required for construction. To aid the homeowner in the execution of the required easements, a Notary Public will accompany Tutela Engineering representatives to properly notarize the signature(s) of the appropriate homeowner for the permanent sewer easements.

Your cooperation with these efforts would be greatly appreciated. The easements are required to provide the homeowner with sewer service. State funding will not be available to sites without properly executed easements.

If you have any questions relative to this matter or you wish to schedule a site visit, please contact Mr. Daniel Coughlin, P.E., of Tutela Engineering Associates, Inc. at (508) 658-7493.

Thank you for your cooperation
Edward M. Guild, Chairman
Cohasset Sewer Commission

Kirk Won't Seek Re-election to School Board

By Andi Weissman
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

School Committee member Jim Kirk announced Thursday he will not seek re-election next spring.

"The time pressures of trying to manage and build my (strategic research) company are considerable, and I find I cannot sustain my time commitment to the School Committee," he said. "I am announcing my decision now so that anyone who may wish to consider running for the Committee will have plenty of time to consider their decision."

Kirk has been a member of the School Committee since he was elected in 1994. Prior to that, he was chairman of the regional school study committee and a member of Cohasset Education Foundation.

He also asked Cohasset residents to "reflect on the nature of public service."

In a telephone interview, Kirk said last year's controversy over the new elementary school project may have hurt the spirit of volunteerism in Cohasset.

"All along the way, an awful lot of bitterness and angry words were leveled at the School Committee," he said. "We had people literally questioning our motives. . . . It really left a bad taste. It certainly made me question my decision to be involved."

He stressed that the rancorous public debate did not contribute to his decision not to run for re-election. The time demands of his growing Watertown company, Eidetics, limits his ability to contribute to the School Committee, Kirk said.

Kirk considers his work on a comprehensive, townwide survey which formed the basis of the committee's strategic planning for 1995 and his "business approach" to the committee to have been his greatest accomplishments to date.

For the remainder of his term, Kirk looks forward to working with the new school principals and working on the budget.

Committee Chairman Ralph Kidder said Thursday night that Kirk's resignation will be a loss to the committee.

"I have done everything in my power short of holding Jim's youngest for ransom to convince him to seek re-election," Kidd said.

School Superintendent Stephen Hart thanked Kirk for the hard work and effort he has shown over the past two-and-a-half years. Kirk was often hard at work for the committee before the workday had even started, he said.

"I don't know if I'll be grateful not to get those early morning faxes," Hart joked.

Village Station

and voters can speak to an issue.

Marlette expects most of the articles to move quickly except perhaps the borrowing article for the nearly $230,000 needed to complete the Department of Public Works garage — a project which is over budget and therefore may require some explanation. Voters will also be asked to approve borrowing $60,000 to extend the Cedar Street water main to the garage.

Taking care of unpaid bills; repairing sidewalks, private ways and streets; purchasing computers and related software; and buying and installing air conditioning at the library are just a few of the items before voters.

More expensive items on the warrant include purchasing two new school buses for $90,000 (includes trade in of two 1986 busses); refurbishing the high school auditorium for $140,000 and contributing $100,000 towards the purchase of Turkey Hill which will be preserved as open space.

Marlette said if most of the articles are completed by around 11 p.m., Monday, then the meeting might continue for a half an hour or so in order to finish. Otherwise, the meeting will be continued at 7:30 p.m., Tuesday.

If time permits and if there is enough interest, Marlette said he would be happy to moderate a public forum on the village station after town meeting adjourns.

In a flyer included with the special town meeting warrant, selectmen urged citizens to attend the Oct. 23 village station public meeting, held last night after the Mariner went to press, to become knowledgeable on the issue and then to express their opinion in the informal non-binding survey Monday night.

It is not clear if voters, attending solely for the village station issue, will decide to stay until the close of the special town meeting to discuss the train.

A crowd of more than 600 jammed the high school gym at a special town meeting on restoration of the Greenbush Line three years ago. That vote revealed that the community was nearly split down the middle on the train issue.

New Look

The lighthouse, which is listed on the National Register of Historic Places, was rebuilt in granite in 1858-59 on outer Minot's ledge after the original was toppled in a nor'easter. It was lit in 1860 and about 30 years later the U.S. Lighthouse Service assigned it the distinct 1-4-3 pattern so it could be recognized easily. Over the years the familiar flashing light has come to mean "I Love You."

The top of the lighthouse was replaced in 1987 and the granite blocks were recycled to construct the Replica which adorns Government Island where the lightkeepers once lived.

Cohasset Bicyclist Killed in Accident in North Scituate Last Week

By Steve Adams
COHASSET MARINER

The driver of the car that struck and killed a 49-year-old bicycling college professor in North Scituate Thursday night turned herself into police after initially fleeing the scene. Police say she was drunk and speeding at the time of the crash.

Andrea Beale, 32, 87 Glades Road, was arraigned in Hingham District Court Friday morning on charges of motor vehicle homicide while operating under the influence of alcohol, driving to endanger, leaving the scene of an accident after causing death, failure to pass a bicycle at a safe distance and speeding. She was released on $2,000 bail and is next scheduled to appear in court Nov. 4.

The victim, Sam Postbrief, 49, 176 Pond St., Cohasset, was bicycling westbound on Henry Turner Bailey Road when he was struck from behind by Beale's car. Postbrief, who was wearing a bicycle helmet, was thrown over the windshield of the car and the bicycle was sent about 50 yards down the street.

"The indications were that he was riding in the proper area for bicycles, and had lights on the rear of the bicycle that were in operation," said Police Chief Thomas Nielen. "For some reason, she came up behind and hit him."

Neilen said the preliminary investigation indicates Beale's brown Ford Tempo was travel-

Victim's Interests Knew No Boundaries

By Steve Adams
COHASSET MARINER

There is a strain of mystical Judaism that maintains there are 36 righteous souls in the world, people whose identities remain unknown but whose simultaneous presence heralds the beginning of the Messianic Age.

This doctrine of the "small number of just men" came to mind when Louise Wolfe described her longtime friend Sam Postbrief.

"He was the most generous, loving person you could imagine," said Wolfe. "He was unusually kind, with a generous spirit and a great sense of humor."

Following Sam Postbrief's death Thursday evening in an accident in North Scituate, Wolfe and friends and family of Wendy Jane Gordon-Postbrief served as a "support group" for the widow of a man whose interests and enthusiasms seemed to know no boundaries.

A Cambridge lawyer and friend of Gordon-Postbrief, a Boston University law professor, Wolfe agreed with her friend's description of her husband as a "Renaissance man."

"If there was a subject, whatever it was, it turned out that Sam had read 100 books on it," said Wolfe, who did not know Sam Postbrief growing up but later learned that she had grown up in the same Brooklyn, N.Y. neighborhood and, like Postbrief, had graduated from Midwood High School.

When Wolfe became pregnant, suddenly Postbrief began collecting books about child development, she recalled.

Wolfe and other members of the Gordon family remained at the couple's home on Pond Street not far from Cohasset High School Saturday to offer support and condolences.

Sam Postbrief's family emigrated to America from Europe when he was 3 1/2, settling in Brooklyn.

Mr. Postbrief graduated from Brooklyn College and obtained his doctorate in political science from Indiana University in 1975. After graduate school, he taught political science at the University of Maryland for eight years.

In 1983, he took up professional photography and moved to the New York City area. He also became a professional chef, working at the Rainbow Room, China Grill and Princeton Club, where he served as the executive sous chef. He met his wife in 1990 through a mutual friend.

In 1993, the couple moved to Cohasset when Sam was hired as a culinary instructor by Johnson and Wales University in Providence and Wendy was hired as a law professor at B.U.

He taught culinary arts, sociology, and food and culture at Johnson and Wales. He had been planning to launch a political science program at the school next fall.

The couple also had been collaborating on an essay about ownership for the Yale Journal of Law and the Humanities.

"He and Wendy really appreciated each other," Wolfe said.

A funeral was held Sunday at the Congregation Sha'Aray Shalom in Hingham.

In addition to his wife, Mr. Postbrief leaves his parents, Jehoszua and Rachel (Zeitman) Postbrief of Brooklyn; a stepdaughter, Lynne Petrovic; and a brother, Simon Postbrief of Brooklyn. He was the stepfather of the late Debbie Petrovic.

Donations may be made to Indiana University, Bloomington, Ind.

Selectmen are Cool to Proposed Little League Signs

By Charlene Vandini
COHASSET MARINER

A request for advertising signs at Barnes Field has been directed to the zoning board appeals.

Bob Moody, representing the baseball program said there would be only 12 to 14 signs, and would be done tastefully. They would be hung from the end of the batting cage down the right field line, only during the baseball season, from April to August.

He showed the board photographs of fields in Milton, Braintree, and Stoughton, and expects such advertisers as Coca Cola and Reebok to pay the $400 per year fee.

The signs could generate up to $12,000 which would support the program, paying for field maintenance and uniforms, Moody said.

Selectman Michael Sullivan said he objects to a sign from a state senator that appeared in one of the photographs, and selectman Peter Pratt noted the field is within one-quarter mile of the historic district and in a residential area, so the signs may be inappropriate.

Allowing the signs in this case may put the board in a difficult position to require enforcement of the zoning by-laws for businesses.

Chairman Merle Brown said he is opposed to advertising signs at athletic fields in general, noting he does not like the signs that encircle the ice at professional hockey games.

Moody said the youth baseball league has tried other forms of fund-raising but cannot raise enough money to cover its expenses.

"There's only so much people can give."

He added that building inspector Bob Egan said the signs might be allowed under Cohasset's zoning by-law if they are considered temporary signs.

ing 45 to 50 mph at the time of the crash. The area is posted as a 40-mph zone.

Several passing motorists, including an EMT, stopped and attempted CPR on the victim. A Scituate ambulance transported Postbrief to South Shore Hospital, where he was pronounced dead on arrival.

The vehicle left the scene and Scituate police alerted their counterparts in neighboring towns to be on the lookout for a dark-colored car with heavy front-end damage. About 20 minutes later, Beale called Cohasset police from a pay phone at the Super Stop & Shop Plaza.

A passenger got out of Beale's car in Cohasset before police arrived. The passenger, whose name police would not divulge, arrived at the Scituate police station with an attorney early Friday morning and provided a statement as a witness.

Scituate police closed off Henry Turner Bailey Road from Route 3A to Gannett Pasture Lane for several hours while evidence was collected. Bits of broken glass from the headlight and parking lights, the crumpled bicycle on the roadside and a single running shoe left in the middle of the street were the only remnants of the fatality.

A State Police accident reconstruction team also took part in the investigation.

A Scituate detective who interviewed Beale at the supermarket plaza made observations of slurred speech and an odor of alcohol on her breath. She was subsequently transported to South Shore Hospital for treatment of shock. She refused a breathalyzer, Neilen said.

GOING PLACES

DON'T GET BAGGED DOWN

So you're leaving on a jet plane - are your bags packed, ready to go, as the song goes? Deciding what to take and how to transport it can be half the trouble of traveling. Here's some advice from frequent flyers to keep your bags from bogging you down. First, think twice before loading a large-size suitcase. If you really end up filling the case, it may be too heavy and cumbersome to manage on your own. Carry two smaller suitcases instead, or better yet, leave half of the contents behind. (You might be surprised what you can do without!) Practice carrying your empty cases around the house. If they feel heavy, it doesn't matter how spiffy the flip-down wheels or genuine leather looks, they're going to be a pain to travel with. Finally, check out carry-on limits before you leave home to avoid a nasty surprise at the gate when the attendant tells you your bag is too big to board.

We think travel agents should do more than just get you where you want to go. Getting you to your destination, with reservations and tickets at a good price, is a "must" for any travel agent. But when you go with SCITUATE HARBOR TRAVEL, we don't stop there. You'll quickly discover that you're getting something more. At 53 Cole Parkway, Scituate Harbor, we specialize in the "little things" that make travel a true pleasure, like ideas on efficient packing, special places to visit, and things not to miss. HINT: Carrying expensive designer luggage may send the message that you are a wealthy travaeler.

AROUND TOWN/Sallyann Chatterton

Don't miss antique appraisal day at art center!

I have to begin by extending belated birthday wishes to Ken Fone. A few weeks ago it was Sue, now Ken. For those few weeks both were the same age! Anyway, now he is a year older again, and we hope there are many more in store for both of them!

Don't forget — this Friday at South Shore Art Center is Skinner Appraisal Day! What is your antique worth? Is that vase really valuable? You may bring a total of three items from virtually all collecting categories — porcelain, pottery, paintings, books, toys, dolls, antique textiles, jewelry, china, silver — it takes approximately five minutes to appraise each item, and if you are interested in selling, consignment arrangements may be discussed with your Skinner representative. (If you have large items, a good photo may be substituted.) So, it's Friday, Oct. 25, from 3 to 8 p.m., $5 per item or $10 for three. As they say, "The value could be priceless"!

A few weeks ago, Scituate High School students, parents and many graduates attended the dedication of the school's new hockey field. It was dedicated to Paul Svensen, former athletic director and coach who passed away last December. Many people in Cohasset knew Paul. He touched lives through sports and his children.

We just wanted to let his family know we think of Paul often, he was a fine man and he is missed.

Had a nice chat with Michele Buckley last week. She was full of news! Michele is a 1968 CHS graduate with a background in special ed and library media. Well, Michele has branched out on her own and is now an independent distributor for Dorling Kindersley Books, a British publisher.

She works out of her home and offers a huge selection of books, all non-fiction, for ages pre-school through adult. Anything on hobbies, schools, gardening, science, art, school-related topics, cooking — you get the idea — great gifts, school project info, whatever you can think of! Give Michele a call at 383-0304 for more information.

Matthew Tydurski snoozes with a cookie while his mother, Terri, donates blood during the Red Cross blood drive in Cohasset last month.

Congratulations go to Gary Barrow this week. He is now a certified arborist after having passed the exam recently. Now you will know who to call if you have any questions with your trees or are planning a tree farm!

South Shore Community Center, Cohasset Education Foundation and GEMS of HOPE are planning a Family Fall Festival this Saturday, Oct. 26, from 3 to 8 p.m. at SSCC, and they promise "fun for everyone!"

There will be a hayride, scavenger hunt, bowling, costume contest, dancing to the "Grateful Dads," children's games, a haunted house, dinner, silent auction and raffle. It promises to be a time chock full of things to do. Check it out!

After that, return to the Common the next day for the Halloween Fair, an annual event sponsored by South Shore Community Center's nursery school.

The fair will be held from 1:30 to 3:30 p.m., with lots of activities planned for everyone. For more info, call Lynne Sheridan at 383-0036.

Cohasset Community Church is starting its Weigh Down Workshop is tonight (Oct. 24) at 7 p.m. Please phone Kim Hurlbut at 383-9761 for more information on the free orientation.

Two weeks ago was the final Farmers' Market for this year, and it truly will be missed by all. Just one more time, let's thank Anna Abbruzze for the great idea, and the Chamber of Commerce and Village Revitalization Committee for sponsoring it. There was great produce, food and fun. Oh, let's hope winter flies by . . . .

Hats off to Jack Conway & Co.! The company received the 13th Annual Plymouth County Corporate Citizen of the Year Award, presented at the annual meeting of Plymouth County Development Council at Sheraton Inn, Plymouth.

The award recognizes a company that has shown a "continuing commitment to maintain and expand the economy of Plymouth County." We all know what Jack Conway does for so many, and it is nice to see him recognized for it.

Once again the PSO needs you! They plan many fund-raising events each year, and this year is no different — there will be a fall dance, gift wrap sale, silent auction and more. Any help you can give would be appreciated. To volunteer, call Tomi Bukowski at 383-6771; Lesley Faber, 383-2071; Patty Smith at 383-2773; or Jane Wasel at 383-0121.

Here's some news from Hawaii! As you all know by now, my sister Ricki has a lot of surfers in her family. Well, Ricki's son, Zane, just returned from the world surfing championship held in France, and he came in fifth!

Last hear he was 13th in the world, so you can see how much he has progressed in the surfing world! For all of you surf enthusiasts, Zane has a great picture in this month's edition of Longboard Magazine. You'll recognize him if you know Ricki — he looks so much like her! Oh yes, their last name is Aikau.

That's all we have heard for the week, and we're sure you must have news of your own to report! Call me, please!

Halloween Happenings

Visit a Haunted House

The Junior High Youth Group of Second Congregational Church in Cohasset is sponsoring a Haunted House timed to coincide with the conclusion of the Community Center's Halloween party.

The Haunted House, designed for children ages 2-8, will run from 3 to 4:30 p.m. Sunday, Oct. 27.

Coordinator Stephanie Noble described the event's tableaux format as "scary fun." A $1 donation for ages 5-8 for the tour through the Haunted Hallways, and 50 cents for children 2- to 4-years-old to enter the Haunted Story Room is requested (brave parents allowed, too).

Why not join in some scary fun?

'Dracula' performances set

Cohasset Drama Club will present "Dracula" for theatergoers who enjoy thrills, surprises, shudders and sensations Oct. 23, 25, 26 and 30 and Nov. 1 and 2.

Two Cohasset residents are members of the cast, including Meredith O'Hayre as the Ghost Wife and Angi Walsh as Mrs. Fern.

Performances will be held at Cohasset Town Hall at 8 p.m. Tickets are $10 and may be purchased at Buttonwood Books in Cohasset or at the door on the night of the performance. The play, directed by Sally Wright, is an adaptation of Bram Stroker's "Dracula."

Come to a family fall festival!

A Family Fall Festival will be held Saturday, Oct. 26, from 3 to 8 p.m. at South Shore Community Center, Cohasset. Activities will include a haunted house, scavenger hunt, hayride, costume contest, children's games, prizes, bowling, TV football party for adults, dinner, dancing to the "Grateful Dads," silent auction and raffle. Costumes are optional.

Tickets are $10 per person ($60 maximum per family) and may be purchased by calling 383-6670 or 383-6399.

The event is sponsored by South Shore Community Center, with proceeds benefitting the center, Cohasset Education Foundation and GEMS of Hope.

EDITORIALS & OPINIONS

It's up to you

Massachusetts voters have a tough choice to make in the U.S. Senate race. Not in living memory have we had two candidates of such stature, a sitting governor and a sitting senator, vying for our votes.

Gov. William F. Weld and Sen. John F. Kerry are among the most intelligent, articulate political leaders in America today. Each can point to solid accomplishments and each has demonstrated political courage. They have waged a vigorous, issues-oriented campaign without cheap shots and personal attacks.

On critical issues facing Congress and the nation, both Kerry and Weld have something to contribute:

* Education: Kerry has a proven commitment to federal support for education, and was an early champion of the targeted tax breaks for education that have become a key plank in the Clinton campaign platform. Weld gets credit for bringing education reform to Massachusetts and pledges to keep on reforming.

* Taxes: Nobody's tougher on taxes than Weld. He has cut taxes by $1 billion as governor, and can be counted on to push for more of the same in the Senate. Kerry's commitment to tax relief isn't nearly as strong, but he has shown more discipline than many Democrats on deficit reduction.

* Crime: Both men are former prosecutors, and both are serious about crime. Weld's emphasis is on imprisonment, while Kerry's is on prevention and law enforcement, but both support the 1994 crime bill, which Kerry helped push through the Senate.

* Environment: No one in the Senate has stronger environmental credentials than Kerry, who has the support of the major environmental organizations. But sportsman Weld has a good environmental record as well, including the Rivers Protection Act, the open space bond bill and the Title 5 septic regulations, and he is more likely to promote innovative approaches to environmental issues.

* Foreign policy: This is Kerry's specialty, and his proudest accomplishment has been the restoration of relations with Vietnam - and helping heal the scars that still ache from that war. Weld brings no foreign policy resume, but he is, he says, ``a violent free-trader and a thorough-going internationalist," who has shown a strong commitment to helping Massachusetts business succeed in the global economy.

* Economic development: Both understand the importance of high technology and global trade to the Massachusetts economy, and each can be counted on to help out a local company in need. Their differences reflect their philosophies: Weld wants to help business by getting government regulations and taxes out of the way, while Kerry wants government to help business directly, through job training, research grants and trade assistance.

* Welfare: Weld's sympathies lie with those who pay for government assistance, not those in need of it. The welfare reforms he brought Massachusetts were long overdue, and some of the cuts his administration has made in social services, however painful, were necessary. Kerry, on the other hand, loves the poor more than he hates the bureaucracy. The social safety net is safe in his hands, even those threads that are of little practical value.

* Government reform: Weld has proven to be a serious, unflinching champion of leaner, more effective government. He challenges assumptions and is capable of resisting interest group pressure. But while Weld has a bias toward making government go away, Kerry is passionate about finding ways for government to help.

A strong case can be made for either of these candidates.

John Kerry has served Massachusetts and the nation well during his two Senate terms. He has strong values and has earned the respect of his colleagues on issues ranging from banking regulation to foreign affairs. He can work well with President Clinton and Sen. Ted Kennedy, not only to rein in the excesses of Congressional Republicans, but to give all Americans a more effective, responsive government for the 21st Century.

Bill Weld took over as governor at a time when state government was in the red, the economy was in the doldrums and the political establishment was in disrepute. The turnaround under his leadership has been nothing short of remarkable, and his fresh vision could do the same for Washington. He is a independent thinker, who takes his marching orders from no one, but he is a Republican, and Massachusetts could benefit from having a strong voice in the Senate Republican Caucus.

Community Newspaper Company, publishers of this paper, is a group of newspapers that spans eastern Massachusetts. Through our group strength, we've been able to cover this race in depth, assigning extra reporters to it and bringing the candidates together with 400 high school students in a Youth Forum we hosted. Our editors, publishers and management have met as a group with both Kerry and Weld for lengthy interviews on their beliefs.

Although a United States Senator represents the entire commonwealth, Massachusetts includes dozens of regions, 351 municipalities and tens of thousands of neighborhoods. Public policy that is a boon to one community may be at the expense of another.

In meeting with the candidates and discussing our own responsibilities to our readers, it became clear that the records and pledges of Kerry and Weld mean different things and offer different advantages to the variety of cities and towns that comprise eastern Massachusetts. Tip O'Neill's maxim that ``All politics is local" still holds true.

So while we offer our thoughts on this race, we won't presume to tell you which of these outstanding candidates is best for your family or your community. We urge you to consider carefully both John Kerry and Bill Weld and give one of them your vote.

This is a close race with much at stake, so make sure your voice is heard. The good news is that whichever of these gentlemen comes out on top, Massachusetts can be proud of its senator - and we can feel good about leadership into the 21st Century.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Station Site is up to Selectmen

To the Editor:

The location of the proposed Cohasset Railway Station can have a positive effect on our town's future. Cohasset is one of the few towns that has a real central village with its Town Hall and Common, police and fire stations, churches, Community Center and Art Center, museums and library, hostelries and eating places, professional offices, and local banks and businesses all in the one area. A railway station here would help generate the foot traffic that these places depend upon; we might even get back a regular drug store. It is also the place where people would expect to find a station; one had been there since 1849. (My first acquaintance with Cohasset started there just 50 years ago when I came to seek a place to bring my family.

The alternative would be on the edge of town next to the Hingham line in the midst of a very large wetland known as Great Swamp, its attraction being its relatively low cost and the fact that it wouldn't bother anybody. However, we're talking about a passenger station, not a freight depot.

This is a decision for the long term, costly too, and there are some who will be discommoded; these people would need to be properly compensated.

The question itself must be decided from the evidence so carefully studied by the people, committees, and boards involved as well as private citizens and presented to the Selectmen for their consideration. This is not a popularity contest; politics, emotion, and prejudice must be put aside in favor of the best long-term interest of our town. Straw polls and Town Meeting votes deserve consideration, but in the end reason must prevail and only the Board of Selectmen is in a position to deliberate as a panel of judges to hammer this thing out. Let us hope that they will recognize their responsibility and make a reasoned recommendation to the M.B.T.A.

Results of Reader Survey question for October 17, 1996

Ten years ago, the board of selectmen advised the MBTA to put the commuter rail station on Route 3A. Now, the selectmen have reopened the issue of a train station in the village, and the MBTA says it needs an answer soon. A non-binding survey is set to take place at the October 28 special town meeting. How should the decision be made?

9 Selectmen should base their decision on the outcome of the October 28 special town meeting survey.

12 The town should incur the expense of a special town referendum on the village train station.

45 The town moderator should allow a resolution on the village station at the special town meeting.

1 Selectmen should have enough information now to make this decision.

1 The town moderator should flip a coin to decide: heads the station is in the village; tails it's on Route 3A.

Your comments:

I would suggest that the Route 3A stop is infinitely preferable to a village station. I vote that the common sense place for a Cohasset station is Route 3A, provided there is ample parking. This will avoid traffic congestion in the village.

I don't think there should be a train coming at all. The economics are ludicrous and without merit. The proposals I've seen, spending a $137,000 per potential rider, just to get the train in place, and that doesn't have anything to do with the annual operating budget. I can buy a van, drive six people to Boston anytime I want, put $600,000 in my pocket. I'll be a chauffeur and I'll take them to work for a lot less than $137,000 per person. I see no need for the train, and I see no reason to upset the center of Cohasset. There's a place on 3A if we have to have the damned train.

No train at all.

I feel absolutely that putting a station in a village is completely ridiculous. I'm opposed to the train being here at all. We need transportation, but the train isn't the answer.

I have always been against the train coming through Cohasset. And, I'm particularly appalled that Cohasset Village could even be considered for the station. I think we have a beautiful village. It's small and quaint, and I don't see why anyone could even entertain the idea of a noisy, diesel, polluting, huge, monsterous thing coming through our beautiful quaint little town. If the train if the train is to be realized, I hope it's on Route 3A and not the village.

I support the train, and I think it's important that we consider the possibility of a whistle stop in Cohasset, mainly for people walking to the station and people who are dropped off. It would not include parking. It would slow the train down, which is a concern many people have, and it will free up the need for parking spaces. We should still have the station and parking on Route 3A, and even encourage people from Hingham to use that, rather than spend money for a tunnel under Hingham. We should give some thought to making sure that some our citizens that live here and have had homes along the tracks long before the train was removed to be compensated and have a sensitive ear given to concerns about losing their property or losing property value.

I think they've had plenty of time and have plenty of information to make a decision. I think they can do it in the best interests of the community, both the people who live here today and those that will in succeeding generations. The people voted them to that postion to make that decision. Let's get on with it. It's an important decision, but no decision takes this long to figure out. I think the decision is pretty obvious. Other communities have trains and have experience with this.

I am very upset and displeased that we would consider putting a major structure in the middle of our town. It's unsafe and unncessary. They should relocate that station to another town where it belongs in Scituate or Marshfield. I hope there's a special vote on this.

I think the train should stop both on Route 3A and in the village, but there should only be a large parking lot on Route 3A, so only walkers can get on the train in the village, or people who are dropped off there.

I believe the town should be able to discuss this issue and then vote. For people to go to the meeting a week ahead of time and listen to what people say, and there's such a great chance that a different group goes to town meeting. And they'll be voting on the way it hits them, without having heard some of the good discussion on both sides before they cast an informed vote. It's great that the train is coming to Cohasset. It'll be a great benefit to get into Boston easily, whether the station is in the village or on Route 3A. There's so many things that the town should hear before they vote. I think it's ludicrous that the town moderator won't allow the town to discuss such a huge issue. There's no better way to do this than at town meeting because everyone shows up for town meeting.

I've talked to several people on Pond Street and Bancroft Road, and we're all against having the station in the village. It's much more appropriate to have it on Route 3A. I've talked to many, many people, and only one merchant wants it in the village. The residents by and large want it on Route 3A.

I'm against putting the train station in the village. That train station should go up on Route 3A. I've seen what they've done in Plymouth and that positively wouldn't fit in Cohasset Village. I'm totally against putting the station in the village.

I do not want the station in downtown Cohasset. It should go up on Route 3A. If we're allowed to vote, that's how I'll vote.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Keep Rail Stop on Route 3A

To the Editor:

It has been said that a train station in the village would be safer for Cohasset than a stop on 3A. Let's look at the facts. According to the MBTA Greenbush report, with the station on 3A, the train would only be traveling 31-mph at Spring Street (in front of the library), and only 25-mph at Depot Court (near the Art Center and Community Center Nursery School). The reason for the slow speeds is that the existing RR right of way winds between outcrops of ledge — ledge which in addition to slowing the train, provides a visually attractive sound barrier for neighboring homes, ledge which would be removed if the station was to be moved to the village.

Think of all the extra cars a village stop would bring into Cohasset. According to the Greenbush report, the Cohasset station will see 350 cars twice a day. When I think of children walking and riding their bikes, I am much more concerned about 350 cars rushing to make a train in the morning and 350 cars hurrying home for dinner in the evening, than I am about a slow moving train on a stationary track. Try to imagine a parking lot with 450 spaces in our village. The parking lot between Blockbuster Video and Stop & Shop has only 431 parking spaces, the lot in front of Woolworth's and CVS has only 312 spaces. Doesn't it make sense to keep commuter cars on 3A?

Everyone in Cohasset will enjoy the benefit of mass transportation to Boston whether the train stops on 3A or in the village. The children of Cohasset will be safer if the station is left on 3A.

SAFEGUARD Support is Appreciated

To the Editor:

As the organizers of Cohasset's recent Project SAFEGUARD Program (Student And Family Education Guards Us Against Reliance on Drugs), we would like to thank the many sponsors and volunteers who contributed to making the day an overwhelming success.

We extend a special thank you to The First Parish Church, The Second Congregational Church, St. Stephen's Church, St. Anthony's Church, Cohasset Rotary Club, Cohasset PSO, Cohasset PALS for Wellness Program, The Teen Center, Buttonwood Books & Toys, Cohasset Drug & Alcohol Committee, The Social Service League, Quickava, Super Stop & Shop and Tedeschi Food Shops. We would also like to thank Susan Carr and Jane Pescatore of the Volunteer Committee, Michelle Laney of the Hospitality Committee, Diana Kinch and Joan Kovach, who worked on publicity, and the many sixth-grade parent volunteers who gave their time to this most worthwhile educational program. In addition, we would like to thank the seventh-grade parents and teachers for showing their tremendous support by attending Project Safeguard.

You have sent a very clear message to your children. A message that Cohasset cares and that by working together, we can make children a priority in our community.

School Doors of Communication Opened

To the Citizens of Cohasset:

As you may know, we have begun a special effort to gather from the town questions and comments about the schools. On a pilot basis, we have placed comment boxes in each of the schools and the Paul Pratt Library. We have already received a variety of questions from both groups and individuals. We're also meeting directly with several different groups in town to get their input.

We will attempt to organize the communication better by sorting the issues we receive into groups of topics. This letter responds to two topics which have prompted questions from several of you:

Security: What is the status of security in the schools? What are you doing to improve security?

There are two areas of security which are of concern to the School Committee and the school administration. The first has to do with what might be termed in-school issues. How safe are our students and their belongings in the school? At the high school/middle school, Assistant Principal Jack DeLorenzo leads investigation and handling of incidents that are reported by students, parents or teachers. As needed, Mr. DeLorenzo, Principal Curt Collins, guidance counselors or teachers may be involved in talking with students or groups of students about specific situations. To help prevent incidents of petty theft, all students have access to lockers, which can be secured with a lock of the student's choice.

With regard to vandalism, we have renovated such often-vulnerable areas as the rest rooms, and have placed special maintenance priority for cleaning graffiti or fixing broken windows as soon as possible. So far in 1996, the level of vandalism seems to be lower overall, although a few incidents have been reported.

Recognizing that locks and disciplinary meetings are only part of the solution, the Cohasset Schools have, for several years, focused on teaching our younger children the importance of respect for one's own possessions and those of other students. This "Respect" theme carries through a series of instructional activities beginning in kindergarten and carrying through the sixth grade.

The other area of security is related to after-hours or weekend thefts or major vandalism. In some instances, these incidents have involved valuable equipment, including video and other electronic devices, and ropes course equipment. Over the past three years, losses have amounted to several thousand dollars of missing or vandalized school property, some of it equipment that was donated generously by groups like the PSO.

The School Committee and school administration take this aspect of security very seriously. As readers will probably recognize, we cannot discuss the specifics of increased security without directly reducing the effectiveness of those measures. We maintain a close working relationship with the Cohasset Police regarding surveillance, reporting of incidents, investigations and follow-through.

Parents, in particular, are urged to call Jack DeLorenzo, Curt Collins, Steve Hart, or any of us on the School Committee if you have specific concerns about security.

Communication: What are you doing to broaden awareness of school issues?

As a first step in improving communication, each of us has been assigned specific groups within the town; they are as follows:

Students – Ralph Kidder
Teachers – Jim Kirk
Principals and other staff – JoAnne Chittick
Parents – Rick Shea
School Councils – Maureen Jerz
Seniors – JoAnne Chittick
Non-parents – Jim Kirk
Media – Ralph Kidder
Local businesses and organizations – Rick Shea
Town boards – Maureen Jerz

Each of us is making an effort to meet with representatives or members of each "constituency" to gather questions and comments. The "comments" boxes are one avenue for collecting these thoughts.

We expect to begin televising School Committee meetings on a pilot basis, beginning in the next few weeks (as soon as we're able to make arrangements with Continental Cablevision). At our last meeting, we debated the pros and cons of this approach – will more people be aware of what's going on, but at the expense of having less direct input from the community at our meetings? We're hoping to try broadcasting the meetings until sometime in January to get a sense of how well this is working.

We will also be exploring other avenues for broadening communication, and welcome your suggestions. Already, some of you have suggested an open house for the community, as well as written reports to let you know what's happening in the schools, such as a town-wide mailing or more detailed annual Town Reports.

Hopefully, letters such as this can further help address your questions and concerns. We appreciate the help of our local papers in publicizing these issues.

Town Drainage System Explained

In light of the recent heavy rainstorm and because of the numerous phone calls from residents, I would like to explain how Cohasset's drainage system works.

At the beginning of every high tide, the James Brook tidal gates, which are located on Summer Street near the harbor, close shut to keep the tidal water from entering James Brook. At the beginning of every low tide these same gates re-open to allow the accumulated water to drain into the harbor.

During normal weather conditions, this system works fine unless large debris blocks the gates from opening. Regular maintenance usually prevents this, but occasionally this has happened. However, with heavy rain or snow or in some cases where a higher than normal tide occurs, flooding conditions are going to occur and there is nothing we can do here to prevent this from happening. The water is trapped for six hours until the next low tide begins and the gates re-open.

Your cooperation is appreciated in keeping basin covers clear of debris. This helps a lot.

Kirk Won't Seek Re-election

(Editor's note: Jim Kirk read this letter to the school committee last week.)

To: The Cohasset School Committee
From: Jim Kirk

I will not be seeking re-election to the School Committee next spring.

The time pressures of trying to manage and build my company are considerable, and I find I cannot sustain my time commitment to the School Committee. I am announcing my decision now so that anyone who may wish to consider running for the committee will have plenty of time to consider their decision.

Since I still have almost six months to serve, I won't make a farewell speech, but simply say that I have very much enjoyed working with the members of the committee, and with Superintendent Hart and his staff.

I would also like to take this opportunity to ask the citizens of the town to reflect on the nature of volunteer public service. All of the people who serve on the many town committees make personal, family and often business sacrifices to give their time and their skills to the town. We do so willingly because we believe in contributing to this place that we're privileged to call home. Were we to hire professionals to do all the jobs in this town that volunteers do now, our tax rates would be considerably higher.

The events of the past year have left many of us feeling quite battered and bewildered. It is one thing to have a few individuals question the results of thousands of hours of work on the part of well-qualified volunteers. It is quite another to have these individuals question our motives, our intelligence, and even our morals. The many bitter words which were passed as a result of this sad process should make us all think twice about how best to preserve this most precious resource: the willingness of capable, honest and caring people to give of themselves to make this town the best that it can be. I hope we're successful in sustaining the spirit of volunteerism in Cohasset.

Station Would be Eyesore

To the Editor:

It seems a handful of village businesses are ramming the idea of a village station without concern for Cohasset.

They are gambling on patronage from train commuters at the risk of ruining the beauty of our village.

The MBTA doesn't go out of business. After spending an additional $3 million of taxpayers' money to blast ledge, chop down trees and destroy a family home, they will build a parking lot the size of Stop & Shop to Papa Gino's and a train platform the size of three football fields.

Cohasset will be left with this monstrous eyesore forever.

Officials, water users plot rate attack strategy

By Andi Weissman
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Lt. Governor Paul Cellucci seems willing to support north Cohasset residents in their fight to overturn a 150-percent rate increase for water services, State Senator Robert Hedlund told protesters Sunday night.

Hedlund joined Cohasset, Hingham and Hull town officials at a meeting with Cellucci's office last Friday to discuss the towns' options in fighting the rate increase, which include taking an eminent domain action against Massachusetts-American Water Company.

"I think it was clear the state would be there to help us and not fight us," Cohasset Selectman Peter Pratt said.

Despite the weekend's nor'easter, nearly 20 water users met to hear the officials' update on their meeting with Cellucci and to discuss further plans to protest the rate increase.

Residents have complained that their quarterly water bills have been more than tripled with charges to help pay for the company's new $40 million treatment plant, yet water quality has not improved. Several residents have come forth with clothing they claim was stained by the water.

Ratepayers from the three towns plan to march on the State House next Tuesday to protest the increase. Cohasset residents Diane Sullivan and Maria Plante are also encouraging water users to protest by refusing to pay their bills.

Hedlund said Cohasset should pursue the option of taking Mass.-American's plant by eminent domain.

"Our options are limited," he said. "I think that will make the most impact."

One of the next steps, Hedlund said, is to determine what, if any, responsibility the attorney general's office has in overseeing water rates. He did not think state statutes allow for the attorney general's involvement, but said he would work to enact legislation that would change that.

In the meantime, Cohasset, Hingham and Hull residents should try to have the rate increase overturned because of the poor water quality, Hedlund said.

"The only thing we have to hang our hat on to ask for a new hearing is the quality of water," he said. "We would like them to address the rates again through that process."

Pratt stressed the towns have to continue to work together to get the rate increase overturned and suggested a tri-town task force to address the issue.

"I haven't seen this level of cooperation among the three towns on anything else," he said.

Hedlund said his office had researched Mass.-American's practices elsewhere.

"They've sought this kind of advantage in other communities," he alleged. "Part of the problem is . . . nobody gave water a second thought in the nation's history. They took it for granted."

He added that he toured the new Mass.-American facility and was told many improvements were unnecessary. One plumber allegedly told him, "They built a Cadillac when they could've gotten by with a Chevrolet."

Plante said north Cohasset residents seem to be receiving widespread support.

"I went to St. Anne's Church (in Hull, Saturday) night," Plante said. "When I was walking in, the priest gave me the thumbs up."

She added that 1,700 people in Hull signed a petition protesting the increase and that Mass.-American has received more than 1,000 phone calls from irate customers.

Sullivan said she was pleased with the response so far from local and state officials.

"It relies on our voices. We have to keep hammering away at our elected officials," she said.

State House Protest is Tuesday

Irate water ratepayers plan a protest at the State House, Tuesday, Oct. 29. They will meet at 9 a.m. in the Nantasket Beach parking lot across the street from Carousel Station flying horses in Hull. Call Maria Plante at 383-9263 or Diane Sullivan at 383-1166 if you can come. Organizers will ask for a small donation to cover the cost of the bus.

Studds to Speak at Brunch

Congressman Gerry E. Studds, who will be resigning his seat in January after 24 years of service to the 10th Congressional District, will be the featured speaker at a brunch celebrating Democratic unity Sunday, Oct. 27, from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. at the Chart House, Cohasset Harbor.

The event is sponsored by Co-Op Eight (the organization of South Shore Democratic Town Committees) and hosted by the Cohasset Democratic Town Committee.

Candidates for federal, state and local offices will be introduced, including William D. Delahunt, Norfolk County District Attorney and candidate for the 10th Congressional District.

Tickets are still available for the brunch, and all interested Democrats are invited to attend. For further information, call Tim White at 740-2899 or 331-6900.

Antique show slated

More than 25 dealers will participate in the 20th Annual Antique Show and Sale sponsored by the Beechwood Congregational Church Nov. 2, from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. at the Deer Hill School on Sohier Street, Cohasset (just before the Music Circus).

The $3 admission, snack bar and bake sale will benefit the church. Ample free parking is available. Please call 383-0070 after 6 p.m. for further information.

Wildlife Center Reschedules Event

New England Wildlife Center has rescheduled its Walkathon and fair for Sunday, Nov. 3.

The fair will begin at noon (admission is free). The Walkathon through Bare Cove Park starts at 1 p.m. There is a $5 registration fee for the walk. The original event, scheduled for Oct. 20, was canceled due to inclement weather. Proceeds will benefit New England Wildlife Center.

Have Your Treasures Appraised

Bring your special treasures to South Shore Art Center, 119 Ripley Road, Friday, Oct. 25, from 3 to 8 p.m. to find out if you own a valuable antique or priceless collectible. On that day, the center will sponsor Skinner Inc. Appraisal Day. Individual attention will be offered in a private setting, and a verbal estimated value will be offered by a Skinner appraiser.

American and European paintings and prints, art glass, antique textiles and needlework, books, toys, dolls, games, china and silver will be appraised.

For fragile items and large furniture, a good-quality photo will be accepted for appraisal purposes. For china or silver services, an example of each piece in a set should be presented, along with a list of the total number of pieces in the set.

For further information, call the SSAC at 383-ARTS.

Free flu Clinic Offered

A free flu clinic, sponsored by the board of health and Social Service League is from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m., Saturday, Oct. 26, at Cohasset Town Hall.

Pneumonia vaccine will be available to individuals age 65 and older and those with chronic heart or lung conditions. The pneumonia vaccine is a one-time vaccination except in rare cases where a physician is required to make an evaluation. The clinic will administer first-time vaccinations only.

The Mass. Department of Public Health is also providing tetanus vaccine and is urging those who have not had tetanus booster in the last 10 years to do so at the flu clinic.

All three of the above vaccines can be administered simultaneously with few or no side effects. There is no charge for any of the immunizations.

For further details, call the League office at 383-0771 or 383-0821 (Monday-Friday, 8:30 a.m. to 3 p.m.)

Appalachia Buses Filling Up

As the Cohasset/Appalachia Service Project begins preparations for their 10th work-camp trip, the deadline for registrations draws near. Thirty-two teenagers (10th- to 12th-graders) have signed up, and there is room for 16 more. Nov. 1 is the date registrations will close. Any registrations postmarked after that date will be placed on a waiting list.

Forms are available in Cohasset High School's main office and at the following Cohasset churches: First Parish, St. Stephen's, St. Anthony's and Second Congregational.

For additional information, call the Rev. Gary Ritts at 383-0345 or 383-1422.

Junior Choir Jubilee Planned

A Junior Choir Jubilee is scheduled for Saturday, Oct. 26, at 4 p.m. at Second Congregational Church.

The event will provide a rare opportunity for music lovers to hear massed junior voices in concert. Participating will be junior choirs from the churches on Cohasset Common, including Second Congregational Church, First Parish (Unitarian-Universalist) and St. Stephen's Episcopal Church.

The event, which is under the direction of Robert Leavitt, with assistance from Carolyn Curtis and Fred Guzausky, will be followed by a cookout for the performers.

Adult Education Opportunity

The Rev. Jenny Rankin, interim minister at First Parish in Cohasset, is offering a course in Spiritual Autobiography which is open to the wider community. This is a unique opportunity to explore and write about one's own spiritual "journey" and find its commonality with others. No writing experience is necessary. Through drawings and other exercises, past experience is evoked and examined. Rules of the class include attendance at all sessions (except for emergency or other unusual exception) and "the right of reticence" (no one is required to reveal any material he or she wishes to remain private). Confidentiality is essential.

The class is not only enriching and illuminating, it is a whole lot of fun! Sessions will be held on from 9 to 10:15 a.m. on six consecutive Sunday mornings starting Nov. 3. Participants will meet in the Unitarian Parish House, 23 N. Main St., which is across the street from the Meeting House on the Common. To register, please call 383-1100. Enrollment is limited.

The course will be repeated on Wednesday afternoons in January 1997, the dates and times to be announced later.

Poetry Reading at Library

Prize-winning poet and author Suzanne E. Berger will read her poetry and excerpts from her book, "Horizontal Woman," Wednesday, Nov. 6, at 7:30 p.m. at Paul Pratt Library, 106 South Main St.

Berger will discuss the story of the pain, rage, absurdity, hilarity, humiliation and gratitude experienced in the years following a "freak" back injury so severe that she was dramatically disabled and flat on her back for seven years.

Berger's uncle, Bruce Berger, also a prize-winning poet, will read some of his poetry. Known more widely for his prose, he has published tow books on the American Southwest as well as a collection of poetry. He has lived in a log cabin in Aspen, Colo., for the last 30 years.

The program is sponsored by Friends of the Cohasset Library. Refreshments will be served. For additional information, call 383-1348.

Plans for Village Fair Underway

The Cohasset Village Fair is coming Dec. 7. The book sale committee of St. Stephen's Church is already working on the annual feature of the fair. They welcome contributions of hardcover and paperback books in good condition, CDs, tapes and videos. Current textbooks and cooking, craft and gardening books are especially needed.

Materials may be left on the stage at Walton Rodgers Hall or inside the Parish Hall door marked "Church offices" Wednesdays and Thursdays from 8 to 11 a.m. and 2 to 4 p.m. For further information, call 383-6840.

Greek Night Set for Nov. 7

The first annual Greek Night, a fun-filled evening to benefit Panagia Greek Orthodox Church, Cohasset, will be held Thursday, Nov. 7, at the Barker Tavern. Community President Michael McNamara said, "A capacity crowd is expected."

The evening will begin at 6:30 p.m., with dinner and dancing at 7:30 p.m. Tickets are $25 per person and may be ordered by calling 925-7033.

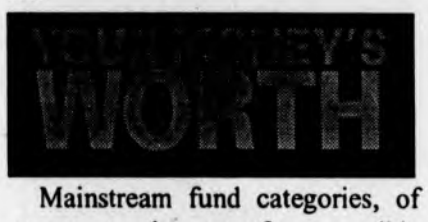
Oddball funds that make sense for your portfolio

By Elizabeth MacDonald
WORTH MAGAZINE

Oddballs may be socially maladroit and sartorially bizarre, but when it comes to mutual funds, weird can be beautiful. So-called oddball funds, whose performance doesn't correlate with U.S. markets and which fit no established category, can boost portfolio returns and lower risks. Professional portfolio managers recommend that investors diversify with one or two, but few do.



Mainstream fund categories, of course, are the core of any sensible portfolio, and no fund, however singular, can insulate an investor from a severe market downturn. But placing up to 30 percent of a portfolio in three to five oddballs will smooth the road to respectable returns. And a mere 10 percent allocation in one or two such funds will improve the 10-year performance of most portfolios.

Oddballs spread risk because they don't closely track the widely watched stock, bond, and foreign market indexes that most funds resemble.

We asked investment advisers to name their favorite oddballs — funds that over the next five years are likely to lower the risk of an investor's portfolio, add some return, or both. Here are their picks.

GAM International

GAM International is almost certain to add a risk-return pattern unlike any other fund because it bears little resemblance even to other foreign-stock funds. The fund's charter could not be much less restrictive, requiring only that at least 65 percent of fund assets be placed in at least three countries. It must mainly buy foreign equities, but it can also move heavily into investment-grade foreign bonds. In fact, in recent quarters, it invested 47 percent of its assets in bonds, 34 percent in cash, just 11 percent in stocks, and the rest in convertibles and other securities.

"The manager can go anywhere in the world looking for opportunities, and he has a track record for wandering into the right places," says Jeffrey Mortimer, vice president of the Cambridge, Mass., investment advisory firm Higgins Associates.

Mortimer calls this fund an "aggressive oddball" and a "sleeper" because, despite its $286.9 million in assets as of the end of last year, "no one has ever heard of it." The fund is just right for a growth investor, says Mortimer, adding that its growing asset base and consistent performance ensure it won't remain anonymous much longer.

Proceed with caution — not all of GAM's big bets have succeeded. After soaring 80 percent in 1993, the fund plunged 10 percent in 1994 before briskly rising 22 percent by year-end 1995.

Cohen & Steers Realty Shares

Among real estate investment managers, the team of Martin Cohen and Robert Steers has a good reputation. But it's not just as a sector play that Cohen & Steers Realty Shares appeals to Eliot Williams of The Williams Investment Counselors, a Windsor, Conn., manager of fund portfolios for wealthy investors.

One caveat: Williams says that an investor should take a pass on this fund if more than 70 percent of his or her net worth is tied up in a residence and/or vacation home. These investors already have enough real estate exposure in their portfolios.

Vanguard Emerging Markets Portfolio

Experienced investors know that merging (also known on the Street as submerging) markets have had a rocky history. Overall, this market climbed 72 percent in 1993, according to Morningstar, but sharply rising interest rates in the United States induced investors to bring their money home. Then came the Mexican peso crisis, followed by the Japanese earthquake.

As liquidity evaporated, emerging-markets funds went on a year-and-a-half-long nose-dive. The second-largest fund in this category, the $1.4 billion Fidelity Emerging Markets Fund, plunged 18 percent in 1994 and was down another 13.8 percent at one point in 1995. The fund is improving, albeit slowly.

Through the rest of the decade, less-developed countries are expected to grow at twice the rate of developed countries, according to Vanguard International Equity Index Fund sales literature. This index fund buys a total of 300 stocks in 12 different LDCs, including Turkey, Mexico, Thailand, and Indonesia.

"The stock markets of these countries over any short period of time are most influenced by flows of funds primarily from outsiders," Williams says. "Over the longer period, the fundamentals will win out, and the investment community will increasingly allocate modest amounts to these markets and lift their prices. For those who can tolerate some risk, it's attractive."

The Vanguard fund only started up in May 1994, so it still needs some time to establish a track record. The 60 basis point expense ratio (a fee for management and operating costs) is less than a third of the average of its peer group, making it the cheapest way to play the emerging markets.

Merger Fund

The only mutual fund investing exclusively in deal stocks — corporate mergers, takeovers, and capital restructurings — Merger Fund would provide a good fit with an income-oriented or growth-stock portfolio.

After the terms of a takeover are announced, the share price of a takeover target often rises, but it usually trades below the price an acquirer proposes to pay, because of the chance the deal will fail. Merger Fund buys the target company before the deal is done. The strategy, known as risk arbitrage, exploits the difference between the deal price and the pre-takeover stock price.

The fund is a true oddball, with virtually no correlation with any of the 13 stock indexes against which Morningstar matches stock funds.

Fidelity Convertible Securities Fund

Convertibles are a hybrid of stocks and bonds. While their prices don't run in the opposite direction of stocks and bonds, they do behave differently and can smooth out a fund portfolio's returns.

Convertible securities return a higher dividend yield than growth stocks. According to Andre Ratkai, a chartered financial analyst in Denver managing about $20 million in fund portfolios, the dividends cushion a portfolio when the stock market drifts downward. "The fat dividend tends to limit downside risk," he says.

Convertibles are generally issued by small- and medium-sized growth companies. Firms of this size favor convertibles — securities that pay regular interest, like bonds — because they offer investors slightly lower interest rates, in return for which the convertibles can be converted into stock.

Also, convertibles are unsecured debts — so they don't have to be paid back if the company happens to go belly-up, nor do they encumber a balance sheet. Investors are usually willing to pay for convertibility because it allows them to profit from a stock run-up, which is not a possibility with straight bonds.

The securities are usually most attractive when medium-sized and small companies are posting the largest share gains on the stock market. And that's where we've been most of the year. Ratkai expects small-cap companies to outperform blue chips over the next five years because they remain cheap by historical standards.

Common Campus Tackles Timely Topics

Social issues is focus for seventh-graders

On a warm, sunny Wednesday last week, the Cohasset Common and surrounding buildings became a campus. The seventh-grade class from Cohasset Junior-Senior High School and about 60 percent of their parents milled about Town Hall, St. Stephen's, First Parish and Second Congregational Church, as well as the common. All day they attended Project Safeguard (Students and Family Education Guards Us Against Reliance on Drugs) workshops.

The nationally recognized program was funded in Cohasset by individual and community donations, grant money and PALS for Wellness (Police Assisting Local Schools, administered by Police Chief Brian Noonan).

Eighteen months of research, preparation and organization by Liz Bates, Maureen Smith and Susan Etkind, who worked in collaboration with high school Health Educator Mike Gill, produced a smoothly orchestrated day of insight and education for participants.

Judging by the written and verbal responses shared at the end of the event, many folks appreciated all the work and would like to see it happen again next year. Many workshops were videotaped and are available for review by contacting Gill at the high school.

Workshops covered topics relevant to raising and being a teenager today in the '90s in Cohasset. Students reported for school as usual and then were bused to the common, where parents (after coffee and registration) met them in Town Hall for a rousing opening session with Ed Gerety. He woke people up with his robust presentation, emphasizing what's right about life and the opportunities that await everyone to connect with each other and achieve goals.

From there, parents, community guests and seventh-graders attended four of nine different workshops. During the course of the day, there were four or five different sessions happening simultaneously.

Jack Agati presented a workshop entitled "Who's Driving The Car?" for parents. He has visited Cohasset before as a guest speaker at an annual PSO meeting, where his topic was birth order. Once again, using warmth, humor, insight and skill, he conveyed some powerful ideas about how we are in danger of raising a "generation of house guests." He emphasized the need to hold children, especially teens, accountable for their behavior, from missing the school bus to putting off mowing the lawn to denting the car.

For students, Gerety continued his electrifying motivational style in his workshop, "Reach for the Stars."

One student reported it was "enthusiastic . . . great, got the info in our heads and made many points." Others said, "Inspiring . . ."; "Awesome. Every story had a point."

Judy Stone's presentation, "Taking Charge of Your TV," offered useful ideas, and some thought it would be helpful for parents of younger children as well.

Mike Weber's "Get an Attitude" addressed ways to make the best of things, no matter what. One parent felt it had "lots of good advice and practical information," and a student reported the program "made great points . . . (and) . . . taught a lot."

"Drug Proof Your Child" by Dick Armour gave participants "lots to think about, good information." Participants expressed a wish that this, and many other sessions, could go on longer.

Rahn Flemming's "Better Too Soon Than Too Late" took parents and kids face-to-face with the realities of unwanted sexual experiences and the enormously common presence of alcohol in these situations. Attitudes and stereotypical thinking were explored, and in a short time, he provoked much soul-searching in the group about these difficult issues.

Assistant District Attorney Frank Gaziano and Judge Robert Murray delivered the sobering facts about drugs, alcohol and related criminal charges that can extinguish the dreams and future plans of young people.

Marialana Cook told a moving, inspiring and cautionary tale about her struggle with and triumph over alcoholism. One student said, "She had a lot of pride in herself and really put her heart into her story. Very sad!"

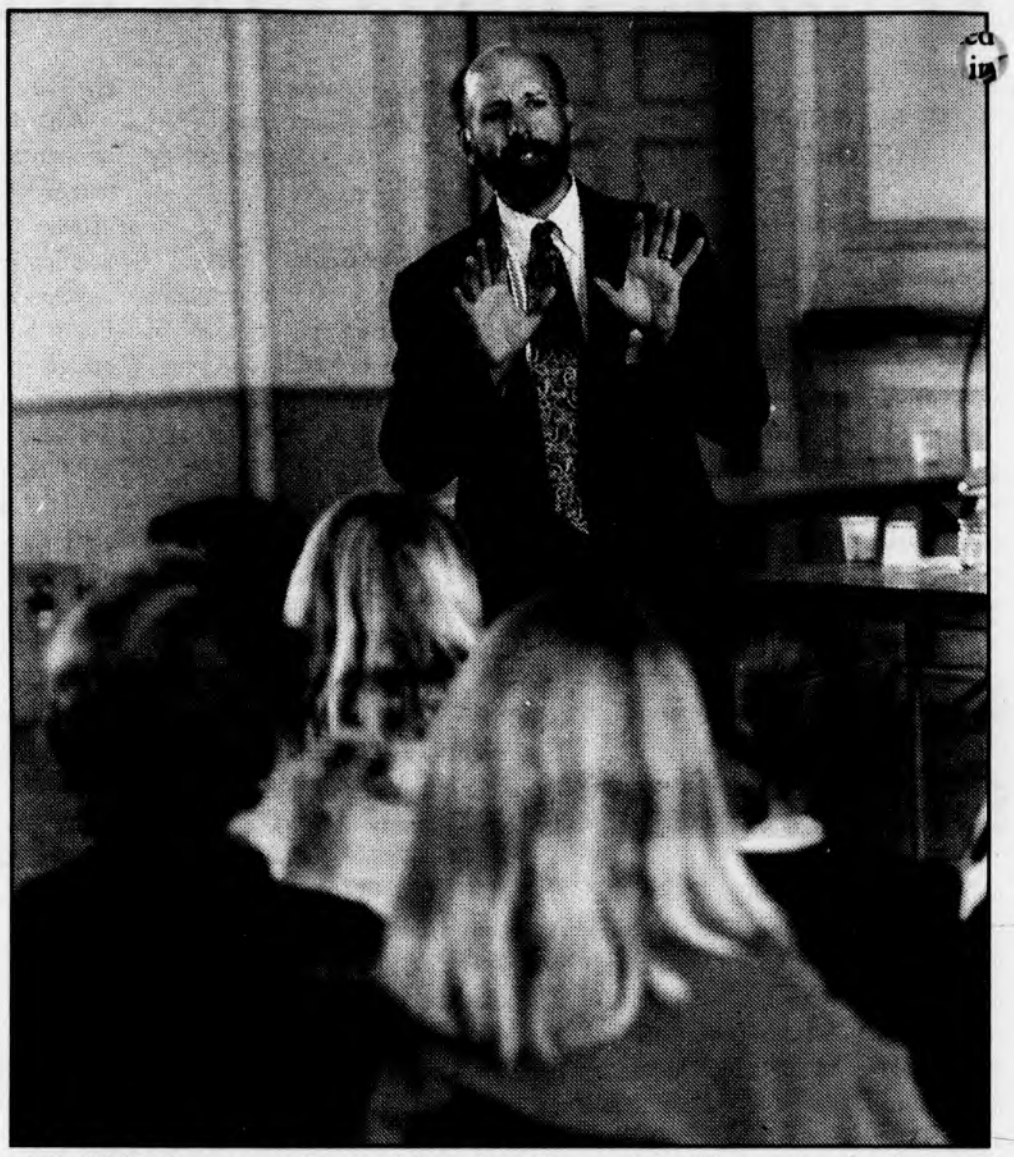
A hands-down favorite of the day was Danny Duval, who participants said was "incredible" and "awesome." Pacing the floor of St. Stephen's Walton Rogers Hall before a large and riveted crowd, Duval told the story of his high school athletic success — three-time All State football, two-time All State basketball, High School All American, voted "most popular," "best athlete" and "most likely to succeed" — and his utter life a failure, as, addicted to cocaine and alcohol, he abused his family's love, failed at jobs, conned friends and became a street person without friends, family or feelings.

During his presentation, Duval cried, and the audience cried; Duval smiled and the audience smiled. One student said, "Best thing I've ever heard! He was so moving and I will never forget it in all my life." Now in recovery, married and a high school coach, Duval travels around to tell his story to help kids avoid the brutal path he took, which began with drinking beer to celebrate high school sports victories.

As participants walked from building to building across the "campus," they bubbled over with reflections on the speakers they had heard. Lunch was served at Second Congregational Church, complete with a birthday cake for two seventh-grade boys who turned 13. A strong sense of community prevailed.

The day, which progressed flawlessly thanks to the tireless preparation and terrific organization, ended with Rahn Flemming's engaging and thoughtful comments on this phase of parents' and students' lives.

"Go easy on your folks, guys. They do what they do out of love," he told the students.



Mike Weber lectures on 'Get and Attitude' telling students 'You can't control what happens to you but you can control how you react' at the Campus on the Common last week.

Deer Hill School sixth-graders hold a car wash to raise money for their three-day stay at Camp Bournedale.

Students Raise Funds for Camp

In November, sixth-graders at Deer Hill School will spend three days and two nights at Camp Bournedale in Plymouth. While at the camp, students will benefit from a program offering a broad range of classes focusing on the environment and the natural sciences.

Various fund-raising activities are being held by students to help defray the cost of the program. Activities have included a car wash at Deer Hill School and a spaghetti dinner in the Cohasset High School cafeteria.

More fund-raising activities are planned to help fund the cost of the trip, and the support of the community is appreciated by the sixth-graders.

METCO Dinner is Nov. 3

The Cohasset METCO Committee will host its annual fall dinner from 3 to 6 p.m., Sunday, Nov. 3 at the Cohasset High School cafeteria. The annual Sunday dinner is given by the Cohasset METCO host families for Cohasset's METCO students and their Boston families. This year's dinner will feature a Southern style menu of baked ham, macaroni & cheese and sweet potato pie. All METCO families, Cohasset host families and anyone else from the community who would like to attend are welcomed guests at this event.

Please call PSO METCO reps. Connie Afshar (383-6006) or Jean Hajjar (383-9917) if you can attend or if you would like to know more about the METCO program.

School Committee Meetings to be Shown Live on Cable

By Andi Weissman
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

School Committee meetings will be broadcast on local access cable television in an effort to broaden communications with the public, the committee decided last Thursday.

In a pilot program tentatively slated to begin Nov. 2, Cohasset residents will have the option of watching the meetings from their homes. Viewers will be asked to call a number posted on the screen so the committee can gauge the success of the program.

The pilot program is a part of the School Committee's effort to inform the public about its activities.

School Superintendent Stephen Hart said nearby communities that broadcast school committee meetings on local access cable television have had a generally positive response.

However, comments tended to be less candid with the cameras turned on, he said.

"That may decrease as people become more used to having cameras," Hart said.

Committee member Jim Kirk proposed a pilot program in which a number would be posted at the bottom of the television screen. Viewers would be asked to call the number and answer a few questions about their interest in school committee activities.

He suggested the pilot take place before the budget process begins so viewers would be able to see some "regular" meetings, with issues ranging from approving field trips to discussing capital expenditures.

Committee member Joanne Chittick questioned whether the program would actually decrease communications.

The pilot program is a part of the School Committee's effort to inform the public about its activities.

"I think I would prefer to have people interested in watching or interacting with the School Committee to be here to talk to us personally," Chittick said.

One-third of the citizens attending the meeting said they would have stayed home and watched the cable broadcast if it were offered.

PSO President Kathy Ofsthun joked that the committee would be the loser when going up against Thursday night sitcoms.

"Against 'Seinfeld'? Not a chance," she said.

Kirk also said public questions and comments are starting to come in via drop boxes stationed in each of the Cohasset schools, and the communication subcommittee is starting to group those remarks together. The first two issues the subcommittee plans to address are communications and school security; future issues will include the reasoning behind the decision to form a middle school.

Hart suggested placing another drop box in the public library in order to broaden the opportunities for public comment.

In other business, the committee approved a three-day field trip to Camp Bournedale for sixth-graders. Each student will take four classes in subjects such as marine biology and animal adaptations. They will also take "Adventure Challenge," a course requiring teamwork to solve physical challenges, said Betty Cisneros, an English teacher at Deer Hill.

The cost is $160 per child, and students are participating in fund raisers to offset the cost, she added.

More male chaperones are needed for the excursion.

Selectmen Approve School Bus Purchase

By Charlene Vandini
COHASSET MARINER

Selectmen voted unanimously Tuesday to recommend the purchase of two new school buses, at an estimated cost of $89,000.

School Supt. Stephen Hart said buying the buses achieves an economy in the long range.

Leasing buses would cost $16,000 more than purchasing them; financing the purchase over five years is the most expensive option. The new buses will replace two that were purchased in 1986.

"It's a question of how much money you have available and how you want to spend it," he said.

The town-operated bus service costs approximately $175,000 per year, including salaries and benefits for drivers, fuel, maintenance, insurance, and an 8-year bus replacement cycle.

Hart provided selectmen with a comparative cost analysis that showed North River Transportation would cost the school department $180,245 per year and Ryder School Transportation would charge $192,360 for the same service now provided by the school department.

Selectman Ronnie McMorris said parents of school children are pleased with the school bus service, and there is a value to providing employment and health insurance benefits to drivers who are Cohasset residents.

Having control over the buses is also valuable, said selectman Michael Sullivan.

But Selectman Peter Pratt said the town has been "victimized by a state agency" referring to the state Registry of Motor Vehicles which called the entire school bus fleet unsafe. He added that the issue of purchasing school buses could be "in transition." While parents trust the bus drivers, he said, special services could be contracted over time, and there are ways to protect the work force.

Cohasset students spent a week in September riding leased buses when Registry officials said all six buses failed inspections for what town officials called minor problems.

At that time, Hart said buses failed the inspection because they did not say "owned and operated by Cohasset" and tape used to repair torn seats was not up to flammability standards.

Following the failed inspections, Hart said some of the Registry's listed violations as "lies."

But Registry officials said the problems were serious, and Cohasset had been warned about poor maintenance in the past. Three buses failed inspection in the spring: one due to improper railings and two others for lack of "body fluid kits" containing mask, gloves, and brush, to clean up if a child vomits.

Hart said the fleet of only six buses does not justify hiring a mechanic for maintenance of them. He noted that the town could consider hiring a mechanic to work on other town vehicles, with the cost shared between departments.

It's Now or Never for Field Hockey

Lady Skippers Must Avoid Losses

By Joe Reardon
COHASSET MARINER

Cohasset put thoughts of a possible field hockey tourney invitation in head coach Debby Bostwick's head quite a while ago. Now it's time for the Lady Skippers to turn their game to the boiling point in a last-ditch effort to qualify for the South Sectional competition.

"I didn't predict we'd make the tournament this year," Bostwick said, "but they spoiled me by winning three games early in the season."

Sporting a 4-6-3 record as of Wednesday morning, Cohasset was scheduled to play Norwell at home that afternoon with a game slated for today against Marshfield and Hull on Saturday or Sunday.

Getting into the tourney will be tough for the Lady Skippers. They can't afford to lose another game, and, if they beat Norwell and Marshfield, they have to salvage a tie against league champion Hull.

Cohasset, however, is much improved over last year when the team finished last in the South Shore League. The Lady Skippers are currently in fourth place and have played every team tough this season.

Cohasset put together one of its finest games of the fall in a heartbreaking 1-0 loss last Friday at Hanover. Playing solid defense for the majority of the game, the Lady Indians took advantage of one defensive lapse and it proved to be all they would need in the end.

With 15 seconds remaining in the first half, a Cohasset player cleared the ball in front of the Lady Skippers' net instead of up the side. The ball was intercepted by a Hanover forward and she proceeded to hit the post with her shot and the ball trickled across the goal line.

"It was an absolute killer," Bostwick said simply of the play.

Cohasset managed three breakaways in the opening half, but the Hanover goaltender came up with three huge saves to frustrate the Lady Skippers' offense.

Bostwick made an adjustment in the second half where she opened a hole in the Cohasset defense and put an extra

Kelley's Work Honored by YMCA

By Joe Reardon
COHASSET MARINER

Cohasset's William Kelley's 30-year involvement with the YMCA has not gone unnoticed.

The South Shore YMCA dedicated its outdoor track to Kelley on Oct. 17 in appreciation of the work he has done as a director and committee chairperson.

Kelley still has the focus of the Y's goals firmly implanted and he continues to do his part in fufilling the facility's goals.

The track is just a part of the renovations being worked on at the Quincy location on Coddington Street. Construction includes new athletic fields, a restructured parking lot, basketball court, a new swimming pool and the redesigned accessiblity of the back entrance and locker rooms. Funding for the work is being provided through a $2.5 million Capital Campaign, for which Kelley is a committee member.

South Shore YMCA President Ralph Yohe commended Kelley for what he has meant to the Y over the years.

"It is not every day that we can honor a plerson like this," said Yohe, "who has given freely of his time and expertise in many capacities. Every foot that steps onto this track represents one step closer to achieving our Capital Campaign fund-raising goal, and the strides Bill Kelley has enabled us to achieve to date."

Kelley has been a board director since the late '60s. He is also the chair of the finance committee and planned giving committee. Kelley serves as the liaison for the investment committe and is a member of the executive and insurance committees.

"I am honored to be here today to receive this recognition," Kelley said. "I have a high level of interest in this YMCA, and in its success. I would like to take this opportunity to thank those who have madea a contribution to the Y's capital fund drive and acknowledge my friends and former business associates."

William Kelley (Left) and Ralph Yohe stand behind the stone with the dedication of the South Shore YMCA's Track etched into it.

Skippers Continue Gridiron Dry Spell

The Cohasset High varsity football team continues to struggle in its first season back in the South Shore League after a successful run of six years in the Independent League.

The Skippers dropped to 0-5 on the season after dropping a 50-18 decision to Carver, last Friday night.

Cohasset managed to stay close to the 3-2-1 Crusaders through the first quarter, trailing by just two points, 14-12. The Skippers took the early lead on Jamie DeMichele's 5-yard touchdown run. Cohasset had to settle for the six points, however, when the PAT was no good.

Carver went up 14-6 on consecutive touchdowns. Russ Lyons broke through the Cohasset defense and returned the kickoff 89 yards and added the two points when he went into the end zone on the conversion run. John Densmore romped 24 yards for the Crusaders' second TD of the quarter, but Cohasset's defense stopped the pass attempt on the conversion.

The Skippers' Pat Hurley scored the squad's second TD of the game on his 19-yard run.

Carver pulled away for good by going on a 28-0 run over the next two quarters and scoring 14 more in the final quarter. Cohasset managed just six more points during the fourth quarter.

10th River Race Oct. 26

The 10th Head Of The Weir River Race will be held Saturday, Oct. 26, beginning at noon at West Corner, at the Hingham-Hull-Cohasset line.

The race will finish at 1 p.m. at the Hull Lifesaving Museum Boathouse, Pemberton Point, Hull. For more information, call Ed McCabe, Hull Lifesaving Museum Maritime Program Director at 925-5433 (w), 924-4826 (h).

The Head of the Weir River Race is one of the Hull Lifesaving Museum's hallmark events. Beginning at the Hingham-Hull-Cohasset line at West Corner, and following the river along World's End in its full autumn glory, the race spills out into the open water of Hingham Bay for an all-out sprint from Bumpkin Island to the HLMI Boathouse at Pemberton Point. A wide range of boats typically show for this highly contested five-miler, including coxed youth and adult gigs, single and double dories, Irish curraghs, ocean kayaks and Alden ocean shells. The best views of the race are at the starting line, from the bridge on George Washington Boulevard (five minutes after the race start), or the boathouse. Registration for the race will begin at 10 a.m. behind the Hull Public Works building.

forward up top. It proved to make a difference as the Lady Skippers' offense became more consistent in its scoring attempts, coming up with a number of chances. Cohasset, however, could not finish the plays, despite the intense pressure it put on the Hanover defense.

"The ball could not get in," Bostwick said. "We were playing for a tie at that point. It just wouldn't go in. I'm happy with how we played. I can't remember the last time we played Hanover to a 1-0 loss."

Bostwick was especially pleased by the fact that the Cohasset players are getting more respect around the league. Three Lady Skippers, fullback Emily Collins, center-midfielder Jo Hurley and inner Lauren Dooley were all named to the SSL All-Star team. The game is scheduled for 4 p.m. on Saturday in Duxbury. That date, however, is tentative because of Cohasset's game against Hull.

Bostwick also credited first-year varsity player Jill Magner, who cheered the team on, despite the face she wasn't feeling good and just as easily could have taken an afternoon off.

Bostwick said Magner will figure prominently in the team's future plans.

"She's been a great support," she said. "Jill's a go-getter, who's going to pick up the slack next year."

But for now, Bostwick is concentrating on the present, and doing the best job as a coach as she knows how to help her team lengthen its season for as long as possible.

Parking Restrictions Enforced

Saturday, Nov. 2, the Beechwood Congregational Church will hold its annual Antique Show at the Deer Hill School. It is imperative that parents, parking for soccer games, leave the fire lane in front of Deer Hill School and the side gate area open and free of vehicles.

Ample parking exists behind Deer Hill School, with only a short walk to the field, and parents are asked to utilize that parking area.

South Shore Community Center

The South Shore Community Center is offering Gymnastics Girls' Night Out, for girls ages 8 to 12, Friday, Nov. 8, from 6:15 to 8:15 p.m. The girls will enjoy making their pizza, participating in gymnastics, obstacle courses, bowling, contest and prizes. Space is limited.

Gymnastics Session II begins Dec. 3, 4, 5 and 6 and classes run for 11 weeks. The cost is $74.25 for members and $84.25 for non-members. Monday classes start Dec. 9 and run for nine weeks. The cost is $60.75 for members, $70.25 for non-members. Gymnastics is on-going throughout the year.

There are still a few openings in the Gymnastics Session I, Tuesday, 3:15 p.m., Beginner Girls' Class, ages 5-7; and the Wednesday, 6 p.m., Beginner/Intermediate Girls' Class, Age 9-11. Please call Ruthann Ardizzoni at 383-0088 for more information.

Special Olympics Seeks Volunteers

(At high tide, the tidal gates are closed to keep the ocean out — at low tide the gates are open permitting James Brook to drain out.)

Officials say the pumping at high tide drained water without having to wait for low tide when the Brook would drain naturally. They planned to keep the pump going during several tide cycles Wednesday to drain the James Brook basin down further in preparation for more wet weather forecasted later this week.

The mail could not be delivered Monday because the post office parking lot where the mail trucks were parked was completely submerged. Mail was brought to Cohasset from Hingham and ferried to the Ripley Road post office by boat. Postmaster Rick Jope said people who made it to the post office were able to pick up their mail.

On Tuesday, he said the Brockton office sent replacement trucks to Cohasset and the mail went out on schedule. Several Cohasset trucks had to be sidelined and shipped out for repair due to water in the transmission and gas tanks, he said.

The highway department started cleaning storm drains on Saturday in anticipation of the storm, Pratt said.

Working with Hull, the town was able to get the gates at the Weir River opened when the tide permitted which alleviated a tense situation in the Straits Pond area, he said.

Ironically, selectmen received a report last week on the James Brook tidal gates from town engineers who also looked at related drainage issues.

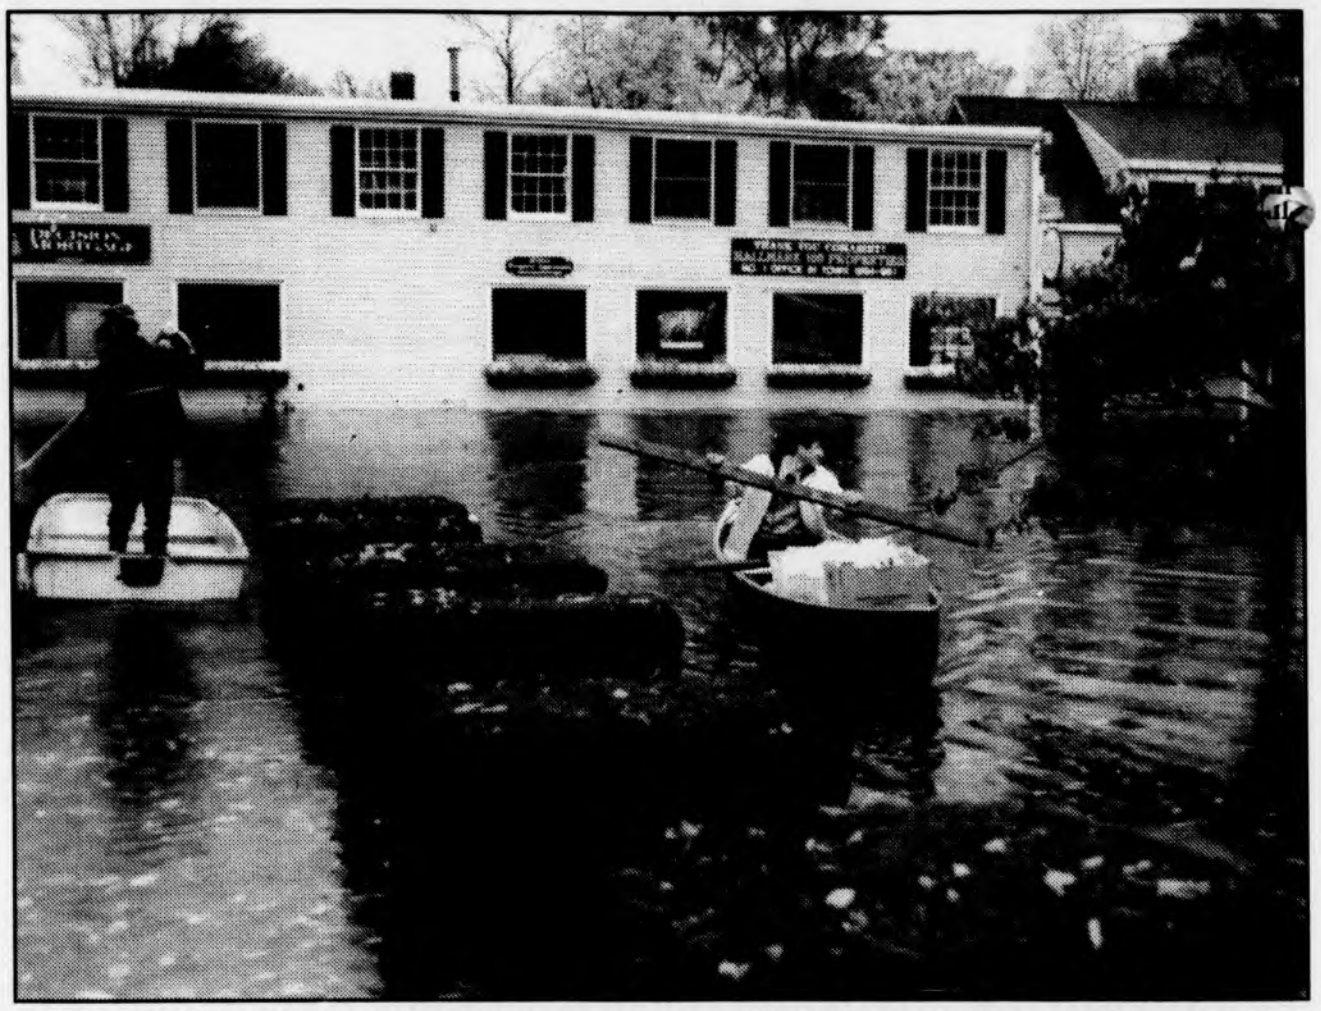
Pratt said the report was invaluable during the crisis because officials were able to contact head engineer Domenic Tutela who could advise them on whether it was worthwhile to proceed with the pumping plan at the Cove.

Pratt also explained that Cohasset's disaster may have a silver lining because of the severity of the situation, the town may qualify for grant help in conducting a full-blown engineering study on drainage — something he said is critical so a comprehensive plan to correct problems and protect property and public health can be implemented.

Selectmen Chairman Brown had nothing but praise for the way town departments pulled together during the crisis.

"It was a great effort," he said. Brown singled out Litchfield for particular praise.

"Harold's crew did a heck of a job all week," he said.



At left, letter carrier Henry Rattenbury paddles away from the post office as Bill Sestito, who was helping out at Carousel Antiques, paddles in with more mail.

Large Voter Turnout Predicted

If Cohasseters stay true to form then upwards of 87 percent of the town's 5,351 registered voters will make a trip to the polls on Tuesday.

Town Clerk Marion Douglas said presidential elections are always a big draw. In 1992, when then Arkansas Governor Bill Clinton challenged incumbent President George Bush, 87.2 percent of the town's voters cast ballots.

The polls will be open from 7 a.m. to 8 p.m., Nov. 5 at Town Hall.

Absentee voting can take place

Marijuana, a Societal Problem: Health Educator Says

Peer Counselors Defend Actions

By Mary Ford
COHASSET MARINER

According to a group of high school upperclassmen serving as "peer counselors", several ninth-graders brought marijuana to a school-sponsored camp on Cape Cod in September.

The peer counselors, confronted the students involved, confiscated the drug and flushed it down the toilet. They did not immediately tell teachers, parents or school administrators and will not reveal the names of the freshmen involved.

The incident became public last week when two letters detailing the incident — one signed by the peer counselors and the other from a school counselor, peer counselor advisor and two teachers — went home to parents of ninth graders.

School officials were not aware of the incident until several weeks after it occurred.

"It's a community problem, a cultural problem—I'd rather not point fingers but sit down together to see what we can do as a community, schools and family."
-Mike Gill
Health Educator

Principal Curtis Collins refused to comment to the Mariner except to say he was alerted by a parent. Guidance counselor Mary Babaian, who signed one of the letters, would not comment. They would also not say how the school was handling the matter.

The camp is an annual activity intended to help ninth-graders come together before the school year gets fully underway.

Cohasset High School Health Education coordinator Mike Gill says the incident is disappointing but not surprising.

"I find it disappointing that kids chose a school activity to try and use an illegal substance," Gill said Monday.

But Gill conceded that Cohasset kids are no different than their counterparts across the country.

"It's a community problem, a cultural problem — I'd rather not point fingers but sit down together to see what we can do as a community, schools and family."

Gill referred to a student survey conducted last February and subsequent parent forum in June to discuss the results.

The anonymous survey showed that 39 percent of Cohasset students in grade seven through 12 had tried marijuana during the previous 30 days as compared with about 32 percent in the state. Fifty-five percent said they had used marijuana compared with about 48 percent in the state.

Ratepayers March on Beacon Hill

Anger About Water Bills Boils Over

By Leslie Miller
COHASSET MARINER

BOSTON—A hundred angry residents from Cohasset, Hingham and Hull demonstrated in front of the Statehouse Tuesday to protest their 155 percent water rate hike, then marched to Gov. William Weld's office to lay the blame at his feet.

Arriving at the Statehouse steps, the demonstrators held homemade signs and listened to speeches by Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray, R-Cohasset, Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth and Leonard Hersch of Hull, an organizer of the event.

Signs and speakers targeted Massachusetts-American Water Company, which won the rate hike from the Department of Public Utilities early this year to help pay for the company's new $40 million treatment plant in Hingham.

About 340 homes in the north section of Cohasset are served by Mass.-American, a private company.

The signs read, "Decent water, decent rates," "Weld, where were you?" and "New Hingham water rates

Cohasset's Week

New School Buses Okayed

Town meeting unanimously approved $90,000 for the purchase of two new school buses.

The school department will trade-in two 1986 model buses and apply funds received toward the new buses.

Chairman Ralph Kidder said the school department is beginning a long-range replacement program, but will continue to investigate "outsourcing" transportation to determine if it is more economical to contract with a bus company.

Jerusalem Road resident Leonora Jenkins asked the school department to look into the purchase of "transit-style" buses which provide better visibility from the driver's seat of children walking in front of the bus.

She cited statistics from around of the country where children have been killed or injured because the bus drivers could not see them when they walked in front of the bus.

In addition, these "transit-style" buses can carry more children, which may be necessary as the Cohasset school population increases.

School Supt. Stephen Hart replied that buying different types of buses may pose problems with maintenance by mixing the models in the bus fleet, but the department will look into these buses for future purchases.

In September, the Registry of Motor Vehicles said all six Cohasset school buses failed inspection, and criticized the town for failing to take bus safety seriously.

School officials, in turn, said the the Registry failed the buses for minor reasons that did not jeopardize the safety of the children riding the buses.

Face-lift for CHS Auditorium, Gym

The high school auditorium will get a face-lift with $130,000 approved for a remodeling project.

School committee chairman Ralph Kidder said the auditorium has had no "serious renovations" in more than 10 years. Article 27 provides funds for a total renovation, including new upholstery for the chairs and extensive acoustical improvements.

The article had the support of the advisory committee, capital budget committee, and the selectmen.

"Anything to get rid of this awful color we have here now," said Selectmen Chairman Merle Brown said in recommending the expenditure. He added that the renovations have "been deferred long enough."

But Jerusalem Road resident Leonora Jenkins noted that the town had spent $25,000 last year for a professional evaluation of all buildings, and the town should apply for a state grant to help pay for major renovations, rather than "Band-aid repairs."

Kidder said the high school auditorium does not qualify for a state grant because it must be tied anticipated increases in the school population.

In addition to the auditorium remodelling, $10,000 was approved to replace the sound system in the high school gymnasium.

Continuing History of the Town

Town meeting approved $5,000 for a new committee that will update the town's history to cover the second half of the twentieth century.

Article 25 authorized the selectmen to appoint the new 20-person committee to write volume 3, "dedicated to the memory of those persons of Cohasset who, in the Korean and Vietnam Wars, gave their lives so that our country and the world might have another chance to live in peace and freedom."

The article had the support of the advisory committee and selectmen.

Wigmore Pierson of the historical commission said the $5,000 represents "seed money" that may not be needed.

He also accepted the offer of school committee chairman Ralph Kidder to involve students and teachers in the project.

Selectman Peter Pratt, who noted that his father, Bertram Pratt wrote volume 2, said there are momentous events to record in the last half of the century.

Betterments Can Be Deferred

Town meeting adopted a provision of a state law to allow betterment assessments, as well as real estate taxes, to be deferred.

Under article 31, any person who now qualifies for a tax deferment can also have any assessed betterments similarly deferred.

Town counsel Paul DeRensis explained that no tax revenues are lost, but are paid at the time the property is sold. Both types of deferments apply to elderly residents, allowing the payments, plus interest, to be made when their homes are sold by their estates.

Water Department Repairs

The water department's request for $87,000 to replace equipment was unanimously granted by town meeting Tuesday.

Of this amount, $32,000 will come from the water department's maturing debt, with the balance of $55,000 coming from water department revenue.

In all cases, the equipment was originally installed 18 years ago.

The department will replace wall heaters in plant #3, chlorinators, three doors and windows at the treatment plant, and an 11-year-old utility truck.

A Societal Problem

In their letter to ninth-grade parents, peer counselors said they did the right thing by disposing of the marijuana and not telling.

"First, the peer counselors confronted the students and stressed the fact this behavior was completely unacceptable," they wrote, explaining that they proceeded to flush it down the toilet.

"As juniors and seniors, we felt this was the best way to deal with the situations without breaking the trust between ninth-graders and ourselves."

The counselors' letter said the school has confronted the issue with the entire ninth-grade class as well as faculty advisors and peer counselors to discuss what happened. They asked for parents' assistance "in making this process a learning experience for your son or daughter."

According to the school code of conduct, principals can expel students involved in drug incidents.

Peer Counselor Alia Afshar, who signed her group's letter but did not attend the camp, defended her counterparts' actions.

"The whole point is trust," she said. "They (underclassmen) look up to us. If we had turned them in that would have defeated the whole purpose."

She stressed that the peer counselors told the ninth-graders what they did was wrong.

"They felt stupid after they did it," she said.

Afshar said as peer counselors they usually work in small groups with seventh- and eighth- graders conducting activities that help them adjust to school.

She said they've never been trained to deal with the possibility of finding drugs.

"Maybe they should have notified teachers right away," she said about the incident at the camp. "But we've never been prepared to deal with this issue."

Sidewalk Repair Money Approved

Monday's Special Town Meeting appropriated $27,812 to repair sidewalks along North and South Main streets and the town common.

The money represents the town's share of the project which is subsidized by the state.

Private Ways By-Law Adopted

Monday's Special Town Meeting approved a by-law change that will continue the town's present ability to maintain private ways.

Selectman Ronnie McMorris explained that the by-law does not change what the town is currently doing but puts the town in conformance with the state statute on private ways.

She said the by-law provides selectmen maximum flexibility in maintaining private ways which make up 1/3 of the town's roads.

The Special Town Meeting also appropriated $50,000 to repair private ways.

Tidal Gates to be Fixed

Voters approved spending $26,000 to repair the James Brook tidal Gates, the grate leading into the culvert, and to construct a riprap retaining wall on a portion of the brook to the rear of Legion hall.

Repairs are needed to help alleviate periodic flooding in the area.

"We appreciated the down payment to a permanent solution to the James Brook problem," said Ralph Kidder of Cushing Road. Last week's record rainfall caused the worst flooding in memory in neighborhoods along James Brook.

Community Center

A wide variety of classes and activities is being offered at South Shore Community Center.

"Skins and Scales" will be presented by Jennifer and Leo Spinners Monday, Nov. 11, from 11 a.m. to noon in the center's gym. The event will provide an educational 60-minute presentation of reptiles and amphibians and an unusual exhibit of live animals from around the world. Admission is $5 at the door.

Classes include Gym Dandy; Girls Nite Out, Nov. 8, 6:15 to 8:15 p.m. (ages 8-12, $15); gymnastics; pediatric CPR, Tuesdays, Nov. 12 and 19, from 7 to 10:30 p.m. ($35/members, $45/non-members); step aerobics; cake decorating Mondays, Nov. 4, 18 and 25, 7 to 9 p.m. ($45/M, $55/NM); Soup for Starters with Anna Abbruzzese, Tuesdays Nov. 5 and 12, 6:45 to 8:45 p.m. ($15 per class, $24 for both); Computer Kids, Wednesdays, 3:15 to 4 p.m., for ages 3-5; and Bowling & Computers, Tuesdays, 3:15 to 4:45 p.m. for ages 6-9 (10 weeks, $120/M, $130/NM).

"HI, NEIGHBOR. HAVE YOU TRIED MY CHEESE?"

Cabot cheddar cheese, butter and other dairy foods are offered with pride by your nearby dairy farmers. The same farmers who, together, own the Cabot Creamery.

And what that means is, every time you buy a Cabot product, you're helping to support 192 family farms near you in Massachusetts and throughout the Northeast. You're helping to preserve a way of life that's been important here for generations. And you're getting some of the freshest, purest, best-tasting dairy products made anywhere.

Since 1919, your nearby farmers have been working this land, tending the herds and gathering their milk. And as long as you keep buying, sharing and enjoying Cabot products, they'll keep right on doing it.

Town Meeting Business Noted

By unanimous vote, town meeting also:

• transfer $100,000 from free cash to the stabilization fund. The balance in this account is now $300,000, and can be removed from the fund only with a two-thirds vote of a future town meeting. Selectman Nan Roth called the fund "a savings account" for the town which will improve Cohasset's bond ratings.

• paid bills from the previous fiscal year, totalling $1,560, including $999 from former town counsel Richard Henderson and $493 from Savin Corp.

• approved $49,600 to install air conditioning at the Paul Pratt Library. Library trustee Patience Towle this will not only make the building more comfortable for the staff and patrons, but will also preserve the valuable books there.

• approved $6,000 to purchase six new portable radios for the Cohasset fire department. Selectman Ronnie McMorris offered a minority recommendation from the board, saying the town should spend $12,000 for 12 new radios, as had originally been requested. "I hope we haven't compromised safety for $6,000," she said.

• the fire department was granted its request for $6,000 to repair the pump control panel on Engine 2. Chief Roger Lincoln said water has seeped into the panel which monitors the safe operation of the apparatus.

• voted $7,300 towards the purchase of a 10-passenger, handicapped accessible van, and $2,700 for a personal computer for the council on elder affairs. The council will receive $40,000 in a grant to cover the balance of the cost of the van which is equipped with a wheelchair lift, to comply with disability requirements.

Village Station Loses in Monday's Straw Poll

By Mary Ford
COHASSET MARINER

The Route 3A train station came out on top in Monday's "straw poll" on where the town's Greenbush stop should be.

Selectmen said Tuesday the poll results will carry some weight but they still need to examine traffic and pollution issues before making a final decision.

Monday's vote was 311 in favor of the Route 3A site and 112 for the village station.

"We're going to make a decision soon," said Selectmen Chairman Merle Brown, noting that the MBTA needs an answer.

Brown said personally he prefers the 3A site which he thinks would be less disruptive.

Selectman Michael Sullivan said the vote would be a point of reference but the board still needed to "research on potential traffic impact and health issues."

He said opponents to the village station worked hard to get out the vote and did what they intended to do.

"I'm not sure the proponents are as energized about the situation."

Sullivan said in the end, selectmen must weigh all the issues and do what's best for the town.

Chamber of Commerce vice president Dean Rizzo, who sits on the train Mitigation Committee, said the vote was substantial enough to "weigh in on the decision process."

He said the Mitigation Committee will meet with selectmen on Nov. 12 to discuss the station issue.

Voters cast their ballots a[illegible] signing in at Monday's Spe[illegible] Town Meeting. While 423 citizens took part in the straw poll — about 177 made the trip out just to vote on the train and did not stay for the special town meeting.

Opponents Object to Mitigation Process

By Andi Weismann
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Opponents of a Cohasset Village train stop are not concerned only about safety, traffic and health questions — they claim citizens lacked knowledge about the village station and its Route 3A alternative necessary to have cast an informed vote in a straw poll taken at Monday's Special Town Meeting.

At a public forum held last Wednesday to answer questions about the two station alternatives, several citizens attacked the MBTA Mitigation Committee and the mitigation process, saying townspeople had not been provided with enough information on either the stations or public meetings to discuss the alternatives.

Marty Corey of Pleasant Street sparked the issue when he complained of a lack of publicity about meetings. "Where are the TVs?" he asked.

Corey also contended the entire mitigation process is flawed, citing a number of problems, including a low response to a survey on the station issue that ran in the Mariner and the fact that two citizens' forums were held during the summer when many people travel.

Dean Rizzo, chair of the Mitigation Committee, acknowledged the committee had been disappointed by the turnout at the forums, which contributed to the committee's decision to hold another informational meeting.

"This is not a fight. We are not fighting you, just looking for a recommendation," Rizzo said.

He also said that although only 100 people responded to the Mariner survey, it was a start.

Linda Keller, Christian Road, complained that in the past when the town was involved in a major project, she was notified by mail.

"I was waiting for just such a letter this time," she said. "That letter didn't come."

A number of residents asked why meetings were not broadcast on local access cable television so people who could not attend the meetings could still learn what was happening.

Cassandra Wheeler, James Lane, suggested townspeople had been too involved in the debate over the new elementary school to learn about the station alternatives.

"Just because people have chosen not to come doesn't mean people don't have to hear about it," she said.

How Times Have Changed

▶ Traditionally , drivers have been urged to grip the steering wheels of their cars at the "ten" and "two" positions, with the numbers referring to the spots they occupy on the face of a clock. However, one look at today's steering wheels reveals that this hand positioning is no longer appropriate. Over the past 50 years or so, the average height of the driver's seat has dropped fifteen to nineteen inches, while the steering wheel has been lowered twelve to fourteen inches. The cutouts to either side of the hub of the steering wheel now indicate that the left hand should be positioned between 7 and 9 o'clock, while the right hand should be placed between 3 and 5. This lowered positioning is easier on the shoulders and helps reduce fatigue. The revised grip also keeps the hands away from the center of the wheel so they will not be thrust into the face by airbag deployment.

▶ Whenever you drive, you are more apt to make good decisions if you are relaxed. At SOUTH SHORE CHEVROLET-GEO, we are experts at swift diagnosis and accurate repair. Finding solutions you can count on is what we do best. Experi follow-up is our commitment to you.

Mitigation Process

Corey said citizens were "dealing at a significant disadvantage" when much of the Mitigation Committee's information was provided by the MBTA.

"It appears to me you're in a position to mitigate something with the MBTA when in fact you are relying on the MBTA for studies," Corey said. "You're dealing with people with a goal here. When you rely on people whose agenda is much different than our own, that's when I have a problem with the process." He also accused the Mitigation Committee of calling the meeting "to posture."

Town officials became incensed when Corey admitted he didn't start to pay attention to the process until recently. Meetings on the topic were well-publicized, they said.

"Don't come to us here (and complain about the process) when you never bothered before," Selectman Michael Sullivan told him.

Citizens also continued to voice concerns that the train would cause safety and traffic problems if the station was built in the center of town instead of on Route 3A.

Many citizens requested traffic studies be done to determine the impact of a village station. Wheeler said she had measured the distance from the intersection of Beechwood Street and Route 3A to the two alternative sites and found that a station in Cohasset Village would be two miles closer than one on Route 3A.

Commuters would also have to drive through residential areas to get to a village station, creating a greater risk, she said.

"I personally think cars are a lot more dangerous if you are tired after work or trying to catch a train," said Wheeler.

Others protested the diesel engines would emit noxious fumes that would lead to poor air quality.

But some disagreed.

Herb Jason, Cushing Road, said he goes out on his fishing boat daily and sits three feet from the exhaust of his boat's diesel engine for eight hours a day.

"I'm 83 years old. I've been breathing diesel for 40 years, and my health is not all that bad," Jason said.

'Dracula' Performances Set

Cohasset Drama Club will present "Dracula" for theatergoers who enjoy thrills, surprises, shudders and sensations Nov. 1 and 2.

Two Cohasset residents are members of the cast, including Meredith O'Hayre as the Ghost Wife and Angi Walsh as Mrs. Fern.

Performances will be held at Cohasset Town Hall at 8 p.m. Tickets are $10 and may be purchased at Buttonwood Books in Cohasset or at the door on the night of the performance. The play, directed by Sally Wright, is an adaptation of Bram Stroker's "Dracula."

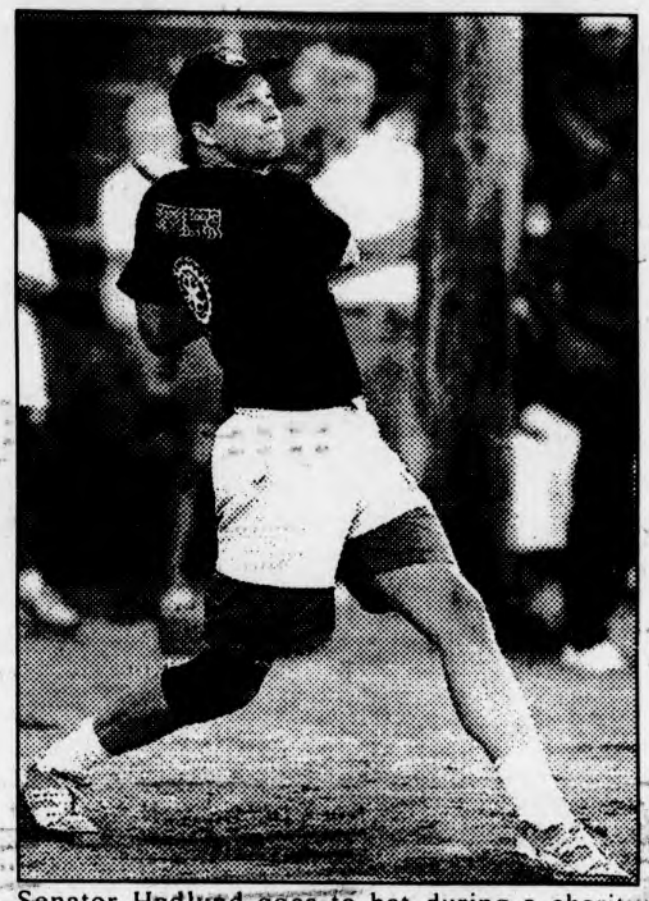
Bob Hedlund
Designated Hitter



Senator Hedlund goes to bat during a charity softball game. Photo courtesy The Patriot Ledger

The people of the South Shore deserve a State Senator who will go to bat for them, not special interests.

Bob Hedlund is that State Senator.

Bob's batting average speaks for itself.

- Bob has consistently earned a 100% rating from Citizens for Limited Taxation
- Bob refuses all special interest PAC and lobbyist campaign contributions
- As a member of the Health Care Committee, Bob helped passed a landmark state health care reform bill
- Bob co-sponsored the Juvenile Justice Bill
- Bob co-sponsored legislation excluding substance abusers from state subsidized senior housing
- Bob secured funds for sewering Hingham, Hull and Cohasset through the State Revolving Fund
- Bob led efforts to reform Title V by drafting 19 revisions
- Bob filed legislation, now law, that gives towns more control over the siting of strip clubs
- Bob secured funds for commuter boat improvements and for creation of additional commuter boat facilities along the South Shore
- Bob spearheaded the effort to save Hull's historic Carousel Under the Clock by securing a $200,000 historic preservation grant

When someone's swinging the bat and seeing the ball this well, you keep him in the game.

Sallyann Wishes Everyone a Happy Halloween!

Happy Halloween! Hope you and your little gremlins have a wonder, "frightful" evening! All we ask is that you all stay safe! A warning to all drivers — watch for darting trick-or-treaters popping out of thin air. They get real excited about getting that next tidbit.

Had a chat with Peg Litchfield last week. She is really excited about a venture she and Jennifer Piepinbrink have started! They have a children's transportation company, and they will take your kiddos anywhere they need to go! Do they have ballet in Boston, a dental appointment in Weymouth or a sporting event in Marshfield? You get the idea — they could actually do your part in the carpool parent role! Call them at 1-888-BUS BY US.

Polly (Laugelle) Litchfield called requesting we put in a great big thank-you to all her friends and former co-workers at Cohasset Town Hall. As you all know, she retired from there recently, and they held a surprise party for her at Sons of Italy Hall Oct. 19. Carmine was the caterer for the gala, and guests surprised Polly once again when her brother, Tony, made an appearance (one of the real highlights, as he is quite ill).

Anyway, Polly sends tons of thanks for the generous gift and lots of fun. The fact that she has wonderful family and friends means the world to her! By the way, Polly, you reap what you sow, and you are extraordinary yourself, you know!

Did you know we have a president living right her in Cohasset? His name is Harvey Kertzman, and he is president of the Massachusetts Aviation Society, which was founded in 1989. Its purpose is to preserve and explore the rich aviation history the Bay State has experienced since the balloon ascensions of the 19th century. The MAHS has prepared a chronology of significant Massachusetts aviation events and is offering its third annual Yankee Flyer calendar.

The society has a quarterly newsletter and holds monthly meetings where they exchange information and research and feature presentations on all aspects of Massachusetts and New England aviation history.

Their first annual achievement award will take place on Nov. 16 to honor Crocker Snow of Ipswich for his many years of dedicated service to Massachusetts aviation. Delahunt for Congress

For voters hoping to get a good airing of the issues, the 10th Congressional District race has been a major disappointment.

It was bad enough that the Democrats were sniping at each other after a razor-thin primary outcome forced a recount.

When a winner finally was declared, instead of looking at the very real ideological differences between Republican Ed Teague and Democrat Bill Delahunt, the campaigns started slinging mud.

Rep. Teague sunk the lowest with his ad about Delahunt's visit to Hedonism II, which he described as a "nude resort."

From what we've heard, it very well may be, but that's not what were voting on in this election.

Voters on the South Shore and Cape Cod care about health care, Medicare and Medicaid funding, and the environment to name some top concerns.

We also believe that most agree a woman has a right to do her own private soul-searching when deciding whether or not to have an abortion.

More contentious, undoubtedly, is gun control, although a ban on assault weapons seems to be an obviously good idea.

On those issues, we support District Attorney Delahunt for Congress.

His record is not perfect, in fact neither men seem to have much of one on protecting the environment.

But instead of applying the Newt Gingrich mantra of "eliminate fraud, waste and abuse" to complicated funding problems in entitlements and health care, Mr. Delahunt seems willing to look for creative solutions. Let's face it, the problem with Medicaid funding is not, as Mr. Teague implies, that a lot of people were using it to have sex-change operations.

Mr. Delahunt is pro-choice and anti-assault weapon. He also has shown that he won't simply cast the party-line vote by coming out against the welfare reform bill signed into law by Pres. Clinton. He believed that the law was too harsh.

Ultimately that is our problem with Mr. Teague. While he is unquestionably a hard worker, we believe he walks a line which is more conservative than the district and leaves little room for compassion or compromise in government.

Whatever your beliefs, there is a clear choice in this race. Please get out and make it on Nov. 5.

Peer Counselors Supported by Freshman Parent

To the Editor:

As a parent of one of the ninth-grade students attending the overnight field trip, I feel compelled to write this letter expressing my support to the peer counselors and to the freshman class at Cohasset High School. Yes, I do agree that the students who brought the marijuana on the field trip used extremely bad judgment and jeopardized the reputation of the entire ninth-grade class at an extremely important time in their high school years. But I also believe there are two major issues that need to be mentioned before the entire situation gets totally out of control.

First, the peer counselors should not be held responsible for not reporting the students involved. One of the major objectives of this event was to establish trust and confidence between the attending parties. being able to establish open communication and dialogue with the students involved may be one of the major factors in helping to deter some of these students from further drug use. The peer counselors can take this opportunity to follow up on their own with some of these students by trying to guide them to make better choices. Teenagers definitely respond more to what their friends tell them and especially if that friend is a good role model for them to emulate.

In order to minimize the likelihood of this situation happening again on future field trips, guidelines and procedures need to be adopted and adhered to by Cohasset High School. These guidelines may already be in place. Conduct a meeting before the event, reinforcing the rules; explain the conduct expected on the trip and the consequences to expect if someone is caught breaking the rules.

A signed contract between each of the attending freshmen, peer counselors and school administrators may be a method to adopt. This contract should outline in a detailed manner the consequences to expect if any of the rules are broken. No exceptions would be given. If the expectations for the counselors and freshmen are discussed beforehand, then quite possibly some students may thing twice about breaking them and decide to stay home. This will reinforce the behavior expected of freshmen and also assist peer counselors in handling unforeseen circumstances. Let's remember these are 16- and 17-year-old students, not trained professional counselors.

My second issue is to ensure the freshman class does not start off this year by having the "drug and social" label attached to it. I am very fortunate to have the opportunity to know the majority of these students and believe all of them have outstanding individual talents, academic capabilities, common sense and extremely good work ethics. They may make mistakes and use poor judgment at times, but let us not label this upcoming class so early in their high school years. Let us as parents and educators focus on their positive qualities.

We must continue to educate our young community about the consequences of illegal drug use and constantly promote the importance of being able to stand up to peer pressure. No matter how much money is spent or education given about the dangers of drugs and alcohol, the fact remains that there will always be some students involved in drug and alcohol abuse in our schools. This is inevitable, and anyone who thinks otherwise is not living in reality. Let's not penalize a whole grade of high school students because of extremely poor judgment exhibited by those students who brought the marijuana. Let's use this unfortunate situation as a learning experience to all those involved.

Reader Survey question for October 31, 1996

Cohasset High School peer counselors, who are juniors and seniors, disposed of marijuana that several 9th-graders brought to a school-sponsored camp last month. They did not immediately tell the teachers and will not reveal the names of the freshmen involved.

Did the peer counselors do the right thing?

Do you think the selectmen should allow private organizations or town departments to use the Hagerty property buildings or parking lot for storage?

Yes 2

No 3

Your comments

It might make sense for other town departments to use that property, but it seems unreasonable for a private organization to use it. I think the town administrator made some kind of deal with the yacht club behind the selectmen's backs. That's not the way town government should be conducted.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Peer Counselors' Actions Don't Deserve Ridicule

To the Editor:

Granted, kids do drugs. An hour of television or the top stories in a newspaper will vouch for that. They were doing them in our parents' generation, and despite the noble efforts of Nancy Reagan's cliched message, "Just say no," kids are still doing them today. I do not mean to rationalize or undermine the pandemic of drugs in this country. I am simply stating that drugs have always been around, and will always be around, despite the messages our elders preach and adhere to so religiously.

The point at hand lies in the fact that kids know drugs are bad for them and understand that there are consequences for doing them, and they still use them anyway. Is this use, and abuse, simply a right of passage that most every teen will inevitably undergo? Is it human nature for teens to experiment with drugs as a manifestation of their desire to rebel against the authoritative figures that they blindly obeyed in years past? The answer is yes.

The front page of the Patriot Ledger of Oct. 24 contained an article that condemned Cohasset High School peer counselors for wrongfully disposing of some marijuana. The article reads that the peer counselors, who consist of juniors and seniors, found marijuana belonging to freshmen while the group was attending an overnight orientation camp. The PCs, as they are called, took the marijuana and flushed it down the toilet, which was found to be unacceptable, especially considering they were at a school function that harbors beliefs and goals quite contrary to drug use.

The paper attacks the response of the PCs, and in one shot on the front page, attempts to sully the character of all those students who were just trying to do the right thing — and for what? To sell more papers? To catch the eye of the already opinionated, youth-cursing adults?

The Ledger listed all the profound, one-sided "incriminating" facts on the front page, and then to spare its reputation as a "factual" newspaper, listed the other half of the story, the side that shows the pure intentions of the students. This side, however, was masked from the first-glance viewer and could only be found by flipping forward to the cryptic pages that lay hidden amongst an olio of other articles and advertisements. This condescending attitude that society projects towards kids, and the blatant misrepresentation of them, are what make these kids rebel in the first place. How can society expect youth to listen to the anti-drug message pioneered by adults when those very same adults are broadcasting the guilt of well-intentioned students on the front page of a newspaper?

The paper engaged itself in the ultimate paradox. By condemning the students' actions towards the drug use, in the hopes of spurring some anti-drug sentiment, they only kindled the rebellious flame that secretly burns in the gut of even the most restrained students.

The decision made by the PCs was a noble one indeed. It stopped the problem at hand and sent a clear message, one that was sent from one group of fellow students to another. What better way is there to try to make kids realize that drugs are not tolerable than to have older, admired fellow classmates relay the message?

The approach of damning drugs through a hierarchy of authorities, ranging from the President to teachers, is the old pedestrian and futile fight aimed towards reaching a drug problem panacea.

And newspapers pontificating their biased ridicule concerning the choice of action by some concerned students is to further divide the schism that will inevitably rest between adults and teens.

Train Will Ruin Golf Course View

To the Editor:

The Widow's Walk Golf Course currently being constructed in Scituate has, according to an article in the Scituate Mariner Oct. 24, caught the attention of the national media, in particular Golf Digest, CNN, ESPN and the Smithsonian magazine no less. This nationwide publicity is quite a compliment to the town, but I wonder what these famous media outlets will say when they get a view, not only of James Landing, Scituate Harbor and the North River, but "smells and sounds with a view" when they see and hear thee planned 1,000-car parking lot and the four parallel 830-foot-long storage tracks for the air particulate-polluting diesel locomotives of the Greenbush branch of Old Colony Railroad, not to mention the electrical equipment building for the engine block heater system and the oil-water separator system for the drip pans under the locomotives on the storage tracks?

A fence is planned, so says the MBTA, but just how high will it go? Up to the sky, will it go? A large clubhouse and visitors area are also planned for the public to enjoy, which includes a widow's walk along the top of the building. To get a better view of the layover facility? How very sad — a beautiful, exciting and unique golf course of which the town could be proud, only to be diminished by this ill-advised evil atrocity called the Greenbush Railroad.

The town shouldn't be too quick to take a bow, at least not until they tell the MBTA to get out of town!

Move Halloween to the Last Saturday of October

To the Editor:

I am asking for your help to legally change the day that we celebrate Halloween to the last Saturday of October.

Kids love Halloween. It's right up there with their birthdays and Christmas as one of the most exciting days of the year, but it is absolutely ridiculous to have it falling on school nights. We rush to prepare our children to go out trick-or-treating, then they run around the neighborhood, stay up too late and eat a small mountain of candy before going to bed. Imagine what it must be like to be a grade school teacher on the day after Halloween.

It's also very dangerous. Daylight saving now ends on the last Sunday of October, so Halloween now always comes after the clocks are set back. This means that even the youngest children are out in the dark. Think about all the kids in costume out on the streets as darkness falls with all the slippery fallen leaves in the streets as the working parents are driving home in a rush to be part of the big event.

Yes, I suppose there is an original basis in religion and folklore for the Oct. 31 date, but is there any modern day reason to be particular about this date? What does matter is that our young children have a fun and safe time decorating a pumpkin, putting on a costume and heading out for the wonder of trick-or-treat. Let's just do it on Saturday so more parents can be involved, so it comes before the end of daylight savings time, so we can have more controlled parties or supervised trick-or-treating, and so the teachers are spared as the children would have all day Sunday to rest and recuperate.

This is one small change that we can make with your help that will have an immediate, positive effect on just about every parent, teacher and young child in Massachusetts, if not the entire United States of America. Help me make this happen.

Station Belongs on Route 3A

To the Editor:

My husband and I bought our house on Ash Street 18 years ago because, after being raised in cities, we wanted to raise our children and live our daily lives in an environment that was quiet, safe, clean, and natural. Well, we thought we'd died and gone to heaven when we discovered Cohasset...and we still do!

Now I feel that this environment is being threatened by a proposal to locate the train station right in the village. Yes, I think a train station with an 800-foot platform and a parking lot for 450 cars is totally non-aesthetic. Yes, I think that hundreds of cars coming into our center will have a negative effect on the air we breathe, and will also create traffic, safety, and parking problems galore. No, I do not believe that commuters rushing to work in the morning and eager to get home in the afternoon will generate enough downtown business to justify the $3 million, the blasting of ledge or the pollution and congestion to the neighborhood. Can't we support businesses in less drastic ways?

Therefore, regardless of where you live in Cohasset, if you feel that a village station will bring city-type problems to an area where citizens live, work, shop and play, a wonderful, increasingly rare kind of place, then please let the selectmen know. Keep the station where we all thought it was to be in the first place: at the 3A former Winter Garden site, accessible to all without damaging the quality of life for many, many people.

Neither Candidate Can Afford a Mistake

Congressional Race to be Decided Nov. 5

By Doug Fraser
COHASSET MARINER

Early on in the debate Tuesday night at Quincy Junior College in Plymouth, 10th Congressional candidates Ed Teague and Bill Delahunt were asked what they considered to be their biggest mistake in life.

Not surpsingly neither one could recall any major gaffs of their own, but when allowed to question each other, they found plenty of faults as Teague pressed Delahunt hard on ethical questions and Delahunt pushed Teague on his voting record and his Newt Gingrich connections.

Delahunt cited a need for privacy in not disclosing his tax returns as the six other primary candidates had. He complained such a disclosure would also affect his ex-wife's privacy as well and cited retiring Congressman Gerry Studds refusal to make his taxes public and General Colin Powell's refusal to run for President on the basis his privacy would be compromised.

"I've met General Powell, Delahunt," Teague dryly observed, "and you're no Colin Powell."

Delahunt did say he made $100,000 last year, and challenged Teague on the amount of taxes he paid.

"You make more and yet you paid less in income taxes than I did," said Delahunt, questioning Teague's $50,000 in deductions on his income taxes.

"How do you rationalize taking a tax exemption away from seniors while taking a $50,000 tax exemption for yourself?" Delahunt asked, referring to a vote by Teague made in 1991 which would have taxed Social Security income.

But Teague said Delahunt's plan to switch long term nursing home care from Medicare A to Medicare B to save on overall costs, would require seniors to pay between $320 and $1800 in co-payments now covered by the federal government. Delahunt said he would introduce legislation to have those premiums capped.

Teague accused Delahunt of making a profit off environmentalists in a controversial land deal in which the Nantucket Land Bank paid for land they had already contracted to buy after the seller sold to a group of real estate investors which included Delahunt.

Delahunt said the seller only sold to him after the land bank had defaulted on their purchase and sales agreement . He said he made no profit on the deal because there were additional costs incurred in the acquiring the land.

Delahunt repeatedly returned to Teague's voting record in the state legislature. He cited votes to cut educational funding including cuts to student loan programs, a $170,000 cut in funding for Cape Cod Community College and a $225,000 cut to Massachusetts Maritime Academy. He said Teague was one of 44 out of 142 who voted for these cuts.

"We went through a crisis in Massachusetts," Teague responded. "We had to live within our means then. But budget reductions have been restored and we will be reducing tuition this year."

at the Town Clerk's office up until noon on Monday.

The crowded presidential race features Clinton and former Sen. Bob Dole, Reform Party candidate Ross Perot and three other candidates from the Libertarian, Natural Law and Workers World parties.

Pollsters say the senatorial race between U.S. Sen. John Kerry and Gov. Bill Weld is neck and neck. That race also includes Susan G. Gallagher of the Conservative Party and Robert C. Stowe of the Natural Law Party.

Congressman Gerry Studds' successor will also be determined Tuesday as William D. Delahunt, the Norfolk County district attorney, and House Minority Leader Edward B. Teague, vie for the 10th District seat. Also in that race is A. Charles Laws of the Green Party.

Delahunt got the Democratic nomination only after a count, recount, superior court ruling and appellate court decision over Phil Johnston of Marshfield in a primary that left the party divided.

Incumbent state Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray, who lives on Margin Street, is facing a write-in campaign challenge from Hingham's Nancy Buckley, a leader of the anti-train Coastal Coalition.

And Assistant District Attorney Robert Delahunt, Jr. of Weymouth, a second cousin to Bill Delahunt, seeks to unseat incumbent state Sen. Robert Hedlund of Weymouth.

Douglas urged voters to check the back of their ballots to make sure the holes are punched completely through.

"If they need help voters can contact any election officer and we'll be glad to help," Douglas said.

She explained that in every voting booth there will be a poster detailing how to use the punch-card ballot.

During the Sept. 17 primary, the high number of blank ballots cast prompted candidates for the Democratic nomination for the 10th Congressinal District seat to seek recounts in several towns, including Cohasset, that use the punch-card system.

Douglas is optimistic that votes will be counted by about 10 p.m., Tuesday. She said the write-in campaign for Mary Jeanette Murray's seat will add some time.

There are a total of 5,351 registered voters in town: 1,113 Democrats; 1,180 Republicans; 10 Libertarians; and 3,048 unenrolled.

WORK-RELATED INJURY
A survey of 30,074 working men and women over the age of 18 published in the American Journal of Public Health gives some good insight as to how workers become afflicted with back pain and back injury. Back pain from repeated motions, such as lifting, pushing, pulling, bending, twisting, or reaching affected 4.5% of workers (4.75 million people). This cause of back pain and injury was most prevalent among construction workers, mechanics, and operators of heavy machinery. About ten percent of people in these occupations suffer back pain. And, virtually all could benefit from the education that chiropractors can provide about lifting heavy objects correctly, as well as conducting other repetitive motions at work. While those who see chiropractors after they experience pain due to lifting injuries derive benefit, the greatest benefit comes to those who see the chiropractor as a preventive measure.
Pain is nature's way of signaling something is wrong. If you're suffering from back pain, at SCITUATE HARBOR CHIROPRACTIC we suggest you give chiropractic a try. Chiropractic is a system of natural health care. The longer the symptoms are treated with drugs, the more you are gambling with your health. Remember, if you ignore your health it will go away. Located at 80 Front Street, Scituate Harbor, we utilize the most advanced and comprehensive equipment and procedures to deliver the finest chiropractic care. Please call 545-7388 to schedule an appointment.
P.S. It is estimated that, overall, 2.5% of workers in the U.S. suffer back pain annually due to work-related injury.

Voters Give Garage Green Light

Cost Up by 32 Percent

By Mary Ford
COHASSET MARINER

At Monday's session of Special Town Meeting, voters opted to borrow 32 percent or about $230,000 more for a public works garage at the town landfill.

They also authorized borrowing $60,000 to bring the water main from Cedarledge Village up to the proposed D.P.W. garage site.

This brings the total cost of the project to $1.05 million.

Construction of the garage was approved at the 1994 annual town meeting but estimates were under budget. Proponents considered cutting back or possibly abandoning the project when the low bids came in 32 percent more than anticipated.

"But the town needs the building, so we decided to ask the town for additional funds," said garage committee member Garry Gardner, 90 Beechwood St.

Selectman Michael H. Sullivan said the excess in cost is directly attributable to improvement in the construction economy and planners' efforts to be conservative when the initial proposal was brought forward. Plans now include a hydraulic lift and storage loft.

The 13,000-square-foot corrugated metal building will house the tree & park and highway equipment and will have offices in the center.

Dan Prisble, 60 Jerusalem Rd., and Tom Gruber, 8 Pratt Court, both said they were concerned about the high cost. Fred Quelle, 120 Nichols Rd., argued the town should use the Eastern Edison building and not build a new garage.

With a vote of 192 to 54, the garage won the 2/3 majority was needed for approval.

Voters overwhelmingly approved by a vote of 215 to 14 to extend the water main 1,500 feet to the garage site.

DPW Supt. Harold Litchfield pointed out that digging a well and using well water would not provide enough water pressure for fire suppression purposes.

CLT Likes Rep. Murray

State Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray, R-Cohasset, has won the endorsement of the Citizens for Limited Taxation's 2-1/2 PAC in her reelection bid.

CLT's 2-1/2 PAC, the political arm of Citizens for Limited Taxation, was created to support candidates who would defend Prop. 2-1/2 in the state legislature.

Francis J. Faulkner, executive director of CLT's 2-1/2 PAC, said the group endorsed Murray based on her long-time support for tax limitation and control of government spending.

Septic Management Plan Gets Go-ahead

Voter Worries About 'Septic Police'

By Charlene Vandini
COHASSET MARINER

Citing their fears of government intrusion, a dozen residents objected to the health board's article for $45,000 to set up a management plan designed to provide financial relief for homeowners with failed or substandard septic systems at Tuesday's session of Special Town Meeting.

The article passed after nearly an hour of debate.

Engineer John Struzzieri said the money, of which $20,000 would come from a state grant, would be used to set up waste water management districts, to inventory and map all septic systems in towns, delineate the priority areas, and determine what financial assistance would be available for septic system repairs.

The plan would be available for town meeting action in the spring, 1997. In the upcoming months, there will be hearings and meetings to involve and educate the public on the plan.

Health board member Kevin Ulmer said "hundreds of thousands of dollars" are available in loan subsidies for septic system repairs, but Cohasset residents will not be eligible unless the town has the management plan in place.

But Fred Quelle of Nichols Road said the article would subject all residents to "forced inspections and forced repairs," and could lead to future forced inspections for such things as lead paint and lead pipes.

Beechwood Street resident Florence Jerome said she does not want to allow inspectors on her property, calling them "septic police" whether or not there is a problem with the septic system. If the inspectors find a problem with a septic system, the homeowners can be forced to take out loans, incurring the expense of the repayment.

Nancy Snowdale of Mill Lane said the warrant article "scares the hell out of me." She said Cohasset should follow other towns that have required septic system inspections only when the property is about to be sold or at the time of major renovations.

She asked who will conduct the inspections and how much they will cost.

Ulmer said the management plan will, with public comment, address these issues.

"This money only develops the plan," he said. The money, plus $2,500 in another article to buy a computer, will gather the information and create a computer data base. At the present, the health department has no information on some septic systems in town.

Wigmore Pierson of Atlantic Avenue asked if homeowners must pay for the inspections.

In response, Ulmer explained the cost of inspections may be paid by the town, by the property owners, or split between the two.

"There's nothing fixed in stone."

One part of the plan would create a priority list to provide, first, for inspections of septic systems in the most sensitive locations, such as those near the town's water supply, and as long as low-interest loans are available for septic system repairs. That the money is exhausted and will not resume until more funds are available.

The sewer department said it can apply for as much as $500,000 per year for septic system repairs. Having the plan in place will allow residents to apply for "a variety of financial options" if repairs are required, Ulmer said.

On several occasions Ulmer and others, including selectman Michael Sullivan, explained that the article does not require inspections at this time.

"No one will come on your property if you vote for this tonight," Ulmer said.

The septic management plan is designed to provide an "equitable benefit" to homeowners with septic systems, in tandem with the benefit provided to those homeowners in north Cohasset who will be connected to the sewer system.

"This came up at the time of the sewer project," selectman Michael Sullivan said, explaining that some residents balked at their taxes paying for the north Cohasset sewers at the time they were facing expensive septic system repairs to comply with the state's Title V regulations.

Advisory committee member Ken Ingber said the board of health has, at the present, the authority and obligation to "seek out failed systems" and order their replacement or repair. That authority remains in place without this article, he said, but without the article, no money will be available to help finance the repairs.

Jerusalem Road resident Diane Sullivan said the article is "doing what we asked them to do," to provide a way to solve septic problems for some residents.

"It doesn't put anyone on your property; it doesn't require repairs," she said. The article provides money to gather the data for the management plan that will come back to town meeting in the spring.

Anne Stenbeck said that her house on King Street has an "older septic system" and is close to Lily Pond. She said she does not want to pollute the town's drinking water, and she wants "as much help as possible" when the time comes to repair her septic system.

"I'll feel better about the North Cohasset sewer if I know there's help available for me," she said.

Quelle's substitute motion to indefinitely postpone the article was defeated on a voice vote.

Moderator George Marlette ruled that the voice vote on the main motion passed, and refused Quelle's request for a hand-count of voters.

Town Matches Grant for Water Study

Voters approved $10,000 to match a $20,000 grant from the Army Corps of Engineers through the state Department of Environmental Management, to undertake a water supply protection study.

John McNabb, chairman of the water resources protection committee explained that the study will assess the water quality, assess threats to the watershed, map the watershed, and develop a long-term water quality monitoring plan.

McNabb said the study will look at four threats to the watershed: Cohasset Heights Landfill, the Hingham Naval Ammunition Depot Annex, Wompatuck State Park, and run-off from septic systems.

The $10,000 match from the town is provided through the water department, advisory committee member Leland Jenkins said. It was supported by the board of health and the selectmen.

PERSONAL FINANCE

A house is not just a home

By the editors of Worth Magazine

For most of us, home ownership amounts to little more than a form of forced savings. We pour perhaps a third of our income into a mortgage, taxes, and upkeep, all the while hoping we'll get something for our investment when we sell. That's as far as most of us go when considering the house as part of a financial portfolio.

YOUR MONEY'S WORTH

William Goetzmann, a professor of finance at the Yale School of Management, begs to differ. In a 1993 study, he examined four diverse urban housing markets — Atlanta, Chicago, Dallas, and San Francisco — from 1971 to 1985. He found that a house should play an important part in an investment portfolio, and that treating a house as such can reduce overall portfolio risk. "The return and risk of owning a home is often misunderstood," says Goetzmann. "A house can contribute significantly to the diversification of your portfolio."

The key is that housing values tend to run counter to the stock market. When one is up, the other is down. Houses, like all hard assets, rise in value with inflation, making them excellent hedges. And, according to Goetzmann, they generally appreciate a respectable 7 percent to 10 percent annually, compared with 12 percent for stocks and 6 percent for bonds.

Of course, most financial advisers consider it gospel that home ownership should have no bearing on investment strategy. "Your house is strictly a place to live," says Mike Kabarec, a financial adviser in Palatine, Ill. "You should not treat it as an investable asset — period." A house is about the most illiquid thing around, says Karabec: "You may be building equity, but it's next to impossible to tap." There's also the volatile nature of real estate, not to mention the irrational attachments people develop when house hunting.

As with any type of investment, higher risk brings higher returns. In this case, the more an individual puts into his home, the lower his portfolio risk and the more modest his overall returns. Take San Francisco, where historically homes have had an average annual appreciation rate of 11.5 percent. Using the lowest-risk portfolio model, according to the study, you could have achieved a healthy 10.5 percent return by putting 40 percent of your assets in your house, 40 percent in stocks, and 20 percent in bonds. You'd increase the return to almost 12 percent by putting only 10 percent in your house, 90 percent in stocks, and nothing in bonds.

In Atlanta, where houses appreciate annually at 7 percent, a more conservative mix — 70 percent in your house, 10 percent in stocks, and 20 percent in bonds — would get you an 8 percent return. You'd get close to a 12 percent return, however, by putting 90 percent in stocks, 10 percent in bonds — and renting.

This study has obvious implications for people considering buying a home. But is it relevant for those who already own one?

"Absolutely," says Goetzmann. For example, a Dallas resident with $1 million in assets, $500,000 of which is sunk into his home, needs to think about how home ownership relates to the rest of his investable assets. If he put $400,000 into stocks and $100,000 into bonds, total return on his $1 million portfolio would be almost 1 percent higher than if he put $200,000 into stocks and $300,000 into bonds, although the risk would be higher as well. The 9.6 percent annual appreciation of his Dallas home, combined with his investment goals, should help him decide whether the risk is worth taking.

The same considerations should also help him decide what to invest in.

'The return and risk of owning a home is often misunderstood. A house can contribute significantly to the diversification of your portfolio.'

William Goetzman
Professor of finance,
Yale School of Management

For example, investing in additional tangible assets will only concentrate his risk. "Your home will move in a similar direction as natural resources — that is, as anything coming out of the ground," says Ron Roge, president of R.W. Roge & Co., a financial-advisory firm in Centereach, N.Y. That especially means gold, silver, and platinum, as well as other tangible items, from antiques to comic books.

If you are considering a second home, Goetzmann's study suggests buying one in a different region: two locations are less likely to experience a simultaneous drop in value. Even better, says John Dale, senior vice president of Peregrine Capital Management in Minneapolis, don't purchase a home; just buy raw land. "When you start building, that's when your taxes go to the moon," he says. "And you'll still reduce the risk if, say, they want to build a freeway across the street from your first house."

In constructing your portfolio, keep in mind that its value is affected by the fortunes of your region. For example, the median home price in Los Angeles County fell 14 percent from 1991 to 1994, due in part to massive layoffs by defense-industry companies. So consider investments not linked to industries in your area. If, say, you're living in Dallas, don't overweight oil stocks or real estate investment trusts in the Southwest.

Says Goetzmann: "If you choose investments that aren't correlated to one another, your financial future should be considerably less uncertain in the long term."

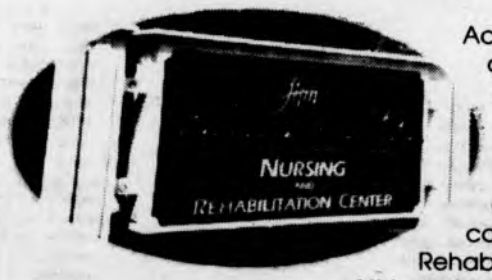
"Exemplary Care! Exceptional Staff!"

"Receiving Accreditation with Commendation is a significant achievement, one that recognizes exemplary performance by Elihu White Nursing & Rehabilitation Center."
Dennis S. O'Leary, M.D., President,
Joint Commission on Accreditation of Healthcare Organizations



Accreditation by the nation's oldest and largest healthcare accrediting body is special. Even rarer is to receive accreditation with commendation, indicating excellence in all aspects of care. Elihu White Nursing & Rehabilitation Center achieved all of this and more! We were also recently honored as one of only 20 nursing centers in the entire United States to have received accreditation from JCAHO continuously for the past 30 years.

Thanks to one of the finest and most caring teams of healthcare professionals in the industry, Elihu White has again demonstrated why generations of families have allowed us to share in the care of their loved ones.

Turkey Hill Purchase Okayed

By Charlene Vandini
COHASSET MARINER

Town meeting took the last step on the path to the purchase of 20 acres of land for conservation purposes when it unanimously authorized $125,000 for its share of the acquisition of Turkey Hill Tuesday night.

Joining with the conservation commission in Hingham and three private land trusts, the purchase will preserve a total of 55 acres that straddle the two towns, offering spectacular views of the Boston skyline, the harbor islands, and the Worlds End reservation. In addition, the property is contiguous with the 800-acre Whitney and Thayer Woods and Wompatuck State Park's 2,900 acres, creating what the conservation groups call a "green belt" of undeveloped, publicly-owned land.

Earlier this year, the Trustees of Reservations said it had an agreement to purchase the property, owned by the heirs of Joseph Saponaro, for $810,000, which is at least $100,000 less than its assessed valuation.

Last spring, Hingham voters approved $165,000 to buy the 30 acres on its side of the town line, and Cohasset voters agreed in principal to buy the 20 acres in this town. Tuesday's vote makes good on that stated intention, backing it up with the money to complete the deal.

The two towns have applied for $450,900 in a state grant which, added to $110,000 in private donations will equal the purchase price plus initial expenses.

The Trustees of Reservations is raising $307,000 for demolition of some derelict buildings on the property, renovations of the farmhouse there which will be used as the caretaker's residence, and for site improvements and maintenance of the area.

While the two towns will actually own the property, the Trustees will manage it.

Conservation commissioner Susan Cope told town meeting a decision on the towns' grant applications is expected at the end of this week.

She also noted that state Secretary of Environmental Affairs Trudy Coxe will visit Turkey Hill today (Thursday).

Trustees of reservations land specialist Valerie Talmage told town meeting that the state authorities have been impressed by an application submitted jointly by two towns and three private groups. She said Coxe's visit is a "great sign" that the grants will be approved, adding that with many parties involved in this acquisition, many people will be "upset" if the grant money is not available.

However, Talmage said the towns are not committed to following through on the purchase if the grant is denied. Making up that $400,000 would be difficult, but she also said there is always a chance that a private donor could come forward.

Conservation commission chairman Tom Callahan said the Saponaro family will continue to own a small portion of the land where a cellular phone tower is located. This property remaining in private ownership will continue to pay real estate taxes to Cohasset.

The property has been checked for hazardous waste, and none found, Cope said. This was originally a source of concern since the property was used in 1950s as a Nike missile tracking station.

The Saponaro family operated a riding stable at Turkey Hill until Joseph Saponaro's death in 1987. His heirs originally offered it for sale with a $1 million price tag. Eighteen months ago, they agreed to demolish the Nike installation to allow the conservation groups to purchase the property.

Earlier this year, Talmage described Turkey Hill is one of the last coastal drumlins—a hill created by receding glaciers—on the South Shore. In an historical context, local residents gathered on the hill to watch a naval battle that took place off the coast of Scituate during the War of 1812.

Activities Planned for Seniors

The Council on Elder Affairs offers many activities and programs for seniors.

A Caregivers Group meets the second Friday of each month at 10 a.m. The group will also meet Nov. 13.

Sign-ups for the SHARE program are Nov. 4-8. Distribution day is Nov. 23.

A Jingle Bell Walk is scheduled for Friday, Nov. 29, at 1:30 p.m.

A Christmas Pops trip is planned for the Saturday, Dec. 21, matinee performance. The cost is $45, which includes the performance and bus transportation.

Tickets are available for the South Shore Men of Harmony performance Dec. 7 at 2 p.m. Call 383-9112 for tickets, which must be ordered in advance.

Several day trips are scheduled, including the following:

Nov. 4, Christmas Tree Shop; Nov. 12, charity opener at Filene's, South Shore Plaza (bus leaves at 9:30 a.m.); Nov. 13, luncheon at Mile Post, Duxbury; and Nov. 20, Pilgrim Day and lunch in Plymouth. A trip to Sandwich is also planned in November. Call the COA for more information about day trips.

The COA is offering the following classes: step aerobics, low-impact exercise, yoga, easy exercise, chi gong, computers, bridge, wood working at Cohasset High School, chess for men, knitting, 55 Alive Driving, gourmet cooking and Classes Without Walls (Robert Frost, Nov. 13; major religions, Nov. 20).

Senior writing programs include "Reflections" with Karen Flood, Dec. 11.

On Wednesday, Nov. 13, District Attorney Michael Sullivan will speak about fraud at 10 a.m.

Guest speakers are featured Tuesdays at 1 p.m.

Flu clinics are offered on the second Tuesday of the month at 11 a.m. (call 383-0771), and foot care clinics take place at 9:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m. on the second Wednesday ($18). Blood pressure screenings are slated for the second Tuesday of each month at 11 a.m.

Showstoppers Dinner Theater at the Golden Rooster Restaurant, Scituate, is offering Wednesday and Thursday senior matinees.

The Vista newsletter for seniors, which includes programs, classes and trips offered by the Senior Center, is mailed monthly. Call the center to request a place on the mailing list.

Luncheons for seniors are held Tuesdays and Thursdays at noon.

For fuel assistance information, call the COA.

Ratepayers March at Statehouse

civilized."

"When this happens, it's the governor who appointed these people, he's responsible for their actions," said Hersch. "He appointed them, he can remove them."

"Next time, we're going to tell the governor how we feel," he said. "I'm a Republican, but I'm very, very appalled at the governor for not coming forth. People on fixed incomes, senior citizens, small businesses are all affected in their pocketbooks." Hersch said small businesses have had to lay off help in order to pay their water bills.

Hedlund told the group that after he sat through the DPU hearings, he told himself there's no way the DPU can grant this increase. "You see a lot of crazy things in this building, but this one takes the cake," he said.

Hedlund said the ratepayers wouldn't get any help from the governor or from the DPU.

"It's up to the towns to pursue the only option to bring relief short of state or federal aid: take the plant by eminent domain and set up a tri-town water authority," he said. Grafton, he said, had done so successfully.

Ginnie Norman, a Cohasset resident, said she used to pay $60 every 3 months for water. Her latest bill arrived in the beginning of October for $215.

"They wanted me to pay by Oct. 15," she said. "They're supposed to give us 45 days.

"I want the governor to be responsible for the DPU," she said. "A lot of people like myself wrote to DPU before the decision was made. A lot of people didn't expect a 155 percent increase. These people are not accountable."

James R. "Russ" Lennon of Cohasset brought along a water bill showing a total amount due of $346.96. After a meter reader came to check his meter, he said, the bill came down by $144.

"Only two people live in that house," he said.

Murray and Hedlund led the residents up to the third floor to meet with the governor's staff. Both Weld and Cellucci were out on the campaign trail.

David Ramsay, deputy director of Consumer Affairs, got an earful from the angry ratepayers about dirty dishwater and clothes discolored permanently from water filled with manganese and iron.

"Will you let him know we represent 11,000 households," said Bill McLearn, a Hull selectman.

"Where does he appoint people who think that would be in any way tolerable?" said Cohasset Selectman Peter Pratt. "That's the problem we have with the governor."

"We're very sympathetic," said Ramsay. He told the group that Cellucci had met with selectmen two weeks ago and has since asked his staff to explore three avenues of relief:

— To improve customer responsiveness, the Division of Consumer Affairs asked Mass. Water to assign additional personnel to field complaints. He said he had been assured the company had done so.

— To get some rate relief, the governor's staff has asked the federal government whether they can get federal funding for rate relief, since half of the increased rates are a direct consequence of the federal Clean Water Act. He said the governor may also ask the Legislature for rate relief from the state.

— To lower the cost of water, the governor's staff is setting up meetings with town managers and selectmen to explore the possibility of gaining public control of the water works.

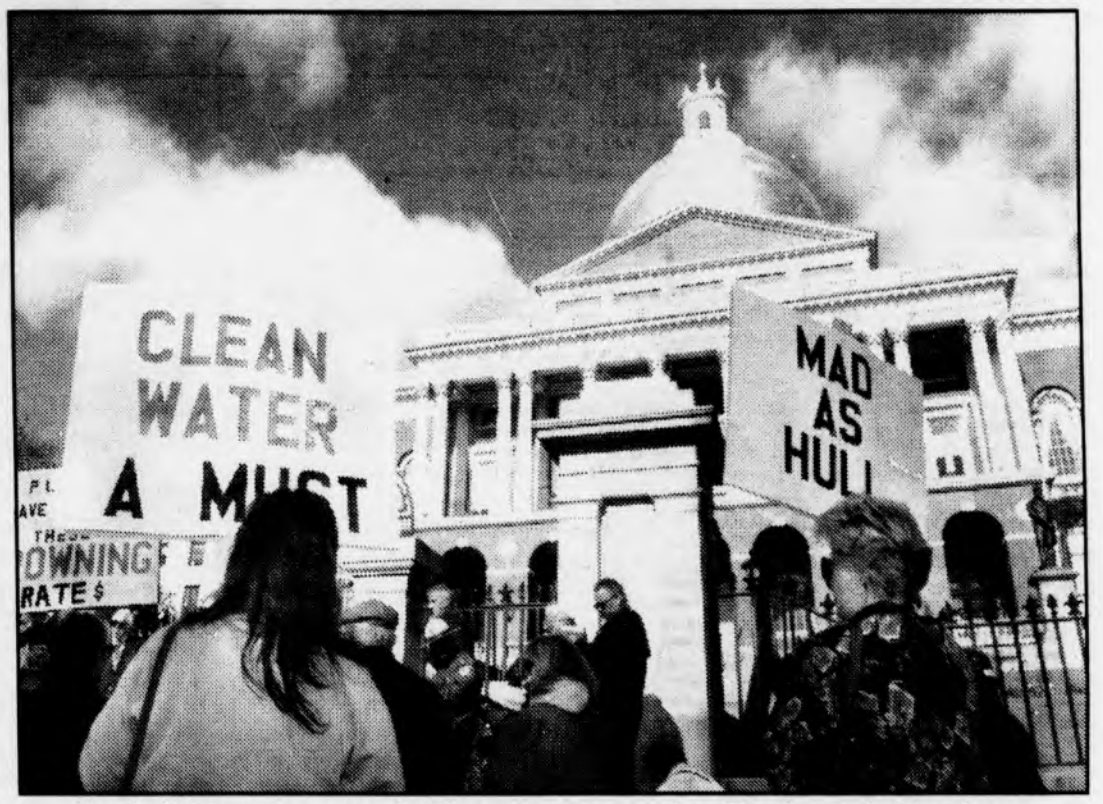
The initial DPU ruling is under review by the Supreme Judicial Court, said Ramsay, and so he could not comment on it.

Ramsay also said residents could protest their bills to the company and to the DPU, while withholding the amount in dispute.

"I can assure the governor and lieutenant governor want immediate action," he said.

Despite Ramsay's assurances, residents didn't leave convinced they would see rate relief any time soon.

"It's questionable based upon the history of the governor and his responsiveness to people's needs," said Mike Devitt, a Hull resident.



Nearly 100 protesters attended the water rate march on Tuesday at the Statehouse.

School Notebook

Fourth-graders at Deer Hill School, along with their teachers, are on the look out for whales during a recent field trip.

Fourth-graders Learn About Whales

"Look over there! No, over there! There's another one!"

Cries such as these could be heard from Deer Hill School's entire fourth-grade class as they cruised in an area of Stellwagen Bay off of the Plymouth coast in search of whales.

Mother Nature blessed them with smooth waters and a clear fall day Sept. 27. As they embarked on a Captain John's Whale Watch excursion from Plymouth Harbor, expectations were high.

The students had been involved in research on the ocean and the natural resources of the Northeast region of the United States. Attention had been paid to the historical importance of the whaling industry in our region and the changes that have taken place since the colonial days in America. The appearance and behaviors of the whale were studied extensively.

Proof that the children had mastered these concepts was evident from their responses to the spectacular show performed by the whales during the field trip.

"He is spouting. There is a blow hole. Look I see a humpback whale. He is making a bubble net. You can see ica-baleen. Wow, look at that krill jump!"

Thanks to a generous contribution from the Cohasset PSO and parent chaperones who donated their time, the students were graced with a learning experience they will long remember.

whales a snap. Fourth-graders here get a close up look at one of the great mammals.

Buy Wreaths to Support METCO

The Cohasset METCO Committee has embarked on a fund raiser this year. The group will be selling 22-inch double-faced balsam Christmas wreaths, supplied by growers who furnish fashionable nurseries. The cost is $8.

A limited number of "kissing balls" will also be sold, and both items will be available for pick-up at Cohasset High School Saturday, Dec. 7. Decorative handmade bows will also be available.

Watch for order forms in the school menus or call METCO coordinators Connie Afshar (383-6006) or Jean Hajjar (383-9917) to place an order.

Papa Gino's Night Benefit is Nov. 4

Help the Deer Hill sixth grade students ear money for their outdoor school program. Buy anything at the Cohasset Papa Gino's from 4 to 9 p.m. on Monday, Nov. 4, and a portion of the profits will go toward the outdoor school fund.

DRUG FACT

Dr. Robert DuPont, founding director of the National Institute on Drug Abuse, and president of the American Council on Marijuana, points out that: "In all of our history, no young people have every before used marijuana regularly on a mass scale; therefore, our youngsters are, in effect, making themselves guinea pigs in a tragic national experiment. Thus far, our research clearly suggests that we will see horrendous results."

— "@ Committees of Correspondence. Reprinted with permission."

Pupils have already raised money to help pay for their outdoor school program with a class car wash and spaghetti dinner. This will will their final fund-raising event. The trip to Camp Bournedale for their outdoor school program will take place Nov. 18-20.

Stained-glass Windows Come 'Home' to Notre Dame

When Notre Dame's campus moved from Roxbury to its present Hingham location in 1964, the beautiful stained-glass windows from the chapel were given to St. Ann's Church in Hull.

On Nov. 3, the Notre Dame Academy will celebrate the return of these windows to the Notre Dame Chapel. "Our Lady" and "The Good Shepherd" were made in the Glasmalerei workshop in Munich, Germany, in the 1850s. They are of exquisite quality and would be very difficult and costly to produce today.

To prove they are truly home, the windows fit perfectly into the Hingham chapel entranceways.

PSO Auction is Nov. 22

For a fun evening in support of the PSO, come out for dancing, drinks and Karaoke on Friday evening, Nov. 22. The usual silent auction has so many great new items that some will be auctioned live. Talk a group of friends into going to the Chart House with you that evening. Stay tuned for ticket information. (Book you baby-sitter now!) Call Tomi Bukowski with questions, 383-6771.

PSO Help Sought

Many different fund-raising events are being sponsored by the PSO this year, including gift-wrap sales, a fall dance and silent auction etc. The success of these events requires the work of many individuals with many different talents. If you would like to join a committee for one of these events or help out in any manner, please call Tomi Bukowski at 383-6771, Lesley Faber at 383-2071, Patty Smith at 383-2773 or Jane Wasel at 383-0121.

METCO Dinner is Nov. 3

The Cohasset METCO Committee will host its annual fall dinner from 3 to 6 p.m., Sunday, Nov. 3 at the Cohasset High School cafeteria. The annual Sunday dinner is given by the Cohasset METCO host families for Cohasset's METCO students and their Boston families. This year's dinner will feature a Southern style menu of baked ham, macaroni & cheese and sweet potato pie. All METCO families, Cohasset host families and anyone else from the community who would like to attend are welcomed guests at this event.

Please call PSO METCO reps. Connie Afshar (383-6006) or Jean Hajjar (383-9917) if you can attend or if you would like to know more about the METCO program.

Notre Dame Names AP Scholars

Sr. Barbara Barry, principal at Notre Dame Academy, Hingham, has announced that eight members of the Class of 1996 have been named AP Scholars by the College Board in recognition of their exceptional achievement on the college-level Advanced Placement Examinations.

Erin McCauley of Marshfield, Julie Bradley of Norwood, Meghan Field of Milton, Lisa Fuller of Abington, Claire Lutts of Quincy, Luiza Nanu of Weymouth, Demetra Pappas of Brockton and Mary Elizabeth Puzo of Hingham are being honored for scoring a three or above (out of a possible five) on AP exams in three different subjects. McCauley is being honored in four subjects.

Approximately 54 percent of America's graduating seniors have taken one or more AP Exams. Only about 12 percent of the more than 537,000 students who took the exams in May, 1996 performed at a sufficiently high level to merit such recognition.

Notre Dame has completed the installation of a Multimedia Language Learning Center, the only installation of its kind in New England.

All the students and teachers have computers in addition to cassette recorders and headsets to utilize word processing and CD-ROM Interactive programs.

Ultimately, once the school completes its campus network, Internet access will also be provided.

The system, which has been called the electronic classroom of the future, allows the teacher to view and listen to what any student is working on by simply touching the screen of the console.

The instructor may then take control of the student's computer keyboard and mouse to assist in problem areas. Students can be assigned an automated oral exam for the teacher to evaluate the student's oral proficiency.

Each student PC has a video card so that videotapes, laser discs, satellite TV and overhead video camera can be displayed on the student's computer monitors.

Merit Scholarship Semi-Finalist Named

Moira Slynne of Weymouth, a student at Notre Dame Academy, Hingham, has been named a National Merit Scholarship semi-finalist in the 1997 National Merit Scholarship Program. Only one-half of one percent of each state's graduating seniors become semi-finalists.

As a semi-finalist, Slynne enters the competition for a spot as one of the 14,000 finalists in the nation, and then will compete to become a National Merit Scholar. This year about 7,000 Merit Scholars will receive $27 million in scholarships.

Six other members of the Class of 1997 have been named commended students in the 1997 National Merit Scholarship Program. Karen Adams of Weymouth, Allison Bird of Scituate, Emily Brown of Whitman, Julie Catalano of Cohasset, Shannon O'Connell of Whitman and Allison Walsh of Weymouth placed among the top five percent of more than one million students who entered the 1997 Merit Program by taking the 1995 Preliminary SAT/National Merit Scholarship Qualifying Test. They are among 35,000 Commended Students throughout the nation being honored for their exceptional academic promise.

Skippers Tame the Bulldogs, 31-6

By Jim O'Sullivan
COHASSET MARINER

The Cohasset Skippers (1-5) triumphed over the visiting Holbrook Bulldogs, posting a 31-6 win.

Cohasset was led by senior running back Matt Belson on offense and a host of players on defense, most notably sophomore linebacker Justin Golden.

The boys in blue started the game with the ball on their own 30-yard line, and immediately Belson went to work, muscling for 11 yards and the first down.

An offsided penalty pushed the ball up to the 46-yard line and Belson's two-yard gain set up sophomore back Jamie DeMichele's 14-yard sprint for another first down.

Belson again went for 11 yards and the first down. Penalties drove the Skippers back 10 yards, but that only added to the drama, as Belson rushed for 14 yards, then rumbled his way for 23 yards into the end zone. The Skippers' conversion failed, but they were already ahead 6-0.

The all-purpose Belson kicked off after the score, then made the tackle with a bone-crushing hit along the sidelines at the Holbrook 36-yard line. Tackles by Golden, sophomore Mike Rossi, and junior John Kasameyer set up a Belson sack and the defense had forced a punt. Unfortunately, the kick was muffed and dived on by a Bulldog at the CHS 40.

No problem for the Skippers, though, as they got it right back when Sean Parkinson hopped on a Holbrook fumble at the Cohasset 32-yard line. Quarterback Pat Hurley wasted no time in firing a strike to junior end Jamie Buick, who made it to the 38-yard line. Belson followed Buick's catch with a 38-yard TD stroll, behind the strength of the hardworking Cohasset offensive line.

On the kickoff, sophomore Raheem Shepard hurtled down field to make the tackle at the Holbrook 30. Buick and senior Jerry Cogill combined to make a tackle and the Skipper defense once again forced a punt.

Belson sprinted to the Bulldog 45 and DeMichele ran off-tackle for six yards. Hurley scrambled seven yards for a first down. Shepard rolled 17 more for another first down. From the 19-yard line, Golden took the reverse and sped 19 yards into the end zone for the home team's third touchdown of the night. Kasameyer nailed the extra point kick and the Skippers were out in front 19-0.

Belson's kickoff sailed to the endzone and senior Jarred Batts made a hard hit and tackle at the 13. Once again, the Skipper defense forced a punt, giving the offense superb field position at their own 48. Golden gutted out 11 yards and a penalty, along with a DeMichele run, brought the Blue up to the Holbrook nine-yard line. Hurley connected with Buick once again, this time for six yards and a touchdown, making the score 25-0.

Shepard and Batts made the tackle on the kickoff and Cogill and Parkinson joined to make a nice hit on the Bulldog ball carrier. On the last play of the first half, Shepard ripped the ball loose and Golden made a heads-up play. Instead of merely diving on the fumble, Golden scooped it up and trotted 29 yards for the touchdown after time had expired, making the tally 31-0.

The second half started with Ben "Yoda" Ketchum skying to make the interception for the Skippers. However, Cohasset couldn't get moving and the home team punted for the first time all game.

Ketchum again made a big play on the next Holbrook series, knocking down a pass, and possibly saving a touchdown.

Sophomore defensive back Ben Roine did the same on the next play, leaping over both Holbrook receivers and other Cohasset defenders.

Luke Caldwell lowered the hammer on a Bulldog runner, forcing still another Holbrook punt, which sailed to the 45.

Freshman Joe Pergola bolted for 15 yards off left tackle but the Skippers could not get rolling and were forced to punt.

Andy "Mad Dog" Curran tore loose the pigskin from Holbrook, but the visitors recovered.

On the next play, Mike Kearney and Greg Parkinson, who played outstanding defense in the second half, made the tackle and Kearney, Shepard and Golden made the gang tackle, but the Bulldogs prevented the shutout on the next play.

Joe Guizzardi trucked six yards for the score, only to be stuffed by Ketchum on the two-point conversion.

Senior Doug Cameron twisted his way to the CHS 44 on the kickoff. However, the Skippers fumbled and the Bulldogs came up with the ball.

Pass coverage by Shepard, Roine and Ketchum kept the visitors out of the endzone and Ryan Goff fell on a fumble for the Skippers, giving them the ball back with time running down.

Freshman back Danny Mulligan took the reverse and bulled his way for nine yards, shedding tacklers left and right. The buoyant Skipper sideline, assured of victory now, started the "Mully! Mully!" chant and it soon spread to the stands. Shepard rushed for the first down and the first Skipper victory of the '96 season was in the books.

Belson's 129 yards on a mere eight carries gave him an astounding average of just above 16.1 yards per carry. The Cohasset coaching staff was ecstatic after the win, but realized that the Skippers still had work to do.

"The kids showed a lot of class tonight. It's been a long, tough season so far, but we held together and played well when it counted tonight," head coach Bob Knurek said after the game. "This gives us something to build on for the home stretch," noted coach Dave Terry.

One major aspect of the game which some spectators may have missed was the methods used by the Skipper coaches.

Increasingly, in both high school and college sports, teams (East Bridgewater springs to mind) leave their starters in well after the game has gotten out of hand, to run up the score, boosting their rankings in the polls and humiliating the opposing team.

On the contrary, the Skipper starters, particularly the upperclassmen, played sparingly the second half, as they already had established a commanding 31-0 lead.

Other coaches should follow this example and make a decision which is beneficial to not only the fans, but also the players on both sides of the field.

The Skippers displayed an ability Friday to dominate a football game with class, and should be more enthusiastically supported by the Cohasset fans. The next game is in Hanover at 5 p.m. Friday, Nov. 1.

The stadium flag is officially rasied for the first time during the dedication of Cohasset High's new Alumni Field.

Recreation Report

The Cohasset Recreation Department/Booster's Basketball registrations will be held for girls and boys in Grades 1-8 at town hall, Saturday, Nov. 9, from 9 to 11 a.m.

The fee for the program is $30. Checks should be made payable to Town of Cohasset, and the shirt fee charge is included in the fee.

Details on the basketball program will be available at registration. Games are played Saturdays, but not during any vacation periods in order to avoid conflicts.

The recreational basketball program is made available via the joint efforts of the Cohasset Basketball Boosters Club and the recreation department, providing youngsters with a teaching and recreational opportunity.

SKI LESSONS AT BLUE HILLS

The Cohasset Recreation Department will conduct Blue Hill Ski Lesson registration Thursday, Nov. 14, at the recreation office, Cohasset Town Hall, between 3 and 4 p.m. and again in the evening, from 5:30 to 6:30 p.m.

Registration forms must be signed by a parent or guardian for participation in this five-week program. Beginner through advanced level instruction is available for children and youth, seven years old and older. Lessons are scheduled to begin Thursday, Jan. 2, and meet for five consecutive weeks, through Thursday, Jan. 30.

The bus will leave each week from the town hall parking lot at 3:20 p.m. and return from Blue Hills at about 6:45 p.m.

The fee for the ski lessons and transportation for the five-weeks is $100 and checks should be made payable to

Local Team Shines in Dart League

By Jason Bouffard
COHASSET MARINER

Since our very beginnings, human beings have sought to be social. Our innate quest to belong is well-documented in every world history book.

The TV show "Cheers" was built on this premise — a group of people whose lives revolved around that place "where everybody knows your name."

For Bill Walker, Hingham's Varsity Club is a place where everybody knows his name.

Walker is a member of the world's largest dart league and co-captain of a team in the Minuteman Dart League South Shore division. He and his team, "Not A Problem," can be found on many Tuesday evenings waging their battles against opponents at the Varsity Club.

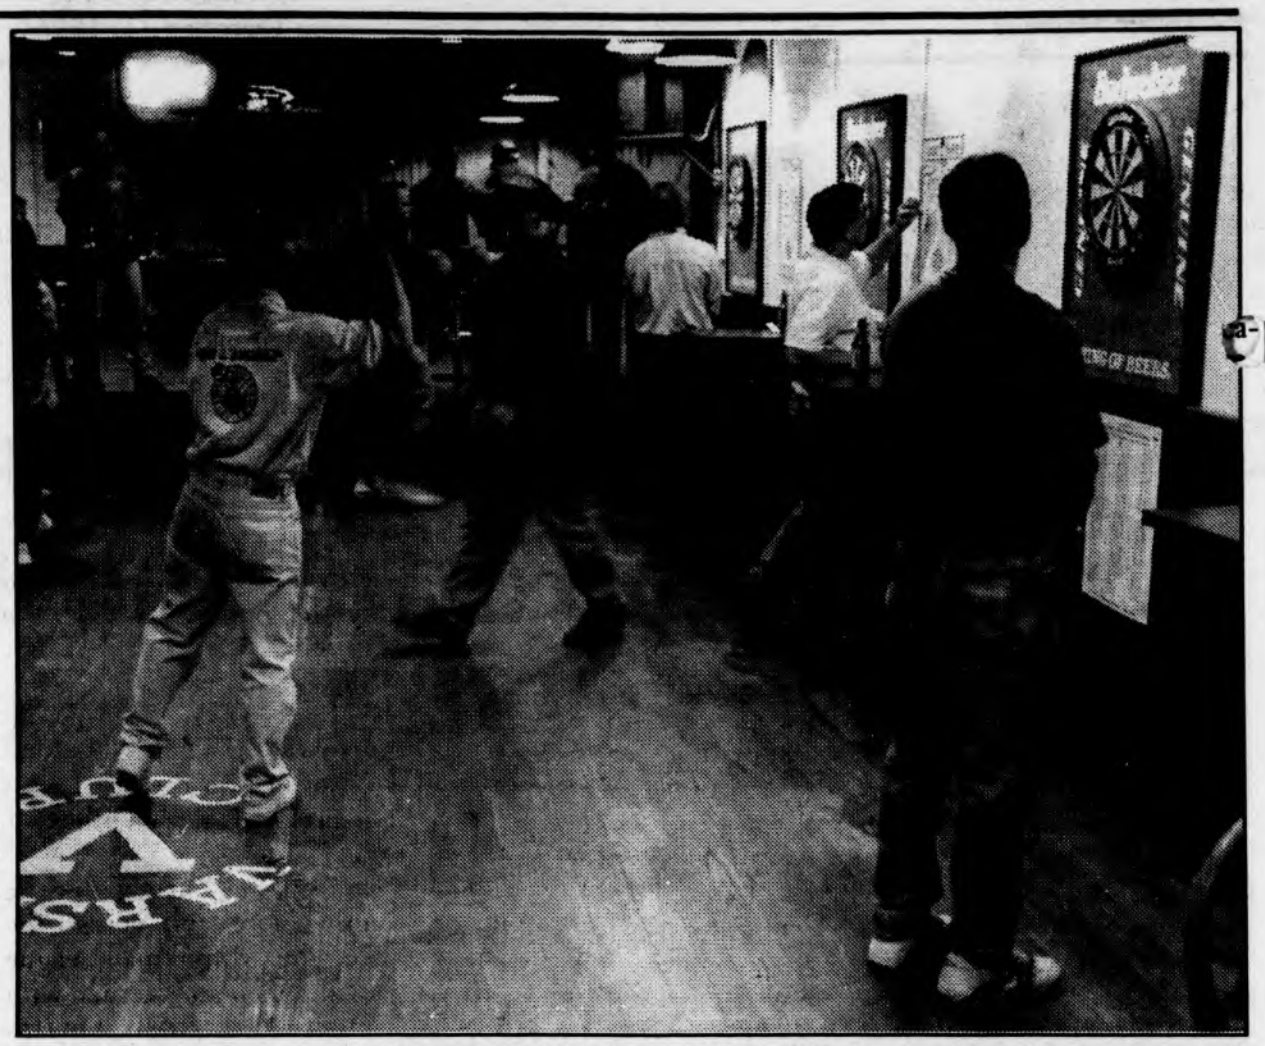
Since its inception in 1975, the Minuteman League has grown to encompass about 1,100 teams and approximately 10,000 players statewide. It was the social nature of the game that drew Walker and many others to join.

"It's a night out with the guys," Walker said, explaining the lure of the game. "It's a chance to get together with your friends and have some fun."

Make no mistake about it. The game is not to be taken lightly.

Walker and his teammates come from Hingham, Weymouth, and Braintree and travel from as far away as Cape Cod every season to compete for the state title. They practice religiously, and they're up against world-class competition.

Due to its sheer size, the league is divided into four divisions: South Shore, North Shore, Central and Boston. These are subdivided into several classes, depending on ability. The South Shore division's top teams compete in the Super A division. Next is the A division, then B, continuing down to I.



In the Dart League, Co-Captain Bill McNulty of the "Not a Problem" team fires off the first shot of the night during competition at the Varsity Club in Lincoln Plaza in Hingham.

When a friend invited Walker to throw his first dart six years ago, he soon found himself on a G division team in the Minuteman league. Within three seasons, he had vaulted ahead to the C division.

"I learned by getting beat by better players. I used to watch the way they played and try to copy it," Walker said. He also practiced five hours a day. Walker figures he has logged about 7, 000 or 8,000 hours in dart throwing over the past six years. Since he came into the league, he can recall missing only a handful of games. Now, not many players could threaten him.

This past spring, his team captured the A division championship. This fall, Not A Problem is vying for a Super A crown.

"I have very good eyesight," said Walker, who paints and hangs wallpaper for a living. "In my work, I have to be able to tell if something is a fraction of an inch off. I have to have good hand/eye coordination." Many of his teammates and opponents share the same background.

"On my team, I have a carpenter, a painter, a precision mechanic. . . . Most of us are in the trades," he said. Working professionally with their hands, they have developed the skills that a good dart player must master.

"People from all walks of life are playing the game, though," said Walker. He has competed against doctors, architects and lawyers as well as tradesmen.

Evidence of the widespread popularity of darts resides in the league's membership figures. In 1991, only about 6,000 or 7,000 players took apart in Minuteman league competition, Walker said, but after a substantial growth spurt between 1992 and 1994, the total membership has risen by about 3,000 to 4,000 players.

However, Dartmania is not confined to the jurisdiction of the Minuteman league. Numerous dart tournaments are held across the state and throughout the country every year. Walker said many of the league's top players enter the tournaments regularly.

Four major tournaments are held locally and draw worldwide competition. The New England Dart Challenge in January, the Firecracker Open in July and the Clipper City Tournament in early spring are all held at the Andover Marriott. The Witch City Open, a $30,000 tournament, is now held at Ferncraft Hotel in Danvers.

"Five or six of the guys on our team will go to the Witch," Walker said.

In August, John Finnegan and Jim Mulcurran, a pair of Super A Minuteman players whose home turf is at Holbrook's Dalton Post, won the open doubles cricket competition at the World Cup in Las Vegas. Finnegan is a two-year Irish National Champion.

Lesser tournaments are held as frequently as every other week in the spring and also draw a number of competitors. Many are held on Cape Cod.

For now, Walker is content to play at the Varsity Club, which his team has called home for two season, establishing a symbiotic relationship with the restaurant/bar. The Varsity Club pays the $100 league entrance fee every season for Not a Problem and the four other teams who play their home games there, which is a well-placed investment, according to Walker. The traffic brought in by the five dart teams more than covers the league expenses.

The teams have also helped establish a core of regular patrons at the Varsity Club. Walker estimates 30 or 40 percent of the crowd comes to the restaurant often, and that figure is even larger on weekends.

"It's a very tight, friendly atmosphere here. It's like a family," he said. In fact, when the Varsity Club expanded recently, Bill Walker did the painting.

Such is the nature of darts.

"There is a team from Cohasset," Walker said, "and they all live on the same road and have known each other for years."

In Cohasset, throughout the South Shore and across the state, the Minuteman league provides men and women with a source of comradery, a means to fulfill their basic need to socialize and a place to go where everyone knows your name.

ELM'S MEADOW SKATING AREA

The Cohasset Recreation Commission extends their most sincere gratitude to Paul Laugelle, Anthony Sestito and Harold Litchfield for their very kind donation of machines, effort and time cutting and cleaning out growth at the Elm's Meadow skating area at Spring Street and Cushing Road.

Each year it is necessary to cut and remove the considerable vegetation growth from the meadow in order to place boards in the Spring Street dam to collect water for freezing for ice skating.

Elm's Meadow is a lighted, shallow depth skating area available for winter ice skating to all residents.

Mr. Laugelle, Mr. Sestito and Mr. Litchfield, DPW Superintendent, are thanked for their day-long efforts Saturday, Oct. 19.

No Nonsense Tolerated on Halloween

Police Chief Brian Noonan said there will be two officers on bike patrol, one on foot patrol and at least three cruisers out tonight to keep a lid on any potential Halloween problems.

Police have spoken with local stores and asked them not to sell large quantities of eggs to youngsters.

Noonan said police will not put up with any "egging" incidents which have been a problem in past years.

He stressed that parents should talk with their children and be aware of where they are going and what they are up to.

Halloween Safety Tips Offered

Police Chief Brian Noonan provided the following safety tips established by the National Confectioners Association and the Chocolate Manufacturers Association to help make Halloween a safe and enjoyable day for trick-or-treaters:

- Wear light-colored clothing that's short enough to prevent tripping, and add reflective tape;
- Make sure children can see well through face masks, or use makeup;
- Adults should accompany young children;
- Go out in daylight and carry a flashlight in case of delay;
- Stay within the neighborhood and only visit homes familiar to the children;
- Watch for traffic;
- Only give and accept wrapped or packaged candy;
- Examine all candy before allowing children to eat it;
- Keep costumed children away from pets, who may not recognize the child and become frightened;
- Avoid hard plastic or wooden props such as daggers and swords; substitute with foam rubber, which is soft and flexible.

Route 3A Enforcement Up

Due to the increasing number of accidents at intersections along Route 3A, police are stepping up enforcement of red light violations and improper turns, Police Sgt. Robert Jackson said.

"There is a high incident rate of people going right through red lights," Jackson said. "I recommend people look both ways to ensure that everyone has stopped (before proceeding at an intersection).

"Drive defensively," he said.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS
THE TRIAL COURT
THE PROBATE AND FAMILY COURT
NORFOLK DIVISION
DOCKET NO. 96P2440E1

Estate of ELEANOR V. SOULE late of COHASSET In the County of NORFOLK

NOTICE

A petition has been presented in the above-captioned matter praying that the last will of said decedent be proved and allowed and that ELIZABETH ANN SOULE of COHASSET In the County of NORFOLK be appointed executrix named in the will without surety on the bond.

If you desire to object to the allowance of said petition, you or your attorney should file a written appearance in said Court at Dedham on or before 10:00 in the forenoon on November 27, 1996.

In addition you should file a written statement of objections to the petition, giving the specific grounds therefore, within thirty (30) days after the return day (or such other time as the Court, on motion with notice to the petitioner, may allow) in accordance with Probate Rule 16A.

Witness, David H. Kopelman, Esquire, First Justice of said Court at Dedham, this seventeenth day of October, one thousand nine hundred and ninety-six.

'Dracula' Performances Set

Cohasset Drama Club will present "Dracula" for theatergoers who enjoy thrills, surprises, shudders and sensations Nov. 1 and 2.

Two Cohasset residents are members of the cast, including Meredith O'Hayre as the Ghost Wife and Angi Walsh as Mrs. Fern.

Performances will be held at Cohasset Town Hall at 8 p.m. Tickets are $10 and may be purchased at Buttonwood Books in Cohasset or at the door on the night of the performance. The play, directed by Sally Wright, is an adaptation of Bram Stroker's "Dracula."

Poetry Reading at Library

Prize-winning poet and author Suzanne E. Berger will read her poetry and excerpts from her book, "Horizontal Woman," Wednesday, Nov. 6, at 7:30 p.m. at Paul Pratt Library, 106 South Main St.

Berger will discuss the story of the pain, rage, absurdity, hilarity, humiliation and gratitude experienced in the years following a "freak" back injury so severe that she was dramatically disabled and flat on her back for seven years.

Berger's uncle, Bruce Berger, also a prize-winning poet, will read some of his poetry. Known more widely for his prose, he has published tow books on the American Southwest as well as a collection of poetry. He has lived in a log cabin in Aspen, Colo., for the last 30 years.

The program is sponsored by Friends of the Cohasset Library. Refreshments will be served. For additional information, call 383-1348.

Plans for Village Fair Underway

The Cohasset Village Fair is coming Dec. 7. The book sale committee of St. Stephen's Church is already working on the annual feature of the fair. They welcome contributions of hardcover and paperback books in good condition, CDs, tapes and videos. Current textbooks and cooking, craft and gardening books are especially needed.

Materials may be left on the stage at Walton Rodgers Hall or inside the Parish Hall door marked "Church offices" Wednesdays and Thursdays from 8 to 11 a.m. and 2 to 4 p.m. For further information, call 383-6840.

Order Pies for Thanksgiving

The Appalachia Service Project, comprised of community student volunteers engaged in a home repair/home building ministry serving central Appalachia, will again be baking homemade pies and breads for its Thanksgiving fund raiser.

ASP volunteers will bake apple, pumpkin and pecan pies as well as cranberry and date nut breads. The price is $5 per loaf and $8 for apple and pumpkin pies and $9 for pecan pie.

Order forms will be available at local churches or by calling Second Congregational Church at 383-0345. Order deadline is Wednesday, Nov. 20. Pies and breads will be available for pick-up on Sunday, Nov. 24, from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. at Second Congregational Church or can be delivered that afternoon. ASP members appreciate the support of the community in their annual fund-raising endeavor and offer the following:

Hurrah for the Pumpkin Pie!

For a fine Thanksgiving treat,
One that's good and fun to eat,
Try a special kind of pie —
One whose price is not sky high!

Order now from ASP
And save yourself the misery
Of mixing, rolling, cutting and peeling
While your pressure hits the ceiling!

Get a pie while giving, too —
Pumpkin, apple or pecan will do!
This year we'll also bake your bread
To help you keep your masses fed.

These goodies are made with special care
By many teens who travel each year
To do some Appalachia home repairing
And give some hope to those despairing.

383-0345
Is the number to call to place an order.
Do it now and don't delay
So you can enjoy Thanksgiving Day!

Hummel Collection on Sale at Consignment Shop

A collection of unusual Hummel figurines are being offered for sale at the newly enlarged Cohasset Consignment shop, located on Route 3A, Cushing Plaza, Cohasset. The collection was donated by the owner to benefit the Social Service League of Cohasset, which offers counseling and support groups, Meals on Wheels and Keep Well Clinics for residents of Hingham, Hull, Scituate, Norwell and Cohasset.

Hummels are based on drawings made by a nun, Sister Maria Innocentia Hummel of Germany, which became a collecting "craze" following World War II as American soldiers stationed in Germany sent them home as gifts to family and friends.

A Hummel purchased for $10 in an Army PX in early 1960 soon multiplied in value 100 times or more. Hundreds of Hummel items have been made since the first was sold in 1935. In addition to figurines, there are plates, candleholders, ash trays, plaques, dinner bells, music boxes and dolls.

Manager Andy Merrill has announced the shop is open Monday through Saturday, from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m., and men and women are encouraged to volunteer for three-hour shifts to man the shop.

For further information, call 383-0687 or stop in to see the array of fall and winter clothing for all ages.

Lighthouse Lens to Come Home

By Mary Ford
COHASSET MARINER

The Replica on Government Island is about to acquire another authentic piece of Minot's Ledge Lighthouse.

The Coast Guard will loan Cohasset, what is believed to be the second lens used at the 145-year-old lighthouse, but insists the town insure it.

This week selectmen authorized paying the estimated $800

80 Percent Head to Polls

Local Voters Support Weld for Senate

By Mary Ford
COHASSET MARINER

If Cohasset voters had their way then Bill Weld would be on his way to Washington.

The governor lost his state-wide bid to unseat incumbent Sen. John Kerry but won big in Cohasset with 2,332 votes — to Kerry's 1,700.

In fact Weld got more votes than President Bill Clinton and Vice President Al Gore who received 2,012 votes to Bob Dole's and Jack Kemp's 1,759.

Town Clerk Marion Douglas said voting was steady all day. She predicted an 87 percent turnout but Tuesday's election drew 4,292 or just over 80 percent of the town's 5,351 registered voters to the polls.

Incumbent state Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray, a Cohasset resident, was the biggest vote-getter in town with 3,278. Nancy Buckley of Hingham, an anti-rail activist, who launched a sticker campaign to unseat Murray, received 160 write in votes in Cohasset.

Robert Delahunt, Jr. of Weymouth lost his bid to take the Plymouth & Norfolk District state senate seat away from Sen. Robert Hedlund. Cohasset voters gave Hedlund a resounding endorsement with 2,618 votes to Delahunt's 1,445.

Democrat William Delahunt won the 10th Congressional District seat now held by retiring U.S. Congressman Gerry Studds. Cohasset voters helped him along to victory with 2,051 votes to 1,845 cast for Republican challenger Edward Teague.

Douglas said the punch-ballot voting machines worked well. There were minor problems with stickers for Nancy Buckley

Turkey Hill Purchase Expands Green Belt

By Charlene Vandini
COHASSET MARINER

A year of work by two towns and three private conservation groups ended on a positive note last week, when Hingham and Cohasset learned they will receive almost $450,000 to purchase the 50 acres of undeveloped land at the top of Turkey Hill.

The Turkey Hill acquisition project began a year ago, when the Trustees of Reservations reached an agreement to buy the property from the heirs of Joseph Saponaro. The $810,000 price tag was estimated to be $100,000 less than the property's assessed valuation.

In April, Hingham's town meeting voted to spend $164,500 for the 30 acres of Turkey Hill on the Hingham side of the town line. Last week, Cohasset voters appropriated $125,000 for the 20 acres on its side of the town line, following through on its intention to do so, stated at its annual town meeting.

The Trustees of Reservations, the Hingham Land Conservation Trust, and the Cohasset Conservation Trust raised the balance of the purchase price, along with additional funds for "start-up costs" at the site.

More Open Space to Come

While conservation groups in Hingham and Cohasset are celebrating the recent purchase of the 50-acre Turkey Hill property, another parcel, adjacent to it, will eventually further expand the green space that straddles the town lines of Hingham and Cohasset.

Trustees of Reservation spokesman Tom Foster confirmed this week that an additional 82 acres will be turned over to the land preservation group upon the death of the owner.

Foster said artist Polly Thayer Starr has provided in her will for the Trustees of Reservations to inherit the Weir River Farm off East Street, which will expand the green belt of the 50 acres at Turkey Hill, the 800 acres of Whitney and Thayer Woods, and Wompatuck State Park's 2,900 acres, to remain open space in perpetuity.

Mrs. Starr was born and raised in Boston, but has used the Weir River

Cohasset's Week

Private Ways Board gets Charge

Selectmen agreed on a charge for the newly formed private ways committee this week.

The committee, whose next meeting is at 7:30 p.m., Nov. 13 at town hall, will review the inventory of non-accepted streets in town and determine the pros and cons of accepting streets as public ways.

The committee will also review the policy for maintaining and plowing streets and roads and recommend changes. It will also make a recommendation as to whether the condominium complexes, which request plowing, should be provided with this service and under what conditions. The committee will also meet with the sewer and water commissioners about installation of water and sewer mains on private ways.

The committee's first progress report is due Feb. 1.

Church Street Traffic a Concern

Martha C. Narten, 20 Church St., wrote to selectmen Oct. 29 to draw their attention to what she describes as "a dangerous situation that has arisen since the stop sign was installed on Doane Street at the intersection of Church."

She explained that drivers have figured out they can avoid the stop sign and pass slower moving vehicles heading down Doane by using Church Street.

"...if they go fast enough, they are able to beat the slower moving vehicle to the intersection and, in effect, pass them on the inside.

"Church Street, which in the past was used primarily by the residents, has turned into a mini-speedway," she wrote.

Marten said that one Sunday afternoon, she was involved in a collision while turning left into her own driveway when a driver attempted to pass her on the left.

"When I asked the other driver if he hadn't seen my directional light, he replied that he was watching the car on Doane Street."

She urged selectmen to put a stop sign on Church Street at the intersection with Doane.

Town Administrator Greg Doyon sent Mrs. Narten's letter to the police chief for his recommendations.

Salt Bid to be Awarded

Selectmen approved awarding the bid for salt to the Morton Salt Division of Morton International, which was the low bidder at $29.28 per town. Eastern Minerals, Inc., which bid $31.29 per ton will serve as back up.

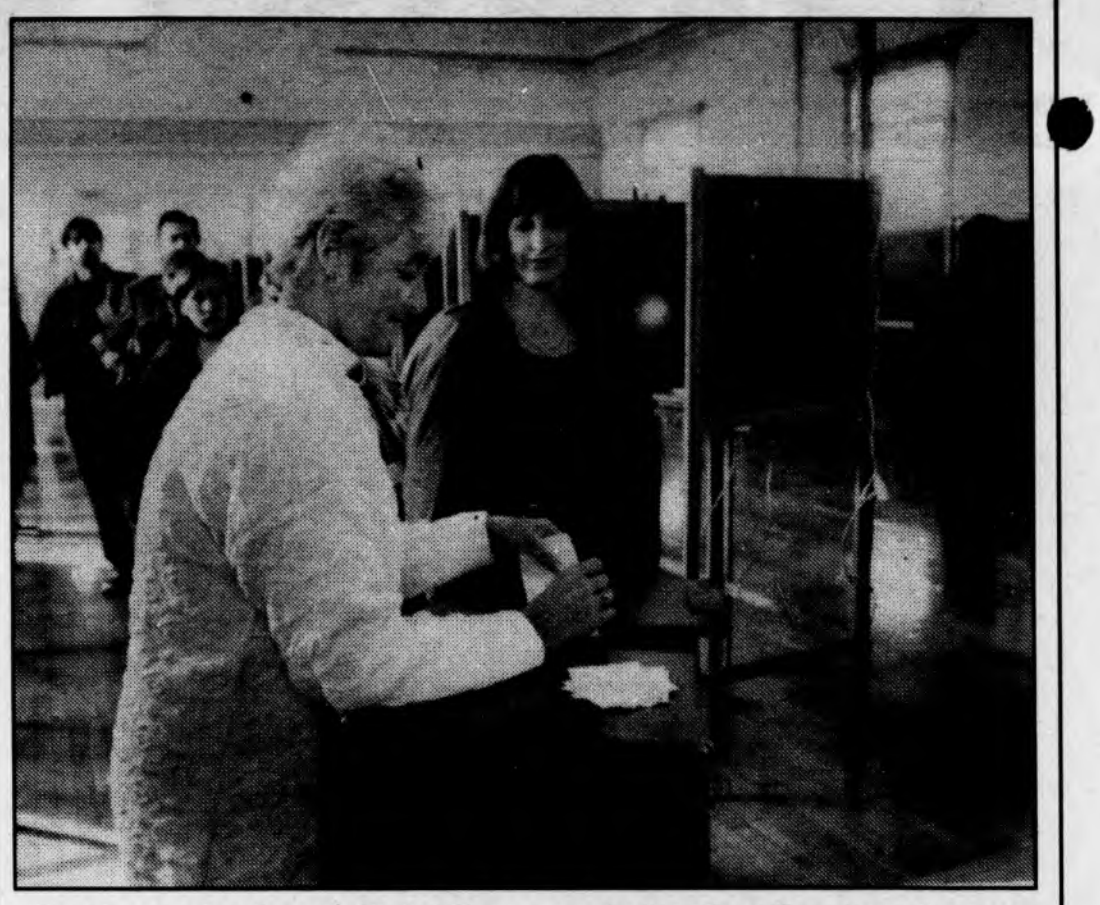
Town Administrator Gregory Doyon said the town will save more than $8 a ton over last year.

"Every year is different," he explained. "But maybe after a bad winter, there is more aggressive bidding."

Board Appointments are Made

Selectmen appointed Mary Goodwin, 196 Pond St., to the school facilities committee this week. They also appointed Barbara Dillon, 217 Jerusalem Rd., to the historical commission.

Selectmen are looking for volunteers to serve on the mosquito control committee and as an associate member of the conservation commission. Interested applicants should call the selectmen's office at 383-9900.



Election worker Jeanne McAuliffe accepts ballots from long line of voters at town hall on Tuesday. The turnout was just over 80 percent.

"HI, NEIGHBOR. HAVE YOU TRIED MY CHEESE?"

Cabot cheddar cheese, butter and other dairy foods are offered with pride by your nearby dairy farmers. The same farmers who, together, own the Cabot Creamery.

And what that means is, every time you buy a Cabot product, you're helping to support 192 family farms near you in Massachusetts and throughout the Northeast. You're helping to preserve a way of life that's been important here for generations. And you're getting some of the freshest, purest, best-tasting dairy products made anywhere.

Since 1919, your nearby farmers have been working this land, tending the herds and gathering their milk. And as long as you keep buying, sharing and enjoying Cabot products, they'll keep right on doing it.

"Advise Me, Mr. Grillo, How Often Should My Orientals Be Cleaned?"

The Simple answer is, you need to vacuum your rugs at least once a week and have them professionally cleaned every three to five years.
Cleaning not only brightens your rugs' colors but removes abrasive grit and the spilled foods that attract textile insects!
So it really protects the investment you've made in your rugs.
You'll find all this and more in my booklet on the care of Oriental rugs.
It's filled with important information you can use and it's yours for the asking.

Hedlund Wins Third Term As Senator

By Alice C. Coyle
COHASSET MARINER

Republican state Sen. Robert L. Hedlund soundly defeated Democratic challenger Robert Delahunt Jr. Tuesday night, winning a second consecutive term representing the Plymouth and Norfolk District and his third term overall.

Losing to Delahunt only in Braintree, Hedlund won by large margins in Cohasset, Duxbury, Hingham and Scituate; edged out his opponent by 400 votes in Hull; and carried all but one precinct in his hometown, Weymouth. The unofficial results show Hedlund with 42,804 votes or 57 percent and Delahunt with 31,797 or 43 percent.

In a race between two Weymouth residents, Hedlund claimed the bipartisan support he received throughout the eight-town district helped him prevail despite a campaign he called difficult and negative.

"I received a great deal of bipartisan support from the people who recognized that I would never put partisan interests before the people I represent," Hedlund said. "It was nice to win in a presidential year with a big turnout, when a lot of Republicans were losing elsewhere. I am honored to have won, though I was hurt and frustrated by the process this year. This was the most frustrating campaign I have ever participated in."

Delahunt, who said he was proud of the support he received from women and younger voters, added that he was not sure whether he would run for office again.

"We had a good campaign and received a lot of support from the people on the South Shore," campaign manager Claire Hughes said of the Norfolk assistant district attorney, whose cousin, Bill Delahunt, captured the 10th District Congressional seat that evening. "You will see more of Bob Delahunt in the future."

In 1990, the 35-year old Hedlund won his first bid for the state senate district, which spans from Weymouth to Duxbury, defeating former state Rep. Robert Ambler of Weymouth.

But in 1992, Hedlund was toppled by Brian McDonald, a former Weymouth selectman, in a very close election. Tying McDonald's victory to president-elect Bill Clinton's, Hedlund maintained that his opponent rode on Democratic coattails into the statehouse.

Hedlund, who served as deputy commissioner for the Massachusetts District Commission in between terms, won the senate seat back in 1994, narrowly defeating McDonald by fewer than 500 votes in an election re-match.

In his most recent term, Hedlund has emphasized his "bipartisan appeal" in working with Democratic and Republican legislators to reform the state's tough Title V regulations and bring financial relief to homeowners facing costly septic system upgrades.

On other regional issues, Hedlund, who opposes restoration of the Old Colony's Greenbush line, has strived to expand and bring more state funding for commuter boat services.

In the term ahead Hedlund said he will continue to work to improve regional transportation while helping communities grapple with Greenbush rail restoration.

"We'll see what shakes out with Greenbush," he said. "There's a lot of mitigation work that has to be done in all of the communities."

Campaign finance reform continues to be another major part of Hedlund's platform. An abortion opponent, Hedlund favors the death penalty.

Hedlund said he intends to continue his support for campaign reform, changes in educational funding formulas for charter schools, and reforms to Title V septic system regulations.

The Plymouth and Norfolk District comprises the towns of Cohasset, Duxbury, Hingham, Hull, Marshfield, Scituate, Weymouth and Braintree precincts 6, 7 and 9.

Staff reporters Steve Adams and Jason Bouffard contributed to this report.

being attached to the voting machines, she said. She explained that election warden Dom Baccari removed the stickers or disabled the voting machine if the sticker defaced the machine. All votes were counted by about 10 p.m. For complete results see page 12.

Police Sgt. Robert Jackson, who was on duty at the polls, said voters were orderly and patient all day.

Parking Restrictions Near Milliken Field

Parking problems on Saturday mornings and during night games at the high school prompted selectmen this week to restrict parking on Bancroft Way to one side of the road. They will also ask the safety officer to look into limiting parking along Bancroft Road (after Bancroft Lane) toward Pond Street and the possibility of painting lines on the parking area near the field so cars will park closer together. They will check with neighbors about the "striping" of the parking to see if they object on aesthetic grounds.

Selectman Ronnie McMorris said people should be encouraged to park in the high school lot and walk to the field. But Selectman Michael Sullivan said children's soccer schedules are just too hectic. He said many parents run from one child's game to another's which is on a different field. Asking parents to park and walk would be fruitless. "It will never happen," he said.

Murray Repels Challenge from Anti-rail Activist

By Alice C. Coyle
THE COHASSET MARINER

While Nancy Buckley's last-minute election bid fell short this week, she says her days of politicking are far from over.

"I feel the whole campaign was fantastic and I appreciated so much, all of the support I was given,"Buckley said. "I have to very seriously consider running in the future because people were so good to me."

A Hingham resident, a life-long Democrat and founder of the Coastal Coalition, a group opposing restoration of the Greenbush rail line, Buckley launched a sticker/write-in campaign in mid-October challenging long-time Republican state Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray. Buckley had done the same thing the night before September's primary to secure a place on the November election ballot but earned less than half of the 150 votes needed from voters in Hingham, Hull and Cohasset to do so.

Three weeks more campaigning for this election meant Buckley fared better at the polls on Tuesday, but not nearly well enough to unseat Murray.

Buckley earned 1,103 votes in Hingham, 138 in Hull and 160 in Cohasset for a total of 1,401. Murray racked up 8,136 votes in Hingham, 3,797 in Hull and 3,278 in Cohasset for a total of 15,211. Overall, 92 percent of the voters in the district chose Murray.

"I'm very pleased and very grateful to the people who came out and gave me their vote," Murray said.. "I appreciate the fact that my people know what I've been doing for the district."

Despite the loss, Buckley said running was a great experience and she hopes it has inspired others to get involved in politics.

Best known for her strong opposition to the Greenbush rail restoration project - an issue on which she and Murray see eye to eye — Buckley spoke out on several other issues during the campaign proving she does not have a one track mind. Buckley pointed to the differences between she and her opponent including their positions on the death penalty — Murray is in favor of it, Buckley opposes it; on assault weapons — Murray voted not to ban them, Buckley said she would, and on education reform — Murray voted against it, but Buckley said she supports the changes.

"I was amazed at the support and the reception I had from people when they learned my positions on issues other than the train," she said.

And while she may enter the political fray again, Buckley said she will never go the sticker/write-in route again.

Buckley called the election itself "an absolute logistics nightmare" and said various 'snafus' in the polling place likely cost her votes.

"I don't think the numbers reflect the support and the true voter intent," Buckley said.

In her home town of Hingham, Buckley said just three hours into the campaign she was asked to encourage her supporters to write in her name and to stop handing out stickers for voters to affix to their ballots because they were jamming the machines.

"Write ins always work better than stickers, due to the sensitivity of the optical scanner voting machines," said Assistant Town Clerk Lynn Baxter.

Despite the problems early in the day, Baxter said all of the ballots were counted correctly and the vote was not affected.

In Cohasset, where punch card ballots are used, Buckley said some voters put her stickers on top of Murray's name and by punching it registering votes for her opponent. But Cohasset Town Clerk Marion Douglas said the stickers were a minor problem and did not affect the vote count at all.

In Hull, which also uses punch card ballots, Buckley claimed voters were not provided with pencils in the voting booth to write in her name. After several voters leaving the polls told Buckley they would have voted for her but did not have a pencil in the booth, Buckley said she met with town clerk Janet Bennett to correct the situation. According to Buckley, Bennett said pencils were available to voters if they asked for them. After a phone call to the Secretary of State, Buckley said pencils were placed in each voting booth at 1:30.

"I lost six hours in the election in a town that returns the highest democratic vote in the state," said a frustrated Buckley.

But Bennett noted that not only were pencils available to the voters, but election crews cleaning up at the polls collected more than 150 Buckley stickers with the backing still on, indicating that some voters took the stickers into the booth but did not choose to vote for Buckley. Ballots on which stickers appeared, but Murray's name was punched were counted as blanks. The same applied when a voter affixed Buckley's sticker to the ballot envelope but punched Murray's name. Again, Bennett said she does not think the vote was affected.

Polling problems aside, Buckley said the spirit of the day itself was terrific.

"It was very exciting and I'm glad I did it," she said.

Taken aback by her last minute opposition, Murray said she took Buckley's challenge very seriously.

"I was concerned. You have to be concern when you have an opponent," said Murray, who had not faced opposition since 1988 when former Hull selectman John Silver launched a campaign challenge.

But even when she runs unopposed, Murray said she is amazed and humbled by the percentage of voters who come out and support her.

Making no predictions on whether or not she will run in 1998, Murray said one thing is clear —she loves her job.

"I thought I wasn't going to run four years ago. I thought I wasn't going to run two years ago. But I enjoy this. Helping my constituents is very important and very gratifying," she said.

New Intermittent Officer Possible

Pending approval from Hull, officer Christy Tarantino could be the town's new permanent intermittent police officer. Tarantino is an intermittent police officer in Hull and would need a lateral transfer to take the Cohasset position.

Police Chief Brian Noonan told selectmen Monday that an intermittent officer only works when there is an "allowable opening" such as filling in during situations such as vacations or academy attendance.

Noonan said Tarantino served as a seasonal police officer this summer and is "an excellent employee."

Selectman Peter Pratt praised Tarantino.

"Anytime I've asked his opinion, he has had a good pulse on youth problems. He'd be an asset to the force," Pratt said.

Turkey Hill

Included in those costs is razing a derelict barn that was once used for the Saponaro riding stable, and site clean-up at a former Nike missile installation.

Noting the importance of "maintaining a presence in a rather isolated spot," Tom Foster, spokesman for the Trustees, said the Turkey Hill farmhouse will be rehabilitated to provide a caretaker's residence.

Ultimately, if sufficient funds are raised, an observation platform could be built at the top of the hill.

"There's a great view [from the top of the hill]," he said. "But 20 feet up, it's a spectacular view."

Turkey Hill is one of the last coastal drumlins—a hill created by receding glaciers—on the South Shore. If offers a commanding view of the Boston skyline, the Worlds End reservation, and the Boston Harbor Islands. In an historical context, local residents gathered on the hill to watch a naval battle that took place off the coast of Scituate during the War of 1812.

Turkey Hill will expand the existing "green belt" that now includes the 800-acre Whitney and Thayer Woods and 2,900-acre Wompatuck State Park, and eventually the Weir River Farm's 82 acres which will be given to the Trustees of Reservations. [see related story.]

The towns will own the property, and the Trustees will manage it.

Once it is conveyed, Foster said a committee will be formed, with representatives of the two towns, the private conservation trusts, and the Trustees of Reservations, to oversee the property.

State Secretary of Environmental Affairs Trudy Coxe visited Turkey Hill in person last Thursday, to announce the grant awards.

Hingham and Cohasset were two of 80 communities that applied for a share of the $8 million pot. In all, the 80 communities submitted requests totalling $22 million.

"The demand for limited grant dollars was immense this year," Coxe said. "We wish we could fund them all. Protecting open space and making our park system second to none are top goals both an Environmental Affairs and for the Weld/Cellucci administration."

Officials in Cohasset and Hingham used words like "thrilled" and "overjoyed" to describe their feelings when notified that the towns were awarded the grant.

They also heaped praise on each other, noting the cooperation that existed with two towns and three private groups working in unison towards one goal. Although the awards were not announced until Thursday, Coxe's visit to Hingham provided a tantalizing hint.

Selectmen Chairman Merle Brown accepts the state grant to help pay for Turkey Hill last Thursday. Joining Brown for the ceremony at Turkey Hill are state Secretary of Environmental Affairs Trudy Coxe, Tom Foster of the Trustees of Reservations, and state Sen. Robert Hedlund.

"This partnership has been incredible," said Katherine Morrison president of the Hingham Land Conservation Trust. "There were several entities involved, but everyone was working towards one goal. This kind of partnership is the way to go."

Morrison said the Hingham group received 300 donations of varying amounts; Cohasset Conservation Trust raised $50,000, which was noteworthy for a smaller town, said Jack Hubbard of the Cohasset Conservation Trust.

Hubbard noted he was surprised by the unanimous vote at the special town meeting, to raise Cohasset's $125,000 share of the purchase price.

He noted that voters in that town have faced "money issues" for schools and sewers, which are projects that need regular repair and maintenance.

"But this is land, land, land," he said. "Once you've got it, it's there, and people know what fun and how valuable it is to have these resources."

Hubbard credited the Trustees of Reservations, which had the staff and the expertise to "take care of the details" which would have been difficult for volunteers in a small town.

"They're a well-respected group. They'll do a great job [managing the property]."

Cohasset faced the task of developing an open space plan, which was a requirement of the grant application.

Susan Cope, a member of the town's conservation commission and chairman of the open space committee, said the town's consultants were able to complete the project in a short amount of time and with a limited amount of money.

"This is the most fulfilling, rewarding, project I've ever worked on," she said.

She also noted that she saw a "ground swell of support" throughout Cohasset for the purchase of Turkey Hill. People who are usually very conservative in their views towards spending tax money embraced this project.

But without the state grant the project could not have gone through, she added. After a year of work, the grant ultimately turned on luck, when two other towns in contention for the funds dropped out, having found other sources for funds.

Morrison said no one realized until the last few days that the chances of the award to Cohasset and Hingham was "shaky."

"We never considered that we'd be turned down," she said.

Cope noted that she doubts that private donations could have been raised to make up the difference without the state grant, and it is unlikely the seller would have waited longer while more donations were solicited.

Morrison also said that wild turkeys have returned to Turkey Hill. A family of turkeys was recently spotted there, as if they know they can stay.

Farm as a seasonal residence for many years.

Her works are included in the permanent collections at several museums in New England and the northeast, including the Museum of Fine Arts in Boston; The Fogg Art Museum; the Boston Athenaeum, Harvard University, Brown University, and Williams College.

Mrs. Starr's works are being exhibited through Nov. 23 at the Copley Society of Boston's gallery at 158 Newbury Street.

According to information supplied by the Copley Society, the drawings, which have never been shown before, "span seven decades, illustrating her talent as a leading portrait artist, her deft hand with nature in landscapes and flowers, and her facility in rendering streetscenes and roofscapes."

Weir River Farm will remain privately owned by Mrs. Starr and is not open to the public at this time, Foster explained. Through a 20-year arrangement with her, the Trustees are able to store some equipment there, and manage the property for her.

"That's why Turkey Hill is so important," Foster said. "It's the last piece of the puzzle."

insurance premium on the Fresnel lens, valued at $175,000.

Town Administrator Gregory Doyon said the insurance cost can be absorbed this year and will be put in the budget for future years.

The Cohasset Historical Commission, a town board, has spearheaded the effort to construct the Replica on Government Island and lobbied the Coast Guard for a used lens.

After contacting the Coast Guard, historical commission member Hamilton Tewksbury was referred to Gail Fuller, who said one of the lenses from Minot's Light was available.

In August 1995, Tewksbury first raised the issue to selectmen, who at that time approved the loan agreement with the Coast Guard under the condition that the value of the lens be placed at $1.

Tewksbury told selectmen this week that after letters and phone calls over the past year to persuade the Coast Guard otherwise "the hitch is they want it insured."

This week, selectmen changed their tune.

"We tried everything. If we want it, we're going to have to bite the bullet and pay each year," said Selectmen Chairman Merle Brown.

Tewksbury and his fellow historical commission member Noel Ripley explained that the 4 ft. 8 ins. tall lens,, which has a diameter of 39 ins. and weighs 1,000 pounds, is about 3/5 complete. They said the missing sections can be filled in with aluminum or fabricated metal braces.

"The display which will be partially open due to the missing pieces will be a definite benefit to the individuals viewing the lens since they'll be able to see inside the lens..." Tewksbury wrote in a memo to selectmen.

In answering Selectman Nan Roth's concerns about vandalism, Ripley said there has not been a problem with vandalism in the five years the Replica has been on Government Island.

Ripley said the lens would cost $1 million if made today.

At one time Fresnel lenses, named after the French physicist A.J. Fresnel, were used in every lighthouse in the country.

Plans are to extend electrical service to the Replica so the light can be turned on. Ripley said a small light would be used which would not be offensive to Government Island neighbors.

The Minot's lens was found on a Coast Guard ship in New Bedford and is now stored in several boxes in Forestville, Maryland.

Tewksbury said the lens should arrive in about two weeks. He said the policy of the Coast Guard is to loan items and not give them away. He noted the granite blocks, used to construct the Replica, are still the property of the Coast Guard.

Selectmen Want Traffic Study Before Ruling Out Village Station

A majority of selectmen say they are not ready to vote on whether the train station should be in the village or out on Route 3A. They say they need a traffic study irregardless of where the station goes.

Selectmen Michael Sullivan, Nan Roth and Ronnie McMorris all say they want to wait for more information. Selectmen Peter Pratt and Merle Brown said the board must decide soon.

Despite the results of the straw poll, which favorted the Route 3A site, last week at town meeting, selectmen haven't abandoned the village station. They also want to know how much it will cost to do a traffic study before they authorize one.

Roth asked residents to call her and let her know how they feel about the station sites.

Pratt said he didn't want to impose a station site on the town that is unpopular. And Sullivan said the decision "is too important to be made in a vacuum."

The MBTA says it needs a decision by Dec. 1 and selectmen may ask for an extension of that deadline.

Police get Federal Grant

Selectmen accepted a $27,750 federal grant on behalf of the police department this week. The money will go to upgrade the department's computer system which can do photo imaging. It will also help with compiling data on crime scenes, serious accidents and all bookings among other benefits, Police Chief Brian Noonan said.

CRUISING FOR RUINS

It's been more than a thousand years since the Mayas ruled in south Mexico and Central America, but today's cruise industry has brought the wonders of that astonishing civilization back to life for modern visitors. A number of formerly remote sites in Mexico, Belize, Honduras, and Guatemala are now accessible, thanks to some ports of call that didn't even exist a few years ago. Many area cruises feature at least one excursion to a Mayan historical site. For travelers who want more, there are itineraries designed entirely around the exploration Mayan ruins and culture. In addition to well-known Mayan sites on the Yucatan Peninsula, travelers may be surprised by other temples and pyramids that can seem to appear out of nowhere, suddenly looming above the lush tropical forest. Mayan descendants often serve as guides.

Cruising is a wonderful, relaxing way to visit many exciting destinations on one trip. You don't need to pack and unpack between hotels, and meals are varied and plentiful. If you have chosen a cruise for your next adventure, whether to visit Mexico and Central America or to travel on other waterways of the world, come talk to our travel agents at SCITUATE HARBOR TRAVEL, 53 Cole Parkway, Scituate Harbor. You won't pay a fee for our services and you can hear all about our experiences. PH: 545-4281 or 800-354-2720.

HINT: The prime time for cruising the waters surrounding the lands of the Mayas is roughly November through March.

AROUND TOWN/Sallyann Chatterton

Marks and Leonards are Welcomed to Red Gate Lane

We are very lucky people on Red Gate Lane. We recently had two wonderful families move into the neighborhood! The Marks and Leonards are such a pleasant addition that Mimi (Chatterton) decided to give a tea in their honor and invite all the residents on the lane to attend. Well, let me tell you, it was a great way to have a chat and to get to know everyone better!

Mimi served dainty little tea sandwiches and platters of yummies. The whole thing was really a delight! As, may I add, were our two newest ladies. Hopefully I've given you a nice idea for new neighbors and/or all the dreary weather we have in store!

Oh, yes — a huge welcome to Kathy Marks and Sharon Leonard!

Happy birthday greetings to go Emily Coburn, who turned three-years-old recently. Emily is Ann and Roger's granddaughter, Tommy's sister and Jeannine and Tom's daughter (Jeannine is Roger and Ann's daughter). Got all of that? She is also Mimi's great-granddaughter.

Boy, does everybody miss Carousel Antiques, which has been closed since the flooding that took place during the recent heavy rainstorm. If only there was something we could do to help, Mandy and Tom, you know we'd all be there. At least take some small comfort in the fact that we all miss you and care.

Speaking of antiques, Beechwood Congregational Church held their annual antique show at Deer Hill School last weekend and it was really nice. All of the dealers were helpful and knowledgeable. Tons of oldies but goodies were there, and a grant time was had by all!

We give a standing ovation to Craigie Zildjian, who was appointed to the board of trustees of Berklee College of Music in Boston. Ms. Zildjian certainly knows lots about music. She is the general manager of the Avedis Zildjian Company, as well as vice chairman of the board of the company, which is a leader worldwide in the manufacture of percussion instruments. Ms. Zildjian's name is a big part of the business and musical world! Congratulations!

As the cold weather sets in for the winter, it is time to thank all the fall teams for their efforts this fall. Everyone loved seeing them under the lights of the Alumni Field, and every team got a chance to play under them.

All that is left now is football. The others have completed their seasons. Although no winning records can be recorded, each and every player is a winner in our books — be proud of yourselves and pat yourself on the back for all your hard work. Then go and see the football team for their last few games, and cheer like mad for them!

The CHS Class of 1962 is planning their 35th reunion, and Andrea (Murphy) Powning was in town last week, list in hand (the list came from Mary Jane Cotton in New Mexico), trying to locate several fellow classmates.

Here are a few of the names. Hopefully someone can help us locate them: Gail Carmody, Kathy Donovan, Mary Elizabeth Donovan, Ellen Galvin, Steve Gregg, Tim Porta and Nick Savage. Those are some of the names — we do have more, but we're working on them! The tentative plan is for the July 4th weekend. Plans are many, but none are really firmed up yet.

If you know the whereabouts of any of these class members, or know someone who does, could you please give me a call at 383-0560?

I've been asked to remind you that you don't have to spend lots of your precious time baking pies for Thanksgiving this year. The Appalachia Service Project will do the baking for you! ASP volunteers will bake apple, pecan and pumpkin pies, as well as date and cranberry nut breads. The price is $5 for a loaf of delicious bread, $8 for apple and pumpkin pies and $9 for pecan. Nov. 20 is the order deadline, and order forms may be found in local churches or by calling Second Congregational Church at 383-0345.

We ordered the pies and breads last year and they were yummy! And so pretty to look at! Such a worthy cause!

That's the news for this week. Hopefully now that the weather is colder there will be more time to be indoors, thus more time for you to give me a call with all your latest news!

Weddings

Flaherty/Bowen

Mr. and Mrs. Scott F. Flaherty

Courtney Kathleen Bowen and Scott Francis Flaherty were married at Memorial Chapel, University of Maryland, in College Park, Maryland. She is the daughter of Mrs. Eileen Stone of Myersville, Maryland and the late Mr. Michael Bowen. Mrs. Flaherty is employed as property manager for Avalon Properties in Rockville, Maryland. The bridegroom is the son of William and Maureen Flaherty of Cohasset. He is a C.P.A. with the firm of Rubino and McGeehan in Bethesda, Maryland. Both the bride and groom graduated from Syracuse University. The couple will live in Germantown, Maryland, following a trip to Saint Lucia.

Bailey/Manchester

Sarah Gardner Manchester, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Eli Manchester of Cohasset and Davidson, N.C., was married to Dr. Earle Duff Bailey, son of Mrs. Edward Clark Bailey of North Olmsted, Ohio, and the late Mr. Bailey. The Rev. Bruce Jenneker, an Episcopal minister, officiated at Trinity Church in Boston.

The bride graduated from Milton Academy and Dartmouth College and received a degree of doctor of law from Cornell Law School. She is an associate in corporate law at Ropes and Gray, Boston.

Her father is chief executive officer of Kewaunee Scientific Corporation, a manufacturer of equipment for scientific laboratories. Her mother is a gallery instructor in the education department of the Museum of Fine Arts, Boston.

Dr. Bailey, who is known as Duff, graduated from University of Michigan and University of Michigan Medical School. He is a psychiatrist at Massachusetts General Hospital and Brigham and Women's Hospital, Boston, and has a private practice.

Social Service League Offers Help

Cohasset Social Service League, founded in 1912, wishes to remind residents and newcomers to town of the services it provides. Counseling and support groups are led by professional social worker Patricia Carleton, LICSW, whose confidential service include individual, family, geriatric, marital, teen and grief counseling, advocacy and referrals. Office and home visits are available.

Meals on Wheels volunteers deliver hot, nutritionally balanced meals provided by South Shore Elder Services at a reasonable price to qualified residents five days a week.

Nursing services are provided by Public Health Nurse Judy Fitzsimmons, RN, under the direction of Cohasset Board of Health. Services include lead screening, blood pressure monitoring, home visits, immunization clinics for flu and pneumonia, cancer screening clinics; and consultations on general health, diet and medication.

"Keep Well" clinics are held each month at Harborview senior housing on the first Friday of the month, from 10 a.m. to noon.

There is a senior luncheon on the second Tuesday at the Senior Center from 11 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. Walk-in nursing hours at SSL offices, 16 Highland Ave. (at St. Stephen's Church) are Monday, Wednesday and Friday from 8:30 to 9:30 a.m. and 12:30 to 1:30 p.m.

Cohasset Consignment Shop at Shaw's Plaza is operated solely to benefit the SSL. New volunteer workers and consignors are welcome. Call 383-0687 for details.

The Social Service League also compiles a list of emergency telephone numbers, which may be found on page 157 of the Rotary Club Cohasset phone directory. For more information about the League and its services or to volunteer, call the SSL office at 383-0771 or 383-0821.

EDITORIALS & OPINIONS

Appalling

In our book, this Halloween will go down as one of the most appalling in memory.

Cohasset police officers, who were out on patrol trying to do their jobs that night, were the target of hordes of local teenagers armed with dozens of eggs.

Chief Brian Noonan said more than $100 in police equipment was ruined.

The two officers on bicycle patrol got the worst of it. As they tried to control one group of masked, costume-glad youths – another herd would attack from a different direction.

The Chief said there were upwards of 100 teenagers from Cohasset Jr./Sr. High and area private schools in the Village. They roamed in packs of 20 to 30.

Early last week, police contacted local grocery and convenience store managers and asked them not to sell large quantities of eggs to youths. The stores tried to comply, but if the crafty teenagers were unsuccessful in Cohasset — they either went out of town or bought the eggs on the "black market" for $5 a dozen.

The Chief, who described the incident as "discouraging," said the situation was so out of control that arrests were impossible.

"What upset me so much is the lack of respect for the police officers," Chief Noonan said.

He showed the Mariner a photograph of bicycle patrol Officer Christy Tarantino, who had been pelted repeatedly and was covered from head to toe with broken eggs. Officer Rick Yocum, on bike patrol, was also attacked as were the three cruisers.

The Chief said the officers' nylon belts and pants were ruined and their weapons had to be stripped down and oiled.

Chief Noonan put on extra patrols both on bikes and in cruisers that night to make sure that property was protected, especially in Cohasset Village where there have been problems in the past.

He said police were successful in protecting the businesses, which took a beating last year.

At Monday's board meeting, while selectmen praised police for their efforts to protect property at Monday's board meeting — it's too bad they didn't express outrage over the "eggings."

We hope that someone out there in Cohasset is as bothered about this incident as the police are.

It is apparent to us that the teens involved have no regard for authority figures. It is also clear that their parents either don't know or don't care what their children are up to.

What happened here goes much deeper than Halloween pranks. And no simply apology will make up for the damage done.

"This is not a joke, it is not something we'll put up with," the chief said.

"It is a parental problem. Parents have to understand they must take responsibility for their kids and the things they do — whether they want to take responsibility or not."

So we ask you — did you know where your kids were on Halloween?

If they took part in the egg raid — then it's time you sat down with them and went over the basics. We suggest you start with the difference between right and wrong.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Parents, Children Need to Discuss AIDS

To the Editor:

The Cohasset Mariner article entitled "Student Survey Concerns Parents, Educators" (June 20) is the basis for this letter. The data in that article dealt with percentages of students involved with alcohol, marijuana, thoughts of suicide, carrying of weapons and sexual intercourse.

The first four of these problems can probably be helped through reasoning, medical treatment, legal constraints, and supportive counseling. Sexual intercourse, however, especially when engaged in without protection, can have much more serious consequences. In those instances where the Human Immunodeficiency Virus (HIV) has been transmitted, the future is most uncertain, since there is as yet no known cure for Acquired Immunodeficiency Syndrome (AIDS), and no preventive vaccine seems to be forthcoming in this century.

A recent one-page advertisement in the N.Y. Times Magazine (6/2/96) by the Henry J. Kaiser Family Foundation states in part, "Parents say what they want most is help talking with their children about AIDS prevention." It is this very point which I believe will be most effective in helping to avoid the tragedy of HIV infection. Young people, whether in grades 7 through 12 or slightly older, may not tolerate being "lectured to" about the dangers of AIDS, but they might be willing to discuss with their parents, relatives, or friends, basic biological information about HIV as it relates to AIDS.

The HIV-AIDS story is going to be with us for a long time. Remarkable advances in this field are currently being made on all fronts of knowledge concerning the viral agent, treatment, etc. It is both a story of great human experience and scientific accomplishments. Parents, regardless of their scientific background, who are informed about the "basics" are better prepared to gain the respect and attention of their children. Such information can be presented in a manner which permits understanding with a modicum of technical scientific terms. Our leading newspapers, magazines, and TV programs manage to do this quite regularly. Understanding some of the fundamental scientific facts would permit parents and grandparents not only to talk with young people about the HIV-AIDS situation, but also to follow the advances in this field as reported in the media.

Thanks for Halloween Fair Support

To the Editor:

For nearly 20 years the Halloween Fair on the Common has been both a fall tradition and the major fund raising effort for the South Shore Community Center Nursery School. Since becoming the school's director I've delighted each year in seeing the children in their costumes parade around the Common behind our favorite friendly witch, and enjoyed watching their delight as they mastered the various games.

Each year's fair requires a small army of parents and nursery school supporters to plan and staff. And each year the fair has grown bigger, better and more successful. This year's fair has been our most successful one yet and I was overwhelmed by the support and generosity of this area's businesses, parents and students. Many, many thanks are due to Quickava, Kinnealey Meats, The Silver Spoon and The Village Greenery for their generous donations. Equally, I owe much to area residents who shared or donated materials for the various activities and to Cohasset's Osgood, Deer Hill and Junior and Senior High students who helped staff the fair.

And finally, thanks to our nursery school parent volunteers for their time and tireless energy on behalf of the school and to all the families who each year make the Halloween Fair on the Common a part of their Halloween celebration. The funds we raise annually do much to help in the raising our village's children.

Reader Survey question for Nov. 7, 1996

A large mob of unruly youths pelted Cohasset Police bicycle patrol officers and cruisers with eggs in the village on Halloween.

How serious do you believe this behavior is?

Press 1 It's no big deal. It was just a Halloween prank. The Chief of Police is over-reacting.

Press 2 This is indicative of a large problem showing the breakdown of respect for authority and lack of parental discipline and supervision.

Press 3 While this was a Halloween prank, it could have gotten out of hand, resulting in vandalism and injuries. This behavior should not be taken lightly.

All responses to this week's question must be received by 12 o'clock noon on Tuesday Nov. 12.

Our readers are invited to record a brief comment after registering their responses to this week's question. Please speak clearly. We will print as many responses as space permits, but we reserve the right to edit any lengthy comments.

Results of Reader Survey question for October 31, 1996

Cohasset High School peer counselors, who are juniors and seniors, disposed of marijuana that several 9th-graders brought to a school-sponsored camp last month. They did not immediately tell the teachers and will not reveal the names of the freshmen involved.

Did the peer counselors do the right thing?

Yes	26
No	17

Your comments:

I'm a parent in Cohasset school system. I feel that this is not an issue of trust as the ninth graders did not confide in the peer counselors. They were caught red-handed by the peer counselors, and so they had the obligation of telling on the kids. It's a matter of honor to tell on the kids. It should not be a code of silence. They were caught in the act of doing something illegal. They were not confided to.

I believe the peer counselors were given the impression of being supervisors or chaperones on the trip and parents have that expectation of them. However, given the fact that they're not doing that, but are friends of the ninth graders in question, I think the next time we will not count on the peer counselors or chaperones, but simply other kids on the trip.

I'm a parent of one of the peer counselors and we've had a lot of discussion about this issue. There are some things they could've done differently, and they now know this. But there are two points I want to make.

They were never trained for anything like this, and they should not be expected to be policing the ninth graders, and there should have enough adults along to do this for them. They were there to be counselors which is very different.

At this point, after many discussions with the schools, not one administrator has suggested what they should have done differently. I think that's very interesting. These same students in meetings have asked 'what should we have done,' there has been no answer.

Nor has anyone asked them who the students were. Statements are made over and over again that they won't tell. I think they said that at one point in time but no one has ever asked again.

I think the peer counselors did the right thing.

The whole field trip was about trust and I think the peer counselors did the right thing because kept the trust and they stuck with their promise.

It seems to me that the peer counselors need to be better trained. There should be over-riding situations where they need to report to adults. Trust is an important thing, but when there are over-riding health or physical issues that are dangerous, those need to be reported. I think drugs and alcohol are in that category. I think drugs and alcohol should be dealt with by adults not by other teenagers. Those rules should be clearly set out for the peer counselors and the other kids.

I also heard a rumor that they're canceling future trips because of this incident. I think that's throwing the baby out with the bathwater. The whole class shouldn't be punished for this and kids need to have opportunities to deal with these environments. You don't just restrict their access to field trips. You try to do it better next time. If they are canceling the trip, I think that's a terrible mistake.

Survey

Turning the kids in hasn't gotten us anywhere. It's time to take a new approach. The counselors did what they thought was in the best interest of the children involved. I do think that has a better impact on them than on turning them in.

I think the peer counselors are to be commended for their very understanding way of handling this situation. I'm very proud of them.

The students who are the peer counselors have to build the trust of the younger ones, which is what is going to make the peer counselors effective. They're almost right up there on privacy issues with social workers. This might be too much responsibility to put on a teenager, but a younger teen will listen to an older teen much sooner than they will listen to an adult. Whoever doesn't believe that is seriously deluded.

The only ones who bonded on the trip were the ninth grade pot-heads and the peer counselors. Good work, Cohasset High School.

I think the peer counselors did the right thing because the entire trip was based on trust and if the peer counselors had told the teachers they would've broken that trust and been complete hypocrites.

I think this whole thing is a bunch of crap, and it makes no sense because there's one person who brought the marijuana on the trip. It was only one person, and now it's bringing down our whole grade.

I think they did the right thing.

I think this is ridiculous because people are saying there were "several" kids, but it was only one kid, and it's bringing down the whole freshmen class.

I find it difficult to believe that the adults who trained the peer counselors did not even mention that the taking, selling, or distributing drugs is a criminal offense. If that's their excuse, there are the media. Do these peer counselors live in an information vacuum? Breaking the law and getting away with concerning an illegal substance today, tomorrow what law will be broken?

Scam target: retirement money

Do some detective work before you invest your hard-earned cash

By the editors of Worth Magazine

During his career as an insurance-marketing rep, John Keeler, 67, switched jobs so many times that he never had a chance to build up much in the way of retirement savings. So when he stumbled upon First Pension Corp., based in Irvine, Calif., he thought he'd found a great way to make up for lost time. Here was a company that offered to set him up in limited partnerships investing in pools of mortgages — and purported to earn between 13 and 28 percent a year. The company had splashy brochures and a 14-year track record. Keeler plunked down $6,000 in savings.

YOUR MONEY'S WORTH

On April 22, 1994, First Pension filed for bankruptcy. Three weeks later, the Securities and Exchange Commission sued the company, charging that its officers had defrauded investors out of some $124 million through an elaborate pyramid scheme. Instead of investing incoming funds in new mortgages, regulators alleged, company president William Cooper and his associates used at least some of the money to pay off old investors. The company operated a network of 218 partnerships, though it actually owned just 17 properties. Regulators also said Keeler and 9,000 other First Pension investors — some with more than $100,000 at stake — are now awaiting the outcome of bankruptcy and legal proceedings to learn if they'll be able to recoup any of their money.

The saga of First Pension underscores the importance of checking out the administrator of a retirement plan carefully before committing any funds. It also highlights the perils of "direct participation" programs, where the company administering a retirement account is also a company that sells investment products.

"This is a perfect area (in which) to commit fraud," says Lisa Gok, assistant regional administrator with the SEC in Los Angeles. The reason is that investors in retirement accounts plan on keeping their money in the same place for a long time; if con artists take it, the investors may not even realize it's gone.

Most retirement-plan administrators, of course, are legitimate, and their direct-participation programs pose minimal risks. Big mutual fund companies like Vanguard, Fidelity, and T. Rowe Price, and brokerages like Charles Schwab and Merrill Lynch regularly sell their own mutual funds and help clients set up retirement accounts. But even with these trusted companies, it's a good idea to check with local securities regulators for evidence of any problems.

'This is the perfect area (in which) to commit fraud.'
Lisa Gok, assistant regional administrator with the SEC

Investors who investigated closely would have turned up several danger signs at First Pension. One clear warning was interlocking ownership with other entities. The same people who owned First Pension also owned Vestcorp, the company that sold the partnerships. In 1992, the National Association of Securities Dealers fined Vestcorp $7,500 for, among other things, not disclosing its relationship with First Pension and improperly withdrawing funds from escrow. In addition, Cooper, a politically connected real estate developer, was president of three different firms that acted as general partner for some of the limited partnerships. Cooper also was affiliated with the custodian bank that acted as trustee for the funds.

More red flags: The investments were unregistered. By limiting the number of investors in each partnership to 35, the company was able to sidestep state disclosure requirements about the properties. These investments also failed the too-good-to-be-true test: With past returns of up to 28 percent, the partnerships were doing too well, considering that the real estate market in southern California was in the tank. "You've got to ask yourself if the performance makes sense," says the SEC's Gok. Regulators now believe that promoters were using incoming funds to make their numbers.

If someone wants to commit fraud, it's difficult to detect. But there are ways to protect yourself.

Read the prospectus and offering materials, particularly sections that discuss risk factors and conflicts of interest. If this information is not disclosed, as in the case of First Pension, ask for it. If you can't get answers that way, look for another place to put your money.

Offering materials should also provide detailed information on how your funds are being invested. When his documents didn't identify specific mortgages, Gordon Reiter, a retired aerospace engineer from Torrance, Calif, who had invested in excess of $100.000 in Vestcorp partnerships, contacted Cooper to ask if he could get more information about the properties in question. Cooper brushed him off, saying that he had to protect the property owners' confidentiality. "Looking back, I should have pressed him," Reiter says. Steven Gourley, a Los Angeles attorney who was a state regulator in the 1980s, recommends asking to see evidence of hard assets in a limited partnership — appraisals, who owns the properties, and what their payment record is, for example.

Check with regulators. You can often investigate operators of even unregistered securities if they're licensed with other agencies. For example, Vestcorp and First Pension dealt in real estate. California's Department of Corporations had no records of disciplinary action against Cooper or his companies, but the state Department of Real Estate revoked Cooper's license in early 1984 for misappropriating $577,000 in investor funds.

If you can't get your money out of an investment within a reasonable period of time, report it to the Department of Labor. The SEC has received letters from investors who tried to withdraw their funds from Vestcorp partnerships in 1984 and 1985, and were put off by First Pension. At the same time, the investors continued to receive phony statements showing that their principal was growing each year. The SEC believes this trick was designed to keep them from pulling out their funds. It should never take you more than a couple of months to transfer funds out of a pension plan.

This may seem like a lot of sleuthing, but as investors with First Pension have learned, the price of not doing your homework can be steep.

Kindergartners Mix with Older DHS Students

This past summer, a decision was made to have kindergarten students attend school at Deer Hill School due to overcrowding at Joseph Osgood School. For many years, only students in grades 4, 5 and 6 attended Deer Hill.

How is it working out? Sixth-grader Shawn Sullivan said, "Last year all the students were noisy in the hallway, but this year the older kids are being more considerate so the kindergarten kids can learn."

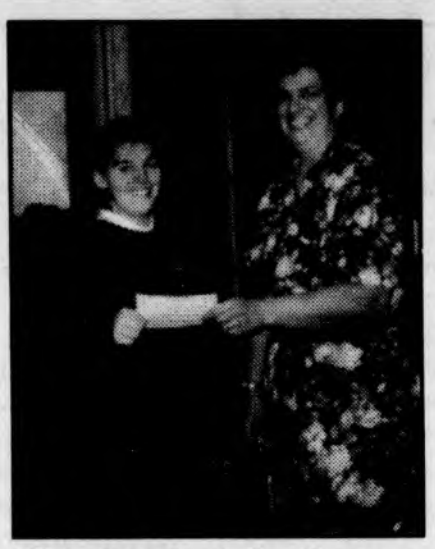
According to Malcolm Stansell, a fifth-grade student, "I like having the kindergarten here because you get to see the little kids walking down the hall."

Rachael Judge commented, "I am happy that the kindergarten students are here because I'm looking forward to reading to them."

When the new school is built, the kindergarten students will be going to that school. Until then, DHS's staff and students are enjoying their new residents.

Slynne Named Merit Scholarship Semi-finalist

Moira Slynne of Weymouth, who attends Notre Dame Academy, Hingham, has been named a National Merit Scholarship semi-finalist in the 1997 National Merit Scholarship Program. Only one-half of one percent of each state's graduating seniors become semi-finalists. Slynne enters the completion for a spot as one of the 14,000 finalists in the nation and then will compete to become a National Merit Scholar.



NDA Principal Sr. Barbara Barry, SND, presents senior Julie Catalano of Cohasset with a certificate for being named Commended Student in the 1997 National Merit Scholarship Program.

Julie Catalano of Cohasset was named Commended Student in program. She is among 35,000 Commended Students throughout the nation being honored for exceptional academic promise.

Buy Wreaths to Support METCO

The Cohasset METCO Committee has embarked on a fund raiser this year. The group will be selling 22-inch double-faced balsam Christmas wreaths, supplied by growers who furnish fashionable nurseries. The cost is $8.

A limited number of "kissing balls" will also be sold, and both items will be available for pick-up at Cohasset High School Saturday, Dec. 7. Decorative handmade bows will also be available.

Watch for order forms in the school menus or call METCO coordinators Connie Afshar (383-6006) or Jean Hajjar (383-9917) to place an order.

PSO Annual Fall Fund-raiser

An evening event not is miss occurs on Friday, Nov. 22 when the Cohasset PSO will host its annual fall fund-raiser. The highlight of the evening is a fabulous selection of auction items, such as, a Nantucket cottage, holiday gifts, children's computers, many restaurant coupons, sports tickets, a tennis party and more. Music will be provided by well-known musician and D.J. David Becker. The event will take place from 7:30 to 11:30 p.m. and will feature hors d'oeuvres and a cash bar. The Cohasset PSO encourages all to come and have fun while raising money for our schools.

DRUG FACT

"The United States, according to a report issued by the United States Select Committee on Narcotics Abuse and Control, is now the most pervasive drug abusing nation in history, and marijuana is our most pervasive drug of abuse."

TOWN OF COHASSET, MA
COHASSET SEWER COMMISSION
ATTENTION
COHASSET RESIDENTS
IN THE STRAITS POND AREA

Dear Cohasset Resident:

In accordance with Articles 4 and 5 of the March 30, 1996 Special Town Meeting, the Cohasset Sewer Commission has been directed to implement the design and construction of the North Cohasset Sewer System including its interconnection to the Town of Hull. Tutela Engineering Associates, Inc. has been retained by the Sewer Commission to facilitate the acquisition of required easements. In order to adequately construct the wastewater collection system and individual service connections, Tutela Engineering will be visiting property owners of the proposed North Cohasset Sewer System over the next several weeks to confirm an acceptable location for individual service connections and to prepare and execute all permanent easements required for construction. To aid the homeowner in the execution of the required easements, a Notary Public will accompany Tutela Engineering representatives to properly notarize the signature(s) of the appropriate homeowner for the permanent sewer easements.

Your cooperation with these efforts would be greatly appreciated. The easements are required to provide the homeowner with sewer service. State funding will not be available to sites without properly executed easements.

If you have any questions relative to this matter or you wish to schedule a site visit, please contact Mr. Daniel Coughlin, P.E., of Tutela Engineering Associates, Inc. at (508) 658-7493.

Thank you for your cooperation
Edward M. Guild, Chairman

Indians Drop Struggling Skippers

By Jim O'Sullivan
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

The Hanover Indians romped over the Cohasset Skippers last week, dispatching them 47-0. However, the Skippers outclassed their hosts, playing with heart and style. On the other hand, the home team exhibited an obnoxious personality, running up the score and calling unneeded passing plays and two-point conversions throughout the game.

Justin Golden was a highlight for the Skippers, particularly as outside linebacker, and he started the game by running the kick back to the 27-yard line. The offense couldn't move, however, and was forced to punt. Doug Cameron made a tackle and Golden stripped a Hanover ballcarrier, falling on the ball, only to have possession rewarded to the Indians in a very questionable call. Chris Magoun scooted for the first down before being brought down by Jerry Cogill and Sean Parkinson.

Matt Belson wrestled Mike Kenny to the ground, but Kenny scored on the next play from nine yards out. The Indian extra point made it 7-0.

Jamie DeMichele carried the kickoff to the 30 and Belson took the first down carry for three yards, then to the 41 for a first on the next play. Quarterback Pat Hurley fired a strike to Jamie Buick for a first down at the Hanover 35-yard line. Golden sprinted a reverse around end for a five-yard gain, but, despite keepers by Hurley, the Skippers could not gain a first and turned over on downs.

Magoun took a handoff for 60 yards to the CHS 22, where he was taken down by Mike Rossi and Adam Sasso. Rossi made another tackle and a holding call pushed the Indians further back. Belson burst through the line to make a sack, driving Hanover back to the Cohasset 35. But, Magoun took a pass

Albanese is Lone Cohasset Entrant in Race

Thirty-five-year-old Jeannie Albanese ran a 34 minute 7 second 5-mile time in last Sunday's 13th Annual Rafferty's Road Race. Albanese finished a strong 71st in the 371-runner field and second in her age group.

The runners had perfect conditions to race, with temperatures in the 40s and a slight breeze over the out-and-back course.

'Soccer Moms' Could Have it Worse

With the "Soccer Moms" and their always-on-the-go lifestyles grabbing the headlines these days, you just have to feel for the moms and dads out there whose children are involved in other sports. Some more than they care to be.

Take the gymnastics moms who drive their daughters to a private gym, only to sit and cringe while watching their beloved kids try to perfect a new move on the balance beam, over and over again. If that isn't anguish enough, sitting through an actual competition is all the more nerve-racking. Hoping your daughter does well is one thing. Praying to God she doesn't sustain an injury in any one of 100 different ways is another.

Hockey moms have a tough go of it as well. The degree of difficulty in being a hockey mom, however, is in direct correlation to a number of factors. Time is probably the biggest.

When it comes to getting ice time at a rink during the winter, coaches at every level aren't picky. The tales are many of high school players rising at 4 a.m. to get their practices, work out for an hour and then be in homeroom at 7:15. These Eric Lindros' of tomorrow need to get to the rink somehow. That's where hockey mom comes in. She's up with the roosters as well.

And just hope your son, or daughter for that matter, doesn't decide to become a goalie. If you think pads, helmets and gloves are expensive, wait until you check out the price tag on the goalie gear. You'll be kicking yourself for not signing him up for youth basketball when you had the chance.

Maybe that's why some parents of hockey players absolutely lose their minds when the coach doesn't put the kids out on every shift. Not only do the parents invest a lot of time into the sport, driving their kids from rink to rink and washing hockey equipment, but they've invested a good deal of legal tender into the sport as well. They want to see their kids on the ice, skating their little brains out.

How about the parent of a kid, who through some cranial malfunction, gets involved in the world of horse shows. I really shouldn't pick on equestrians, but I had a bad experience interviewing a high school girl dedicated to the sport.

Everything was fine as far as the interview was concerned. The girl was friendly and personable and her parents were among the nicest I have ever met on the job.

She showed me around the barn and I must admit, the horses were groomed meticulously. The only problem was I don't get along with horse cologne, hay and the inside of barns in general. I sneezed and dripped my way through the entire interview. The kicker, however, was when I walked outside and my entire face blew up like a parade float. Tears were streaming through the slits where my eyes used to be and cursed out every horse from Mr. Ed to Cigar.

Still, I rather have an allergic reaction to horses than have to shell out the bucks to be involved in the sport. First, you have to buy a horse. Then comes the insurance...that's right, insurance for a horse. What's that all about? And of course, you have to empty the wallet for a — now get this — $3,000 saddle! Do you have any idea how many bottles of eye drops you can buy with that kind of cake?

So let's not pity the soccer moms folks. There's a big, wacky world of sports out there full of skates that need sharpening, uniforms that need washing, and don't forget, horses that have better insurance benefits than middle-class America.

Someone please pass the eye drops.

Scituate/Cohasset Sharks Clinch Playoffs

By Jennifer Silvia
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Sunday afternoon in Marshfield, the Scituate/Cohasset Mite (ages 8 to 10) football Sharks defeated the Marshfield Eagles to clinch a spot in the league playoffs. The score of 20-0 came on touchdowns from Cohasset's own Jake Previtte (half back, cornerback) and D. J. Silvia (wing back, cornerback), as well as Shane Kilcoyne (tight end) of Scituate. The Sharks ended the regular season with a 3 and 1 record in the large school division, winning four games overall.

Other Cohasset standouts for this season's Sharks include Casey Coleman (offensive tackle), Joey Durkin/defensive back, Brian Healy (offensive guard, center), Mark Lewis (nose tackle, offensive tackle), Will Maich (defensive back, kick returns), Willy McCarthy (defensive end, offensive tackle), John Roth (defensive back). These young gridiron warriors will continue their quest to the Mite division super bowl this Sunday, playing against the Barnstable Silver Bullets, at 11 a.m. at Bridgewater's Legion Field. We all wish the guys the best and hope they can continue their winning ways.

In other Sharks news, the Sharks midget (ages 12-13) team will also enter the playoffs under the lights in Middleboro this Saturday night. Their efforts will be bolstered by Cohasset players Craig Davis, Paul Previtte and Craig Sheerin.

Cohasset Recreation Department Offers Ski Lessons at Blue Hills

The Cohasset Recreation Department will conduct Blue Hill Ski Lesson Registration Thursday, Nov. 14, at the Recreation Office, Cohasset Town Hall, between the hours of 3 and 4 p.m. and again in the evening, from 5:30 to 6:30 p.m. Registration forms must be signed by a parent or guardian for participation in this five-week program. Beginner through advanced level instruction is available for children and youth, ages 7 and older. Lessons are scheduled to begin Thursday, Jan. 2, 1997, and meet for five consecutive weeks, through Thursday, Jan. 30. The bus will leave each week from Town Hall parking lot at 3:20 p.m. and return from Blue Hills at about 6:45 p.m.

The fee for the ski lessons and transportation for the five weeks is $100, and checks should be made payable to Town of Cohasset. Those participants who require equipment rentals may rent at Blue Hills and the cost for the five-week rental package is $45 per person. The rental fee can be included in the check for program fee, i.e. $145. This is the 20th year that ski lessons at Blue Hills have been offered through the Cohasset Recreation Department and over the years hundreds of youngsters have had the opportunity to learn how to ski or improve their technique.

Indians

to the 10 and Kenny picked up a fumble and scampered in for the touchdown. The extra kick attempt was stifled when Golden fought his way through the line and plowed over the holder.

Golden took the kickoff and handed to Belson, who rumbled to the 31-yard line. He then rushed to the 36, but the Skippers couldn't gain a first and lined up in punt formation. Belson took the snap and battled to the CHS 47 for a first down. However, it was for naught; when the Indians picked off a pass and the Skipper defense came back on the field.

Golden and Buick joined to make a tackle and good pass coverage by Rossi and DeMichele and a strong pass rush from Cogill, Parkinson and Cameron forced a Hanover punt. The Skipper defense came on the field again, though, after Cohasset couldn't get a first down. Magoun's punt return was stopped at the Hanover 35. DeMichele and Duffy combined to make a tackle and Emde crashed in on the next play to drop Magoun for a two-yard loss. However, the speedy back would not be stopped and broke free for a run all the way to the CHS 3-yard line. Kenny stumbled three yards for the score and, up 20-0, the Indians connected for the two-point conversion.

The Skipper offense once again couldn't gain a first and Rossi's punt sailed to the Hanover 36. From there Kenny rambled 64 yards for the TD. The extra point attempt made it 28-0. DeMichele sprinted the kickoff back to the 38, but Magoun intercepted a pass and ran it back for 35 yards. Leading 28-0, John Sullivan, head coach of the Indians, felt it necessary to call a time-out with 13 seconds left in the first half, so they could gain yet another touchdown. Magoun carried eight yards for the score and the extra point tacked on made it 35-0.

Cohasset kicked off to start the second half, with an onsides kick, which Belson fell on for the recovery. Once again, however, the Skipper offense stalled and turned over on downs. This time, though, the Hanover offense was stopped by Belson and sophomore John-Paul Laugelle, who both made tackles. Laugelle pounced on a Hanover fumble and Cohasset got the ball back, but failed to gain a first and turned over on downs. The Indians' Dave Kemp topped off the scoring with a 22-yard TD run, despite tackles earlier in the series by Luke Caldwell and Ben Roine.

It should be noted that Sullivan left his starters in until 3:15 of the third quarter. At that point, the game was clearly over, with Hanover ahead 41-0. This type of play showed a lack of consideration for all involved. The Hanover reserves were cheated of their rightful playing time, just as the Skippers were intentionally humiliated. The fans were left to watch a dull game. Furthermore, Hanover's starters remaining in the game could have led to injury, as most injuries occur when athletes are tired. All of this could have been avoided had Sullivan replaced his starters with the reserves. This type of sportsmanship has no place in sports at any level, particularly high school.

The Skippers host South Boston this Friday on Cohasset's Alumni Field.

Center Girls' Night Out

The South Shore Community Center is offering Gymnastics Girls' Night Out, for girls ages 8 to 12, Friday, Nov. 8, from 6:15 to 8:15 p.m. The girls will enjoy making their pizza, participating in gymnastics, obstacle courses, bowling, contest and prizes. Space is limited.

Order Pies for Thanksgiving

The Appalachia Service Project, comprised of community student volunteers engaged in a home repair/home building ministry serving central Appalachia, will again be baking homemade pies and breads for its Thanksgiving fund raiser.

ASP volunteers will bake apple, pumpkin and pecan pies as well as cranberry and date nut breads. The price is $5 per loaf and $8 for apple and pumpkin pies and $9 for pecan pie.

Order forms will be available at local churches or by calling Second Congregational Church at 383-0345. Order deadline is Wednesday, Nov. 20. Pies and breads will be available for pick-up on Sunday, Nov. 24, from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. at Second Congregational Church or can be delivered that afternoon. ASP members appreciate the support of the community in their annual fund-raising endeavor and offer the following:

Hurrah for the Pumpkin Pie!

For a fine Thanksgiving treat,
One that's good and fun to eat,
Try a special kind of pie —
One whose price is not sky high!

Order now from ASP
And save yourself the misery
Of mixing, rolling, cutting and peeling
While your pressure hits the ceiling!

Get a pie while giving, too —
Pumpkin, apple or pecan will do!
This year we'll also bake your bread
To help you keep your masses fed.

These goodies are made with special care
By many teens who travel each year
To do some Appalachia home repairing
And give some hope to those despairing.

383-0345
Is the number to call to place an order.
Do it now and don't delay
So you can enjoy Thanksgiving Day!

Cynthia White and her niece Olivia White share a moment on the town common during the annual Halloween parade and fair sponsored by the South Shore Community Center Nursery School last week.

All Paws Rescue Events Listed

The next members meeting of All Paws Rescue is set for Tuesday, Nov. 12, at 7:30 p.m. at Days Inn, Rockland. Members and friends are invited to attend.

A painting valued at $1,000 will be the grand prize in the group's fourth annual benefit drawing Tuesday, Dec. 10. A 16-inch by 20-inch unframed portrait, oil on masonite, of a favorite pet will be painted by award-winning artist Laurie M. Borden of Artist's Son Gallery, Cohasset, for the grand-prize winner.

Nearly 50 prizes donated to All Paws will be awarded at the drawing, held at Chili's, Queen Anne's Corner, Hingham, starting at 7 p.m. Coupons are $1 or 16 for $15. Winners need not be present to win. Call All Paws at 749-0968 for benefit drawing coupons.

Music Theater to Present 'Oliver'

Hingham Civic Music Theatre will present "Oliver" Nov. 9, 15 and 16 at 8 p.m., and Nov. 10 and 17 at 2 p.m. at Hingham Junior High School, 1103 Main St., Hingham. Advance tickets are $10, $12 at the door for adults and $10 for children 12 and under.

Tickets are available at Nobles Camera Shop, Hingham Public Library and Olden's Pharmacy in South Weymouth Square.

To order tickets by mail, send a SASE for the return of tickets to: HCMT Tickets, c/o Faye O'Brien, 12 Camelot Dr., Hingham 02043. Payment should be enclosed. For group sales, call 749-0857.

Young Adult Authors Signing

Young adult authors Maureen Crane Wartski and John Neufeld will discuss and sign their books on Thursday, Nov. 7, from 6:30 to 8:30 p.m. at Buttonwood for Kids in Hingham. Both write powerfully about contemporary issues of racial harmony, mental illness, censorship and relationships among friends.

Admission is free, but reservations are requested for seating. Refreshments will be served. The event is recommended for grade 6 and up. Call 749-2665 to reserve a place.

Memorial Squares to be Dedicated on Sunday

The men from Cohasset who gave their lives in the Korean Conflict and the Vietnam War will be honored on Sunday, Nov. 10, with the dedication of town squares in their memory. The 1995 Town Meeting approved a citizens' petition to name nine squares, one for each man who died. In 1923, the town dedicated squares to the men who made the supreme sacrifice in World War I, and again in 1946 for those brave men who died in World War II. Town Meeting also specified that the next narrative history of the town which was written be dedicated to these men, and also tell their story for future generations to learn.

The dedication committee has planned a full afternoon to dedicate the squares, which have been located as close as possible to the neighborhoods which the men and their families lived in prior to their service tour. The dedications will begin at noon at the intersection of Doane and Church streets, which will be renamed and dedicated as Peter Cogill Square. Immediately thereafter, the intersection of Beechwood Street and Todd Road, named in memory of Lt. Norman M. Todd, a Cohasset serviceman who died of complications of exposure to radiation in the final days of WWII, will be dedicated as William C. Laidlaw Square.

Cohasset's only Navy casualty, R. Edward Maree, will be remembered by the dedication of the Parker Avenue boat ramp as R. Edward Maree Landing. The square at the intersection of Black Horse Lane and Summer Street will be dedicated and renamed Allen F. Keating Square. Another Army soldier, Craig M. Simeone, will have the intersection of Pond Street and Lantern Lane renamed in his honor.

Dedication ceremonies will then move to the center of town for the dedication of squares to two Army officers who died in Vietnam at the height of the war. The park at the intersection of Elm Street and Highland Avenue Ext. will be dedicated as Dennis J. Reardon Square. Renaming of the square at the junction of Joy Place and North Main Street will be in memory of John P. Lyon.

The dedications will conclude with a ceremony at the intersection of Gammons and Jerusalem roads, which will be dedicated to Peter J. Albani Jr. The green at Jerusalem Road and Red Gate Lane will be renamed and dedicated as C. David Strout Square. David was the only Cohasset man to die in the Korean fighting.

Immediately following the ceremonies at about 4 p.m., a reception will be held at the Senior Center, 3 North Main St., in Cohasset Village. The public is invited to join the families, veterans and others who gathered to remember these brave men.

Public Notices

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS THE TRIAL COURT PROBATE AND FAMILY COURT DEPARTMENT NOTICE OF FIDUCIARY'S ACCOUNT NORFOLK DIVISION

Docket No. 95P0470E1

To all persons interested in the estate of Leonard J. O'Donnell late of Cohasset, Ma. in the County of Norfolk.

You are hereby notified pursuant to Mass. R. Civ. P. Rule 72 that the First and Final account of Robert E. Holland as Executor (the fiduciary) of said estate has been presented to said Court for allowance.

If you desire to preserve your right to file an objection to said account, you or your attorney must file a written appearance in said Court at Dedham on or before the 11th day of December, 1996 the return day of this citation. You may upon written request by registered or certified mail to the fiduciary, or to the attorney for the fiduciary, obtain without cost a copy of said account. If you desire to object to any items of said account, you must, in addition to filing a written appearance as aforesaid, file within thirty days after said return day or within such other time as the Court upon motion may order a written statement of each such item together with grounds for each objection thereto, a copy to be served upon the fiduciary pursuant to Mass. R. Civ. P. Rule 5.

WITNESS, David H. Kopelman, Esquire, First Justice of said Court at Dedham this 29th day of October, 1996.

Business Notes

Stephen Lucitt

Lucitt is Vice President of Business Banking

Stephen Lucitt of Cohasset has been named vice president of business banking at Abington Savings Bank. He will be responsible for the bank's small businesses lending programs and managing commercial real estate financing and refinancing.

Prior to joining Abington Savings Bank, Lucitt worked in the commercial lending divisions of Bank of Braintree and Shawmut Bank.

He holds a bachelor's degree from the University of Southern California and a master's degree in business administration from Suffolk University. He attended law school at New York University.

Lucitt is a member of Braintree Rotary Club, Braintree Historical Society, South Shore Chamber of Commerce and Habitat for Humanity — South Shore.

Silver Spoon Cafe hosts First Pumpkin Painting Contest

The Silver Spoon Cafe on South Main Street in the village hosted the first annual Cohasset Pumpkin Decorating Contest on Halloween for ages five to 12.

The Silver Spoon supplied the pumpkins and the kids supplied the talent.

Winners were: Logan Berslow, age 4; Logan Chase, 5; Stephen Harmon, 6; Austin Berslow, 7; Chelsea Grossman, 8; Lisa Sprito, 9; Amyra O'Connell-Chase, 10; and Heather Harmon, 11.

Sponsors were: Russo's & Sons Produce, J. P. Monarch, Holly Hill Riding Stables, Jade Forest Kung Fu and Tai Chi, Venture Distributors, Perkins Paper, Rosen Dairy, Silver Spoon Cafe, New England Coffee, and South Shore Nursery.

Mary Dennehy of Summer Street judges the first Cohasset Pumpkin Decorating Contest at The Silver Spoon Cafe last Thursday.

Chamber to Host Auction

Cohasset Chamber of Commerce will host their annual benefit auction Saturday, Nov. 16, at South Shore Community Center. There will be a preview from 5 to 7 p.m., followed by a free Italian dinner at 6 p.m. and the auction from 7 to 10 p.m.

Auction items were donated by the Cohasset business community, and the VFW has joined the auction this year. They will be in charge of the dinner.

Proceeds will be split equally among the Appalachian group, s, VFW and Chamber of Commerce.

Selectmen Endorse 3A Train Station

By Charlene Vandini
COHASSET MARINER

Selectmen unanimously endorsed the Oct. 28 special town meeting "straw poll" that advised that the Cohasset commuter rail station should be on Route 3A.

The MBTA had originally planned for the station at the former Cohasset Winter Gardens skating rink, on the directive of selectmen years ago, but in recent months, support has grown for a station in Cohasset Village.

Tuesday, planning board chairman Al Moore, and members of the town's mitigation commit-

Teague Was Too Far Right, Parties Say

By Charlene Vandini
COHASSET MARINER

Local party officials are looking back, a week after the ballots have been counted, to analyze what they did right, what they should change, and where they should be headed two years from now.

Officials on both sides of the political aisle say their parties need to moderate their positions on issues in order to hold on the voters they have and to attract new ones.

And, regardless of political persuasion, they are all impressed by the stunning victory of State Sen. Robert Hedlund,R-Weymouth, who was re-elected last week by carrying the town of Hull and all but one precinct in Weymouth.

"This is astonishing, considering the Democratic tide running the way it was," said Hingham's Republican Town Committee chairman Carl Harris, who noted this was the first time a Republican has accomplished this feat in 45 years.

Hedlund's success last week came through substantial support from democratic voters who crossed the party line, particularly in Weymouth and Hull.

'Hedlund picked his issues and he did it well.'

— Polly Logan.

"You never, ever, lose Weymouth, and you never, ever, lose Hull," said Democratic Town Committee member Peter Pratt of Cohasset, who was one of the senior campaign managers for Hedlund's predecessor Brian MacDonald. Hedlund unseated MacDonald in an election cliff-hanger two years ago, to regain the seat he won by defeating Robert Ambler in 1990.

Pratt said Hedlund's positions "far

Towns Eye Sharing Sewer Pump Station

As Cohasset sewer commissioners gear up to put the north Cohasset Sewer project out to bid, they are considering joining forces with Hingham to save both towns money.

Both towns have been working unilaterally with Hull to sewer town trouble spots by hooking into Hull's wastewater treatment facility.

In Hingham it is in the Bonnie Brier Neighborhood that town officials hope to offer relief to homeowners hardest hit by tough Title V laws and clear up pollution problems in Weir River and surrounding watershed — an Area of Critical Environmental Concern (ACEC).

Hingham voters unanimously supported a $2.7 million project to tie

Cohasset's Week

Meeting Slated to Discuss Septic Systems

Cohasset Board of Health will hold the first of five meetings to discuss the development of a plan to deal with septic systems (On-Site Wastewater Management Plan) Tuesday, Nov. 19, at 7 p.m. in the Town Hall auditorium. The public's input is needed in order to develop the plan.

The initial meeting will include an overview of the objectives of the plan; review of the state funding sources for septic system repairs; an update of the Sewer Commission's work on the North and Central Sewer districts; identification of parameters to define priority districts for system repairs; discussion on approaches to inspections and maintenance; and discussion of options for management of available state funds.

Board of Health Chairman Tom Cook said, "The public's input is very important in this process because we want to achieve a plan that is equitable and achieves financial parity with residents being asked to connect to sewers in North Cohasset and the Central Sewer District."

He said Cohasset is mandated by the state to have an on-site management plan as part of the Sewer Commission's Town-wide Management Plan, as set forth in the town's Agreement for Judgement negotiated by the Sewer Commission in 1994 and approved by Special Town Meeting in 1994.

Seal on Web on Hold

Selectmen want to consult with town counsel before they allow use of the town seal on a Cohasset internet page.

Wayne Sawchuk and Robert Martin explained to the board Tuesday that they are working on an informational World Wide Web site for Cohasset and would like to use the town seal on it.

Sawchuk said the web site would not be used for commercial purposes, but would only provide information about the town.

The web site will have six "links" for additional information: to the Chamber of Commerce; local businesses; a series of photographs of the town for a "photo tour"; listings of community events to be regularly updated; town government information of boards, as well as opportunities for volunteers; and Cohasset statistics, such as population, tax rate, and demographic data.

Selectman Peter Pratt sees many opportunities to use the internet to disseminate information about the town, such as making the zoning by-laws available at Cohasset web site, as well as the town report, and town meeting warrants. However he believes the town seal should be used only a municipal web site, rather than by any private parties.

Selectman Nan Roth said some government information should be kept separate from community information.

Town administrator Greg Doyon said a formal policy on use of the town seal was supposedly adopted 20 years ago, but he has been unable to locate the selectmen's vote.

Single Tax Rate Approved

Cohasset will continue to have a single tax rate for all residential, commercial, industrial, and personal property.

The rate is $15.05 per $1,000 of assessed valuation.

Assistant assessor Cheryl Pooler said a split tax rate should not be considered unless the combined total of personal property, industrial, and commercial property does not equal 25 per cent of the total taxable valuation in town.

In Cohasset, residential property makes up 92.6 per cent of the total taxable valuation.

To split the tax rate, Pooler said, would have an adverse impact on local businesses.

Fire Department gets Grant

The fire department has been awarded a $1,500 state grant from the Executive Office of Public Safety for its Students Awareness Fire Education (S.A.F.E.) program.

Fire Chief Roger Lincoln said the SAFE program is a joint effort with Supt. of Schools Stephen Hart and Health Agent Joseph Godzik and will include fire prevention and smoking education.

Lincoln explained the program was new in the state last year. Applications are put before a committee which determines who gets what, he said.

This will be Cohasset's first year in the program.

"This (grant) will give us an opportunity to develop a program on health and fire prevention in the schools," he said. Lincoln said in the past, fire prevention programs have been "sporadic" due to budgetary and time constraints.

"It's nice to get the money for this purpose," he said.

Liquor Stores Open on Sundays

Selectmen have exercised the town's option under state law by giving local package stores the go ahead to open on the Sundays during the holiday season.

Andy Hailer, manager of Curtis Liquors, asked selectmen to approve the Sunday openings from noon until 6 p.m., which the board agreed to last week.

But this week Linda Berthold, manager of Cohasset Plaza Liquors, wrote to the board asking them to allow stores to be open until 8 p.m.

"The bulk of our retail sales are between the hours of 4 and 8 p.m. The majority of residents do food shopping, take-out pizza or subs, and pick up movies between these hours. In turn, they patronize our store at this time. Closing at 6 p.m., I believe, would cause an inconvenience to our residents," she said.

Selectmen agreed to move the closing hour to 8 p.m.

At last week's meeting, Hailer said the approval allows Curtis to compete with neighboring towns that allow Sunday openings during the holiday season.

DPW Lists October Activity

During the month of October, the Department of Public Works accomplished the following according to Supt. Harold W. Litchfield: prepared and resurfaced a section of Surry Drive, Deep Run, Reservoir Road, Bancroft Way, Cedar Street and Gammons Road;

Resurfaced sidewalks on Summer Street; using a bulldozer, graded Elms Meadow so it can be used for skating this winter;installed Otis Avenue sign;

Installed four, 15 MPH signs on Lamberts Lane; cleaned parts of James Brook throughout the town during the October rainstorm, including the Tidal Gates;

Dug a trench on Sohier Street at the railroad bed to release excess water into James Brook; cut,excavated and dug a trench at the Paul Pratt Library for a new electrical conduit and water pit, patched and reseeded area; widened the corners of the entrance road at the RTF in anticipation of being made a two-way road for RTF traffic when construction of the new DPW garage begins;

Cut brush back at the Cohasset Golf Course end of Lamberts Lane; removed debris from Spring Street Brook; patched holes at various locations throughout town;

Unloaded new bleachers at the high school for alumni field; removed and repaired engine in Tree & Park #5 truck; and mowed, trimmed and raked all parks, cemeteries, schools and town common area.

Subdivision Proposal Hearings Stuck in Traffic

Jerusalem Road Estates Hearing Resumes Dec. 4

By Jason Bouffard
COHASSET MARINER

Progress for the Jerusalem Road Estates is as slow-moving as a rush-hour commute.

The latest in a series of public hearings concerning the proposed subdivision, held Nov. 6, took a long look at traffic issues related to the project, but yielded little in the way of solid results.

During the hearing, Traffic Consultant Michael Abend of Abend Associates informed the Planning Board about the results of a traffic study done in the Jerusalem Road area. Abend stated the proposed 28-lot development would add, on average, 28 more vehicles to neighboring roads each morning during peak traffic hours. Evening traffic would increase by an additional 34 vehicles.

Abend explained that since current traffic volumes during rush hour fall in the 200 vehicles per hour range, a 28 to 34 vehicle increase would not produce a notable difference.

The study also showed that the subdivision exit would not be dangerous in terms of the visibility of oncoming traffic for those exiting the development. A 300-foot sight distance for exiting vehicles would provide a safe scenario for drivers, according to Abend. The sight distance would give drivers approaching Jerusalem Road Estates an adequate amount of time to react to exiting vehicles.

"This stretch is filled with what I would call blind drives, driveways that come out from behind rocks, behind hedges, behind houses," said Attorney Charles Humphreys, who represents the developer, Steve Corey. "We're creating one of the few that is not a blind drive."

Abend noted that about 80 to 90 percent of accidents occurring on Jerusalem Road are single-car mishaps —, vehicles skidding off the road due to slick conditions or to the windy nature of the roadway. He concluded that the additional traffic would not increase the problem.

But board member Robert Sturdy, along with some residents in attendance, disagreed with Abend's assessments.

"The probability of cars hitting cars instead of sliding into a snowbank is higher if you add more cars," Sturdy said. He also said the area is already the worst in town for safe driving.

Although the study made no formal recommendations for improving the safety of Jerusalem Road, Abend suggested that yellow traffic lines, speed limit postings and clear sidewalks could make for safer driving conditions.

Although some drainage and design changes were discussed, a final definitive plan has yet to be completed.

"I hope we can resolve the conceptual changes so that we can go on to a definitive plan," said Humphreys.

But Planning Board Chairman Al Moore hopes the proceedings can begin to move faster and that the board can see some complete information.

"We've got to pick up the pace. We have to start seeing some hard numbers and calculations," he said.

The hearing will resume Dec. 4.

PUBLIC NOTICE
TOWN OF COHASSET, MA
COHASSET SEWER COMMISSION

ATTENTION COHASSET RESIDENTS IN THE STRAITS POND AREA

Dear Cohasset Resident:

In accordance with Articles 4 and 5 of the March 30, 1996 Special Town Meeting, the Cohasset Sewer Commission has been directed to implement the design and construction of the North Cohasset Sewer System including its interconnection to the Town of Hull. Tutela Engineering Associates, Inc. has been retained by the Sewer Commission to facilitate the acquisition of required easements. In order to adequately construct the wastewater collection system and individual service connections, Tutela Engineering will be visiting property owners of the proposed North Cohasset Sewer System over the next several weeks to confirm an acceptable location for individual service connections and to prepare and execute all permanent easements required for construction. To aid the homeowner in the execution of the required easements, a Notary Public will accompany Tutela Engineering representatives to properly notarize the signature(s) of the appropriate homeowner for the permanent sewer easements.

Your cooperation with these efforts would be greatly appreciated. The easements are required to provide the homeowner with sewer service. State funding will not be available to sites without properly executed easements.

If you have any questions relative to this matter or you wish to schedule a site visit, please contact Mr. Daniel Coughlin, P.E., of Tutela Engineering Associates, Inc. at (508) 658-7493.

Thank you for your cooperation
Edward M. Guild, Chairman
Cohasset Sewer Commission

Sewer Pump

135 homes to sewer pipes leading to Hull's sewer plant. The cost of the project will be split between the town and the homeowners receiving sewer connections. The project involves laying sewer pipes, the construction of a pump station, the installation of force mains to carry the wastewater to the Hull facility and providing connections for homeowners.

More than twice the size of the Hingham project, the north Cohasset sewer line will tie 320 homes into the Hull treatment facility, again helping homeowners grappling with failed or failing septic systems and protecting environmental resources such as Straits Pond, another ACEC. Cohasset voters supported a $6.3 million appropriation for the project which will be paid off through betterments charged to residents receiving sewer connections. Like the Hingham project, it will require pipe laying, building a pump station, installing force mains and homeowner connections.

Originally planned as a tri-town project, Cohasset and Hingham have for the last several months been planning separate projects, with separate sewer mains and separate pump stations.

Currently both towns are planning to build their pump stations in West Corner, which Hingham Sewer Commissioner John Brandt said would be literally across the street from each other.

Both Brandt and Cohasset Sewer Commission Chairman Ted Guild acknowledge that substantial cost savings could be realized by both Hingham and Cohasset if the the two towns share some of the construction work including the pump station. Sharing a sewer main on Hull Street which bisects both towns is another economy, Brandt noted.

After bids for Hingham's project came in nearly $1 million higher than expected, the sewer commission sent a letter to Guild last week proposing project consolidation with Cohasset as a way to cut work and costs for both towns.

Guild said the idea of working together to save both communities money is very attractive.

Hingham has invited Cohasset to buy into its pump station which engineers estimate will cost about half as much as the Cohasset station which is planned for the former North Cohasset Fire Station. Guild said one reason the Cohasset pump station would be more costly than Hingham's is that it would require the construction of a large storage area for use during peak flow hours, due to the smaller pressure pipes that must be used. In Hingham, Guild said much larger pipes will serve as a storage area for the station. In joining with Hingham, Cohasset would pay more of the construction costs on the station because it will require more flow and has purchased more capacity from the Hull treatment facility — but it will still pay less than half the costs of building its own station.

While he agreed there are cost savings to be had in building one pump station, Guild has concerns that sharing the Hull Street Main could raise some complex legal issues.

"Some of the street is entirely in Hingham and some of it is entirely in Cohasset. This could involve easement taking," Guild said. But he noted that if sharing the main is feasible from both an engineering and legal standpoint, it would represent even more cost savings.

"Our engineers are talking to their engineers," said Guild who expects the Cohasset commission to make a decision on the proposal this week.

"Everything looks favorable," Guild said. "It's 95 percent probable that we'll go in with Hingham."

Ambulance Billing

In October, the fire department billed for 30 ambulance transports for a total of $12.355.76 and collected $10,197.79.

So far this year, the town collected $42,397.91 out of a possible $51,620.79. Some of the money collected is owed from prior fiscal years.

Car Solutions

General Manager Service Manager

Traction Control

▶ Along with antilock brakes and airbags, traction control is one of the more desirable safety and handling features to come along in recent years. Without any input from the driver, traction control works with an automobile's engine-management computer and/or antilock braking system (ABS) to help maintain control during acceleration in extreme situations. In the event that sensors detect wheel slippage, some traction control systems work by braking the appropriate wheel(s) to improve low-speed traction on a slippery surface, while others employ a combination of braking and reduced throttle to maintain both traction and stability at a wider range of speeds. As effective as both traction control and ABS are at increasing safety and handling, neither should be thought of as a license to drive faster or more recklessly. Each adds safety during compromising circumstances that drivers should not go out of their ways to induce.

▶ When driving with ABS brakes on slippery roads, you don't need to pump them to get the traction you need. At SOUTH SHORE CHEVROLET-GEO, we are dedicated to improving and maintaining your car's driveability. We guarantee our work, our products, and our services. We welcome your questions--we're here to answer them.

You can find us at 828 C.J. Cushing Hwy., Rte 3A and we are open Thurs. eves.

Satisfaction with your car's performance is what we deliver.

Hint:
When drivers see ABS or traction-control light flash on their instrument panels, it means that they are either driving too fast or braking too abruptly and the car's safety systems must take over to compensate for the error.

No Easy Answers for North Cohasset Water Users

Tying into Town System is Problematical

By Charlene Vandini
COHASSET MARINER

An eminent domain taking of the Massachusetts-American Water Company's pipes in north Cohasset isn't a simple proposition.

Water commissioner Fred Koed said the section of the pipe on Hull Street serves Hingham customers on one side of the street, Cohasset customers on the other, and then goes on to provide water service to Hull.

Cohasset cannot take the pipes that serve the other towns, Koed explained.

Last month, Selectman Peter Pratt, in response to angry Mass-American customers in north Cohasset, said the town should consider an eminent domain taking that would unite all Cohasset residents with the municipal water system. This would spare the present Mass-American customers in north Cohasset the higher water bills they have received to pay for the Mass-American water treatment plant in Hingham.

North Cohasset residents have complained to Mass-American officials about the high rates for poor water quality. Since the higher bills began arriving last month, residents have brought stained and discolored laundry to selectmen's meetings, and organized a protest at the Statehouse in Boston, asking the state Dept. of Public Utilities to reconsider the rate increase it allowed Mass-American to pay for the treatment plant.

Installing water pipes in north Cohasset would cost approximately $1.2 million, with that figure doubled for individual service connections, Koed said.

Water department engineering consultant Domenic Tutela said the existing water system can support the extension to north Cohasset

North Cohasset's water problems are a "political question" that must be considered apart from the existing system improvement projects, Koed said. The Cohasset water department's projects to upgrade its system, should take priority before the system is expanded. Those projects are estimated to cost $5.7 million.

Koed said Tuesday, "We're just barely getting off our knees."

Responding to Selectman Nan Roth, Tutela said water project priorities are determined by what will do the most good for the entire water system.

Water commissioner Dan Kasemeyer said the existing Cohasset system is 100 years old and it must be improved. With the Mass-American and Cohasset water systems at different pressures, North Cohasset residents could have a different set of problems than they now have with Mass-American.

Selectman Michael Sullivan said that if the present system has capacity to serve north Cohasset residents it would make more sense to lay new pipes there and not embark on an eminent domain taking of the Mass-American pipes.

"I don't know why we'd want those 100 year old pipes," Roth said, noting that the Mass-American pipes in north Cohasset are as old as Cohasset Water Dept. pipes that are now being replaced.

There is also a question of whether the Mass-American customers could be "shielded" from paying for the water treatment plant even if they are connected to the Cohasset municipal water supply, said Selectman Peter Pratt.

Tuesday Selectmen Chairman Merle Brown asked for figures to show how a North Cohasset water project would affect the water bills there, and said a joint meeting of the water commissioners and selectmen should be held to discuss the on-going water improvements as well as the north Cohasset extension.

tee pitched the village station site again, despite the town meeting straw poll results.

Moore said the Route 3A location gives the village all of the disruptions and none of the benefits of commuter rail, because the train will run through the area regardless of the station site. Noting that the station site has divided the community, and that he sympathizes with those who live nearest to the tracks, Moore said the village location is supported by a "silent majority." He questioned whether the straw vote at the special town meeting should be the basis for the selectmen's directive to the MBTA, saying it shouldn't be "a popularity contest."

"It makes little sense to have the train coming through the village without stopping," he said.

Planning board member Robert Sturdy, who is also a member of the mitigation committee, concurred, saying that Route 3A is already overburdened with traffic.

He called the town meeting straw poll an "orchestrated move" by train opponents. The MBTA will be more receptive to Cohasset's mitigation requests if there is a village station.

"I'm amazed for a government agency to be so cooperative," he said.

Sturdy said the planning board unanimously supports the station and sees it as a benefit to businesses there.

But Cassandra Rioux of James Lane said she has visited several other communities, including Needham, Manchester-By-The-Sea, and Salem, which have commuter rail service and found that it does not help businesses.

Merchants in Salem told her recently that commuters do not become their customers, and they are pleased that the station was moved outside of the business area, she said.

At a real estate office in Needham, she was told that the station is not an asset. A coffee shop that opened there specifically to cater to commuters does not attract customers from the train station.

Pleasant Street resident Martin Corry said it is ironic that Rioux, who is not a member of the mitigation committee, had investigated the impact of the train on businesses, while the committee had not done so.

Corry also said that the 32 traffic lights on Route 3A between Cohasset and Boston are a minor inconvenience compared with traffic impact on Cohasset Village if the station is located there.

Chamber of Commerce vice president Dean Rizzo, who is also a member of the mitigation committee, said the Cohasset Village station has not been investigated thoroughly. Separate parking areas could be designed for commuters and shoppers, and the town can request an independent traffic study. While the MBTA has said it would like a decision by Dec. 1 on the station site, Rizzo said the deadline could be extended and the state officials "aren't pressuring us yet."

"We owe it to the town to explore these further," he said.

But Selectmen Chairman Merle Brown is skeptical of the MBTA. He noted that promises were made in the past to other communities when transportation projects were planned and the MBTA ultimately reneged.

"The T promised them the world, and then they did what they wanted," Brown said, adding that the MBTA could decide to put the station in the village regardless of the town's preferences.

Brown said the board asked for the straw poll at the Oct. 28 special town meeting, and should honor the expressed wishes of the voters.

Voters cast their ballots after signing in on the first night of the special town meeting. The vote was 311 in favor of the Route 3A station, with 112 for the station in Cohasset Village. Of the 423 who took part in the straw poll, 177 arrived only to vote on it and did not stay for the special town meeting.

Fallen Soldiers

Peter J. Albiani, John Paul Lyon, Craig M. Simeone, Allen F. Keating, and Dennis J. Reardon.

On Nov. 10, the town of Cohasset paid tribute to these nine men with ceremonies naming "town squares" in honor of each of them.

At each of eight grassy sites around town and a boat ramp, people gathered under a sunny autumn sky for the emotional unveiling services which included honor guard from local veterans' posts and music by the Brockton Cosmos Legion volunteer band.

Many teary-eyed classmates, neighbors, friends and family members recalled the young lives lost almost 30 years ago. Bystanders in the crowd reminisced about the proms they had attended, the football games they had played in and the fishing trips on which they embarked. People embraced and shared their memories of the men being honored.

According to Glenn Pratt, organizer of the ceremonies, the dedications were two years in planning. As was done for fallen soldiers after World War I in 1923 and World War II in 1946, squares were chosen close to the men's homes. The October 1995 Special Town Meeting appropriated money to buy the plaques and approved re-naming the locations. Money to put on Sunday's event was raised from veterans organizations and private donations.

Each dedication highlighted the men's honors as soldiers. The Bronze Stars of Craig Simeone, John Paul Lyon's Purple Hearts and the Silver Star earned by Allen Keating, were just a few of the many awards listed in recognition of their military accomplishments. But even more remarkable were the stories of the boys, who grew up in town, and as young men, found themselves far off in Southeast Asia.

Six of the eight Vietnam soldiers honored were killed in combat; the two others were killed in military-related accidents during the Vietnam era. David Strout was the only Cohasset man to die in the Korean War.

"Man has no greater love than to lay down his life for another," cited Robert Jackson in speaking of Craig Simeone, yet applicable to all the soldiers who fell in the fight for freedom. During battle, Simeone selflessly volunteered to reach the men from his troop wounded during an ambush. Dennis Reardon was assigned to evacuate combat casualties in his helicopter. John Paul Lyon entered an enemy mind field. Peter Cogill was attempting to defuse a land mine. William Laidlaw was killed by a mortar round. Each dedication was a story of heroics and sacrifice.

But equally compelling were the stories about the boys' years in Cohasset; stories about John Lyon being voted "most talented" and "most noted for his smile" at Cohasset High School. Stories found in his brother's memories of them playing on the spot named for John overlooking the harbor.

"He was my best friend," recalled Jim Lyon through tears.

There was the love story of Allen Keating and his high school sweetheart Ann Noonan getting married in Hawaii on Allen's leave just prior to his death. Then there were memories among classmates of the Cohasset High Class of 1965. They recalled the Thanksgiving Day Football game against unbeaten Hull when Allen led his team to victory. His proud younger brother Tom recalled tagging along with his older brother and always looking up to him. He recalled for the crowd that Allen had said if his service meant his younger brothers didn't have to do the tour,he didn't mind being in Vietnam.

Growing up as football players, baseball players, boy scouts, altar boys, these soldiers were the heart of Cohasset. They could be seen sailing or fishing in the harbor or swimming at Sandy Beach. For many in the crowd, it seemed like yesterday that they saw Dennis Reardon on his motorcycle or Allen Keating coaching his Little League team.

Thematic of each ceremony, Tom Keating said of his brother Allen, "I don't think my brother would have wanted to be remembered as a war hero or a soldier but as a happy, healthy kids who found magic in this town he loved."

"HI, NEIGHBOR. HAVE YOU TRIED MY CHEESE?"
Cabot cheddar cheese, butter and other dairy foods are offered with pride by your nearby dairy farmers. The same farmers who, together, own the Cabot Creamery.
And what that means is, every time you buy a Cabot product, you're helping to support 192 family farms near you in Massachusetts and throughout the Northeast. You're helping to preserve a way of life that's been important here for generations. And you're getting some of the freshest, purest, best-tasting dairy products made anywhere.
Since 1919, your nearby farmers have been working this land, tending the herds and gathering their milk. And as long as you keep buying, sharing and enjoying Cabot products, they'll keep right on doing it.

AROUND TOWN/Sallyann Chatterton

Ed Hamilton is Now a U.S. Marine!

Joe and Jane Hamilton are really proud parents, and here is the reason why — their son, Ed, just graduated from training at Parris Island, S.C. Yes, he's the same Ed who is a 1996 CHS grad. This time he was part of a class of 450, all of whom are PFCs in the USMC!

Joe and Jane went to Ed's graduation, then he came home with them for his 10-day leave. He left Monday for Camp LeJeune, N.C. We'll keep you informed on his career as it progresses. In the meantime, we surely wish you the best, Ed.

If you are wondering why you haven't seen Harry Rose "around town" lately, here is the reason. He broke his hip a few weeks ago (he walked around on it for a week after he broke it, not realizing it was broken!) Harry is now in Colonial Rehab in Weymouth. He will be there for six weeks, so keep him in your thoughts and send him a card when you get a chance! Six weeks is a long time! Get well really fast, Mr. Rose. Surprise everyone and be out in five!

Please give a giant welcome to Patrick James Holway, the brand-new son of Jeanne and Dick Holway. Patrick was born Oct. 1 at South Shore Hospital and weighed 8 pounds, 5 ounces. Patrick will certainly get plenty of attention — he has an older sister, Mackenzie, who is nine-years-old, and a brother, Coner, 7.

Ashley Mihos, Meghan O'Sullivan, and Kristen O'Connell are new students at Noble and Greenough School in Dedham. The girls are all members of the Class of '00.

His maternal grandmother, who lives in Hyde Park, is Ruth Walsh. His paternal grandparents are Rita and Fred Holway of Cotuit. Congratulations to you all!

Deidre K. Wilson, a student at Essex Community College, makes the news this week. She is featured in the 19th annual edition of the National Dean's List. The list was just published by Educational Communications Inc., and students are selected for this honor by their college deans, registrars or honor society advisers and must be in the upper 10 percent of their class.

The listed students are eligible to compete for scholarship awards and may also use a referral service for future employment opportunities.

Chloe J. Chittick, a first-year student at Colby College in Waterville, Maine, began college with a camping and hiking trip on the Moxie and Bald Mountain section of the Appalachian Trail in Maine's north woods.

Chloe shared the Colby Outdoor Orientation Trip Sept. 2-5 with about a dozen other students, including two returning students who were trip leaders. She was one of 472 first-year and transfer students participating in the COOT program. Chloe is the daughter of Stanley and Jo Anne Chittick.

I chatted briefly with Tom Wigmore the other night, and he had news to share. The Sons of the American Legion are holding their turkey raffle again this year. The drawing will be held Nov. 22 at the George H. Mealy Post. Raffle tickets will be $1 each, or six tickets for $5. The funds raised will be put toward the scholarship programs.

And there is more good news. The men at the Legion are going to hold their Thanksgiving breakfast again this year. It's planned for Thanksgiving morning, from 7:30 to 9:30 a.m., at the Legion. The cost is $4, and it's all you can eat! What a great way to start the day, plus get far away from the cook preparing the Thanksgiving feast at your hours. Then go watch our CHS football team face the Hull Pirates at the new Alumni Field. Have fun, eat lots and holler loudly for the Skippers!

Congratulations go to Richard Harrington of Cedarledge Village, Cohasset, who is a junior at Roxbury Latin School. Richard has been elected a co-captain of the cross-country team. Hopefully he will let us know how the team does!

That's the news for this week. Surely you have something newsworthy you would like to share with all of us! Just give me a call!

"Advise Me, Mr. Grillo, How Often Should My Orientals Be Cleaned?"

The Simple answer is, you need to vacuum your rugs at least once a week and have them professionally cleaned every three to five years.
Cleaning not only brightens your rugs' colors but removes abrasive grit and the spilled foods that attract textile insects!
So it really protects the investment you've made in your rugs.
You'll find all this and more in my booklet on the care of Oriental rugs.
It's filled with important information you can use and it's yours for the asking.
We also offer pick-up and delivery service, or you can use our, cash-and-carry service and save 25%.
I'm George Grillo, and we're at 100 Messina Drive, Braintree, 1-800-649-7707.

Marlette Installed as 100th Master of Masonic lodge

George L. Marlette of Cohasset was installed Sept. 28 as the 100th Master of Old Colony Lodge A.F. and A.M., Masonic lodge, Hingham, which was founded in 1792. Marlette, a practicing attorney in Brockton, is Cohasset Town Moderator.

Installing Master was Frederick M. Shaw Jr. of Hingham. A special charge to officers and personal message was delivered by past Master The Honorable Charles E. Black, presiding Justice of the District Court Department, Quincy Division, and the regional administrative Justice.

A reception, which was attended by more than 100 guests, followed at Congregation Sha'aray Shalom, Hingham.

Plans for Village Fair Underway

The Cohasset Village Fair is coming Dec. 7. The book sale committee of St. Stephen's Church is already working on the annual feature of the fair. They welcome contributions of hardcover and paperback books in good condition, CDs, tapes and videos. Current textbooks and cooking, craft and gardening books are especially needed.

Materials may be left on the stage at Walton Rodgers Hall or inside the Parish Hall door marked "Church offices" Wednesdays and Thursdays from 8 to 11 a.m. and 2 to 4 p.m. For further information, call 383-6840.

Obituaries

Anthony C. Laugelle

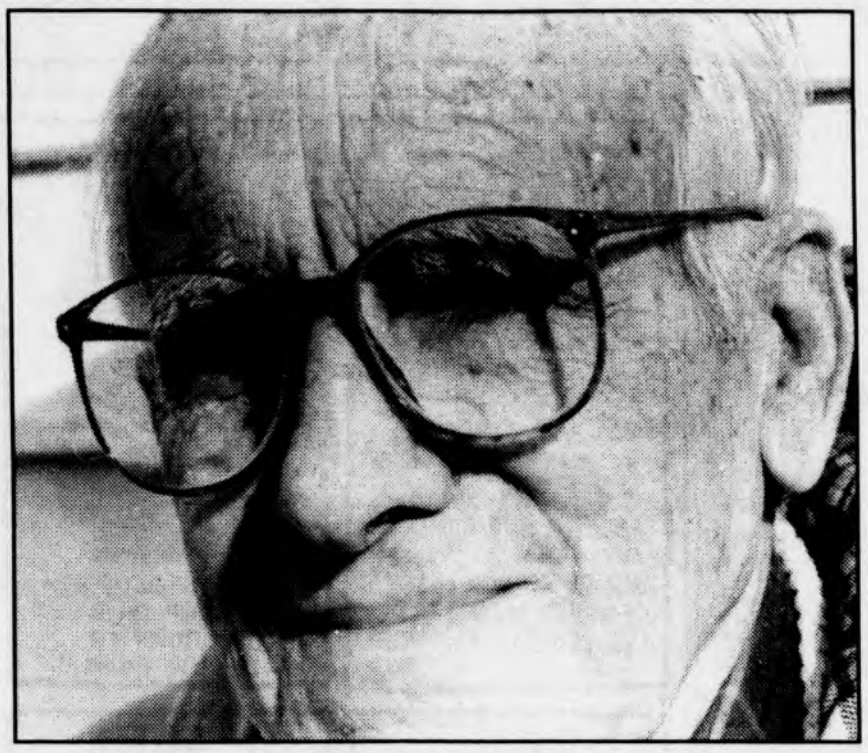
Anthony C. Laugelle, 80, of Cohasset, formerly of Quincy, died Nov. 9 at home.

Born in Cohasset, he lived in Quincy for 50 years before moving back to Cohasset.

He was named for his grandfather, Antonio Modente, one of the first Italians to settle in Cohasset.

Mr. Laugelle was a former project manager for noted architect Royal Barry Wills as well as a founder of the Alco Oil Co. He began his career at Fore River Shipyard in Quincy during World War II, where he was a "boss rigger." He worked for Wills after the war, serving as project manager for several Cohasset developments, including Deep Run, Windy Hill, Fernway, Surrey Drive and Lamberts Lane. Wills referred to Mr. Laugelle as his "most indispensable man."

Their projects were featured in New York Life, The Saturday Evening Post and Better Homes and Gardens. Mr. Laugelle also worked for Charles Wills, a major North Shore developer, managing developments in Boxford, Reading, Topsfield, Lynnfield and Winchester. He also supervised the construction of many homes on the South Shore. He was with the Wills organization for nearly 50 years.



Anthony C. Laugelle

Mr. Laugelle was the husband of the late Mary E. (Sandonato) Laugelle and leaves two daughters, Joann Lennon of Cohasset and Barbara Aveni of Braintree; three brothers, Rocco F. Laugelle, Joseph S. Laugelle and Peter G. Laugelle, all of Cohasset; three sisters, Lucy Spognardi of Roslindale, Pauline Litchfield of Scituate and Ann Blackman of Needham; four grandchildren; and many nieces and nephews.

A funeral Mass was celebrated Nov. 12 in St. Anthony's Church.

Donations in his memory may be made to Hospice of the South Shore, 100 Bay State Dr., Braintree 02185-9060.

Arrangements were by McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home, Cohasset.

Holiday Bereavement Support Group

The Hingham Visiting Nurse will offer a special five-week Bereavement Support Group on Monday afternoons from 4:30 to 6 p.m. beginning Dec. 2. The group will focus on helping people cope with grief and loss during the holiday season, and is open to anyone who has suffered the death of a family member or friend within the past year.

Grace Lettis, LICSW, HVNA coordinator of bereavement services, will facilitate the weekly meetings which will be held at the Hingham Visiting Nurse office at 10 Downer Ave., Hingham. "The grieving process can be lonely and depressing," said Lettis, "especially during the holiday season, when heaviness of heart contrasts with the festive atmosphere. There are no easy answers, but the support group can help participants deal with their loss."

There is no charge for the series, but pre-registration is required due to space limitations. For more information or to register, call the Hingham Visiting Nurse at (617) 749-1160.

EDITORIALS & OPINIONS

Thanking Our Veterans

In the course of American history, millions of men and women have fought and died in defense and honor of this country. They have given themselves in the name of liberty and justice. They have performed heroic acts on battlefields around the world uttering credos of "Duty, Honor, Country" or "Semper Fi."

They have done these things not for medals, glory, or even freedom. They have gone to war because we have asked them to.

Veterans Day is a brief moment when we take time out of our lives to thank veterans for their sacrifices and hardships they endured under fire in defense of our liberties.

On the eleventh hour of the eleventh day of the eleventh month in 1918 the guns in Europe and around the world fell silent. World War I — the "war to end all wars" — was over. November 11 was forever set aside as Armistice Day, to serve as a reminder of the atrocities of this great conflict and how they should not be repeated.

While World War I did not end all wars, soldiers fought in them and stood vigilant in support of those in combat and as a reminder that war should be the last resort. As the years go by, the ranks of these former soldiers, sailors, Marines and airmen are becoming thinner. With each year their numbers dwindle. To, too, do the memories of their heroics, exploits, tragedies and suffering.

Prussian General Karl Von Clausewitz wrote that war is the ultimate extension of diplomacy. If this is true, then the political gains and losses are measured in blood, sweat and tears of the men and women who fight and die. While some picture military figures as war mongers, the reality is they are the last ones who want to resort to violence. While our leaders make speeches about liberty and freedom, our citizen soldiers have sprawled in mud and puddles of blood, hoping to live long enough to see their homes again.

The men and women of the American Legion, Veterans of Foreign Wars, Disabled American Veterans and other veterans groups carry the memories of the horrors of warfare. There are few World War I veterans remaining and the number of World War II veterans grows smaller every day. Even Korean War veterans are spread thinly. And without a major conflict since Vietnam, the number of veterans left to warn us away from war continues to decline.

In the 20 years since the Vietnam War, an entire generation of Americans has grown without knowing the true tragedies of a major, lengthy war involving U.S. troops. While spared the horrors, this time of relative peace has given rise to revisionist thinking, as some intellectuals try to second guess the decisions of our leaders a half-century ago — claiming there was no need to drop the atomic bomb on Japan or that the United States allowed the bombing of Pearl Harbor to happen.

Even worse, there are some extremists who are trying to rewrite history and erase the atrocities of the century's major conflicts. Some have even suggested the Holocaust never happened.

Documentation, facts and statistics can always be manipulated, but the living memories held by our veterans is indisputable and irreplaceable.

Regardless of how we feel about war or military conflict, the men and women who have donned an American uniform deserve our respect and admiration. They have done more for our country than most of us will ever do in a lifetime. We must keep their memory alive, as a tribute to them and so we never forget the terrors of war.

Cohasset took a big step toward that effort this week by dedicating town squares to those soldiers who lost their lives in Vietnam and Korea. We thank all those who worked so tirelessly to make Sunday's event such a moving one.

More CHL Testing Should be Required

To the Editor:

Recent environmental testing at Boulder Lane in Whitney Woods (monitoring wells 8 and 8A) downhill from the Cohasset Heights Ltd. (CHL) landfill, has found detectable levels of hazardous volatile organic chemicals (VOC's) which have migrated about 1500 feet south from the landfill in the direction of Lily Pond, our source of public drinking water. The VOC's detected were acetone and carbon disulfide.

This is an alarming finding, which may indicate that hazardous VOC's may have already migrated even further south and even closer to Lily Pond. However, since CHL has never been required either by the state or the town to test groundwater and surface water south of Boulder Lane, we have no way of knowing at this time whether the landfill is in imminent danger of polluting Lily Pond.

CHL must be required — soon — to test for VOC's in groundwater and surface water between Boulder Lane and Lily Pond, including Brass Kettle Brook, and must be required to remove any contamination that is found, if we are to have any chance of protecting our public drinking water supply from contamination from CHL.

Comment Boxes Placed in All Schools

The Cohasset School Councils have begun their meetings for the school year. In order to facilitate communications in the community, the school committee had placed "comment boxes" in each school.

The Jr./Sr. High School Council met Sept. 11 and Oct. 9. As part of ongoing maintenance, this summer, renovations were completed on the front hall administration offices.

There will be three meetings this year with representatives from the New England League of Middle Schools to continue developing the Middle School concept at CHS. Nov. 1, an in-service, led by Barbara Dane, was held for the Middle School faculty.

Parents of grades five, six, seven and eight will meet on Nov. 14 with Dr. Robert Spear to discuss the Middle School concept. Meetings will follow Jan. 14 and Mar. 26. All meetings will begin at 7:30 p.m. in the HS cafeteria.

The next council meeting will be held Nov. 13 at 7 p.m. in the A/V studio.

The Deer Hill School Council met Oct. 8. After an address by Maureen Jerz of the School Committee and election of officers, the focus of the meeting turned to the '96-'97 Deer Hill School Improvement Plan. The four major goals of this plan are as follows: 1. Increase Parental Involvement. 2. Improve School Climate. 3. Improve Communication. 4. Assist the New Principal. All of these goals were incorporated in Mr. Callahan's "Make a Difference Day" at Deer Hill Oct. 26. Parents, teachers, staff and students were invited to spend some portion of the day helping to spruce up the appearance of the building and grounds. Refreshments were provided by the PSO. It is hoped that this spirit of cooperation will continue throughout the year as various projects are completed.

Further discussions included implementing the Code of Conduct, addressing the Deer Hill School Survey, and the "Principal's Coffee Hours" which are slated to continue this year. The next meeting will be held Nov. 12 at 4 p.m.

The Osgood School Council met Sept. 30 and Oct. 22. Discussions included effective ways to disseminate information to the school community in a timely fashion.

Budget concerns were discussed with council members voicing a strong need for staffing including additional reading support, special education, and a one-half time health aide. Equipment priorities focused on an additional copier for the school as well as increased computers and printers to be used in classrooms.

Readers Respond to Halloween Egging Incident

Results of Reader Survey question for Nov. 7, 1996

A large mob of unruly youth pelted Cohasset Police bicycle patrol officers and police cruisers with eggs in the village on Halloween

How serious do you believe this behavior is?

14 It's no big deal. It was just a Halloween prank. The Chief of Police is over-reacting

49 This is indicative of a large problem showing the breakdown of respect for authority and lack of parental discipline and supervision.

8 While this was just a Halloween prank, it could have gotten out of hand, resulting in vandalism and injuries. This behavior should not be taken lightly.

Your comments:

Since the officer's clothing was ruined, what the teenagers did was vandalism. Why weren't they arrested as vandals should be and charged with assault? When objects are thrown at a motor vehicle, the distraction could cause a serious accident. Officer Tarantino should have arrested the guilty kids. Why do we let Cohasset kids get away with wrong-doing so often? If one kid was arrested and written in the police report, maybe the others would think twice.

I think it's really disgusting. I tell my kids they can't even use the word "cop" for police officer. Friends I know and respect allow their kids—who were seniors in high school—out there to throw eggs at the bicycle patrol I think it's incredibly disrespectful and irresponsible.

Hopefully the comment in the editorial from the police department about not being able to arrest people because the situation was way out of line, is a mistake. Otherwise we have a big problem with the police department if they find egg-throwing too tough to handle.

I'm calling to say that I, too, am outraged with the actions of these teenagers. The responsibility lies solely on the parents. There is a lack of respect for authority because there is no authority with these parents. If they're foolish to think groups of teenagers go out on Halloween and just walk around pleasantly, they really have short memories.

I think it was unfair of the Mariner to say that all kids are responsible for this. Because the way the editorial described teenagers today made us all sound rebellious. What happened on Halloween was a small percentage of kids, and they're not all from Cohasset. Not all teenagers are like that, and all teenagers aren't rebellious and not all should take the blame for this. It's not fair to judge all kids this way.

It's unfair to label all teenagers because of one incident. Not all are like that.

I don't think this is a big deal at all. It's just Halloween. You don't see kids throwing eggs any other day of the year. It's not only the Police Chief that's over-reacting, there's one cop, Richard Yocum who over-reacted. He's did a terrible job of handling the situation that night. He yelled at people who were wrongly accused of doing things. He should be spoken to about it.

I think this is terrible. The parents probably don't know what they're up to, which shows they're not communicating with them. Efforts should be made to track these kids down and make them held responsible and their parents. We're going to end up with is a curfew on Halloween. This is totally unacceptable behavior.

A week before Halloween, we had a group of teenagers go through our neighborhood (Linden Drive) and destroyed pumpkins, fences, mailboxes—anything they could get their hands on. The police were finally alerted after they had done hundreds of dollars in damage. It was finally traced back to a party, and it turned out it was most of the football team that participated in this behavior. Only one of the individuals was held responsible. He never apologized. The police simply had one individual who had the party held responsible, and he's supposed to pay for the damage. This doesn't teach the kids in town a lesson: to have one person held responsible, monetarily, when in the end it's the parents who end up paying. All those kids should have come door-to-door and apologized, and then put to work to fix those items. We can't teach responsibility if we just accept checks from parents. The police need to take a harder line.

These children should realize that the only reason that the only reason they are able to sleep safely is because of the protection of the police. The police are very important members of the community, and we should respect them, and be grateful for what they do for use.

I think Cohasset has a very serious problem with the lack of parental discipline and supervision. What do the parents think the kids are doing on Halloween—which happens to be a school night—when they're not at home? They're up to no good, and I think the parents should be fully responsible, and should back up the police, who are trying to do their job. I'm outraged after I read the editorial.

I find it appalling that the only mention of the incident is in the editorial. This is the first I've heard of it. I'm surprised we haven't seen more about this. As a parent in the community, we should want that.

I was driving home from work around 9 o'clock on Halloween, and it was absolutely unbelievable: the children—they're not children, they're young adults—in the roadway, in dark clothes, screaming and screeching. I think it was a poor, poor showing.

I would not make light that this incident occurred. The police should make note that they often bully the kids and don't show them any respect. This doesn't warrant the behavior by the youths on Halloween, however, I think it's time that the police have some understanding and some respect, and remember that the kids are part of the town, too. I've seen kids walk into Tedeschi's to buy a soda and stop outside to remove the cap, and be yelled at to "move along" or "what are you doing here" and treated rudely. I don't think the kids should have free reign, but they are citizens and should be shown respect. I stood in the high school and heard Officer Laugelle greet the graduating seniors with the words, "Don't worry the summer isn't over yet. I can still arrest you." Come on. Tell me he isn't asking to be pelted with an egg.

No children past 6th grade should be out on Halloween. This night is for young children and it's no place for junior high or older children. This age group put tremendous pressure on their parents to be allowed out at night, and parents must be firm in not allowing junior high or high school kids out at night. These kids are looking for excitement, and parents are providing an opportunity for that to happen. Parents, learn to say no to your kids.

I'd like to thank Mary Ford for her excellent editorial. I think too many of our children have no respect for authority and take no responsibility for their actions. Recently we've seen two illegal actions by the upper grade children and nothing was done about them. I feel that the responsibility should have been taken concerning the marijuana and this egging of the police officers, and I'm asking the superintendent of schools, the school committee, and the selectmen, as well as the parents, to please take some action.

I moved to Cohasset a year ago, and I thought it was a good town to raise my children. This is certainly not what I expected. I can't believe the kids would do this, to the police, no less. I'd like to see the kids who did it punished somehow.

I think this shows an alarming breakdown in civility and community, and individual accountability and responsibility. Next year, if something like this happens, there should be a larger police force, and these people should be arrested. This is assault on a police officer, and people can be seriously injured if this isn't put under control.

I believe this is just a prank, kids will be kids. The Cohasset Police probably deserved it.

It was stupid Halloween prank. The police are over-reacting and don't know how to deal with it.

It's stupid with the police over-reacting. It's going to happen every years, so deal with it.

As a police officer, I believe this is indicative of a larger problem, showing the breakdown for respect for authority and the lack of parental supervision. There's no doubt in my mind that the kids knew exactly what they're doing and had every intention of wreaking havoc across town. It's become an annual thing now. There's zero respect for the police. The problem comes from the parents who believe it's not their kids, it's somebody else's. Someone could've gotten hurt. The lack of respect comes from the parents, not teaching them to respect authority figures, police and teachers. The chief of police is not over-reacting.

The Cohasset Mariner will have a new survey question next week.

Water Company Clarifies Bills

Massachusetts-American Water Company will mail inserts with its bills to customers in response to comments from many who requested clarification regarding portions of their water bills. The explanation insert will include a key for each line item on the bill, which clarifies each date, quantity and cost breakdown.

"We hope this information will help our customers better understand all the information we provide on our bills," said Keith Bossung, vice president of MAWC. The company is providing specific, clear explanations for each line item to support the current bill structure, which was approved by the Mass. Department of Public Utilities.

The inserts will be included in bills mailed by the company over the next three months. Customers are encouraged to call the company to request that bill clarification sheets be mailed to them prior to the receipt of their next water bill. Copies will also be available at Hingham Public Library, Hull Town Hall and the water company at 75 Wm. Terry Dr., Hingham.

The water company has requested approval from Mass. DPU to bill customers on a monthly basis.

Hedlund

to the right" on issues such as gun control and abortion rights are less important to voters on the local level.

"He does his homework," Pratt said.

Republican State Committee member Polly Logan, of Cohasset, said she supports Hedlund in spite of those conservative positions because she in convinced that seniority in the state Senate is more important for the district.

Hingham's Democratic Town Committee chairman Tim White agreed that conservative Republican positions were not immediately identified with Hedlund. He also sees the need for moderation on both sides, if the Republicans are to remain viable and if Democrats want to maintain and expand the success of this election.

Logan said Hedlund has built a coalition, focusing on important local issues, such as the future use of the South Weymouth Naval Air Station and the impact of the Title V regulations on his constituents on the South Shore.

"He picked his issues and he did it well," Logan said.

Logan said the Republican party must moderate its positions, and attract qualified women to bridge the "gender gap" that has turned women to vote for Democratic candidates with liberal positions on social issues.

She noted good government cannot be too far to the right or to the left. It was Republican Congressional candidate Edward Teague's position on gun control, gay rights, and abortion that cost him the race that now sends Norfolk County District Attorney William Delahunt to Washington.

Pratt agreed, saying, "A moderate Republican could have won the Congressional seat."

Delahunt's victory now provides an opportunity for Gov. William Weld to name a Republican as new Norfolk County district attorney, as he did last year when William O'Malley died in office and Michael Sullivan, former Republican state representative from Abington, was appointed as Plymouth County's district attorney.

Similarly, in 1994, following the resignation of Plymouth County Sheriff Peter Flynn, Weld named former House Republican "Whip" Peter Forman.

Both Sullivan and Forman were elected to their respective posts last week.

White also believes that the challenge, albeit a late one, to State Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray is a sign that the longtime Cohasset Republican may be vulnerable. While Murray is respected as a good representative for her constituents in the Third Plymouth District, she has not faced a challenge in a several years.

If Buckley had organized sooner, she would not have needed a sticker campaign, White said. If Buckley had come to the Democratic Town Committee two weeks before the September primary, "we could've gotten her the 150 votes she needed [to get her name on the November ballot]."

With the name recognition that she has already achieved as co-founder of the Coastal Coalition, with her opposition to restoration of commuter rail, Buckley would have been a more serious challenger to Murray, White said.

While Harris acknowledges the difficulties the Republicans face throughout the state and nationally, he sees a positive situation on the South Shore. Not the least of which is Hedlund's 57 per cent of the vote last week.

He said Hedlund appeals to a broad range of voters because "he's not a country club Republican."

"I'm sort of a person who looks on the sunny side, at least here in Hingham," Harris said. "We have a Republican governor, lieutenant governor, State Senator, State Representative, and two county officers elected sheriff and district attorney. Things are not that grim. At least in this area, we weren't wiped out."

PERSONAL FINANCE

Think locally, act globally

Take advantage of world economy by participating in it

By the editors of Worth Magazine

To maximize long-term performance, an investment portfolio must be globally diversified, with at least 20 percent foreign exposure. We've said this many times in Worth Magazine, and our reason for doing so is pretty basic: Over the long haul, the world economy is simply going to grow faster than that of the United States. The only way to take advantage is to participate.

YOUR MONEY'S WORTH

One way to do this, of course, is to own foreign stocks — buying them either directly or through mutual funds. This is decidedly not a risk-free strategy, as recent events in Mexico and some Asian markets have underscored.

An altogether different approach is to acquire stocks in U.S. companies that do business either in foreign lands or with foreign partners. This option has been eclipsed amid the global-investing craze of the last several years. To this day, in fact, most asset-allocation models, including those at private banks, count all U.S. stocks as 100 percent domestic investments, regardless of the amount of revenue or assets from foreign operations.

Nevertheless, more than 200 companies among the Standard & Poor's 500 get at least 20 percent of their revenues from exports or overseas operations. By buying the right ones, an investor can build a portfolio that, for all practical purposes, is as global as that of an investor who owns a mix of international stocks.

Such an all-domestic "global" portfolio also has a number of advantages, including minimum exposure to foreign stock market risk, reduced currency risk, accounting under U.S. standards, and, in some cases, lower taxes.

Several money managers — like Edward Bousa, a manager in Putnam's basic-value equity-fund group — are putting new emphasis on the concept of investing globally through U.S. stocks. Bousa believes the strategy has become more attractive because so many U.S. companies are now in a position to compete effectively worldwide, having raised quality standards and lowered costs in recent years. He also notes that U.S. companies continue to be superb marketers and technological leaders.

Adds Madhav Dhar, head of emerging markets at Morgan Stanley: "The (global economic) revolution is a consumer one, not a producer one. Don't underestimate an emerging market's consumers and overestimate its producers." In other words: Buying shares of companies in foreign markets may not always be the best way to play.

By their nature, multinational companies also offer their investors certain buffers against market gyrations through things like currency-risk management and international tax planning. A multinational can react quickly to global opportunities and can shift investment levels if business conditions deteriorate. "If you're Colgate and you're having a problem in Mexico, you can take your assets and put them into Taiwan in a heartbeat," says Bousa. "A Mexican toothpaste producer just has to stay put" — with its investors presumably suffering the consequences.

We asked Bousa — whose funds include Putnam Managed Income, George Putnam Fund of Boston, and Putnam Equity Income — to put together a sample portfolio of seven U.S. stocks that would give an investor a substantial degree of global diversification. They include:

•AT&T: The world leader in long-distance and telephone equipment, which will be buoyed along by new Chinese and Saudi contracts.

•Avon: The global and U.S. leader in direct cosmetics sales, with 1.7 million sales representatives worldwide.

•Colgate: The leading toothpaste manufacturer globally. Overseas sales are currently growing 15 percent annually.

•Emerson: The top U.S. maker of electronic products and systems for appliances, appealing because of its low cost, high tech approach.

•J.P. Morgan: This top commercial banker in Europe and Asia, with 68 percent of its lending overseas, poses a big threat to Japanese banks.

•TRW: The company has made a successful transition from government to commercial work, but still has big federal contracts — the IRS's computer modernization effort, to name one.

•Warner-Lambert: This number three over-the-counter drug maker has joint ventures with Glaxo, Wellcome to boost its international presence.

As a group, the stocks in Bousa's portfolio get 47 percent of their revenue from overseas sales and operations. They also represent a combination of what Bousa describes as "the safety of your home market as well as a once-in-a-generation opportunity for U.S. companies to grow overseas." All seven are also among the leaders in their fields, a home and abroad. For instance Colgate is the second-ranked selle of toothpaste in the United State (behind Procter & Gamble), an number one in toothpaste overseas and has overall annual growth of 1 percent abroad.

Bousa also believes each of th seven stocks are attractively value now. "If you buy 100 shares of each you can get the entire portfolio fo less than $40,000," he says. "Th companies provide good growt rates, respectable dividend yields and good market positions in th U.S. and overseas."

COLLEGE SAVINGS PLAN

College costs are growing faster than your kids.

Your kids won't stay little for long. So you should be spending your time on bedtime stories, crayon drawings, and what's under the bed—not on worrying about college tuition.

Even so, the day will be here before you know it. That's why we offer a savings plan that can take the worry out of planning for college, with its own fact kit to get you started.

The Fidelity College Savings Plan can make it simple to figure out a plan that keeps pace with rising tuition costs. There's a worksheet to help you calculate what you may need to save, and information on a range of no-load, low-minimum mutual funds that have been selected especially for this program.[1] Plus, we offer a Starter Account Option that can make the whole thing affordable, allowing you to invest as little as $100 a month.[2]

Once you set up your plan, that's all there is to it. You can even have contributions automatically deducted from your paycheck or another account.

The sooner you start saving for college, the easier it will be to cover that tuition bill once it arrives. Get your free College Savings Plan Fact Kit. Call us today. It's time

We can help you keep pace.

Chamber to Host Auction

Cohasset Chamber of Commerce will host their annual benefit auction Saturday, Nov. 16, at South Shore Community Center. There will be a preview from 5 to 7 p.m., followed by a free Italian dinner at 6 p.m. and the auction from 7 to 10 p.m.

Auction items were donated by the Cohasset business community, and the VFW has joined the auction this year. They will be in charge of the dinner.

Proceeds will be split equally among the Appalachian groups, VFW and Chamber of Commerce and Harborfest.

Fox Accepts Position at Hair Salon

Steffanie Fox of Cohasset, a graduate of Mansfield Beauty School, has accepted a position at Finely Diane's Salon in Weymouth.

Fox attended Mass. College of Art for several years and finds her creative background an asset in her career in hairdressing.

Finely Diane's is a full-service salon located at 99 Pleasant St, Columbian Square.

Local Citizens Arrested for Good Cause

On Nov. 13, Carole Proodian and William A. Brown of Cohasset were "arrested" for a good cause, as willing participants in "Boston's Most Wanted," a premier event to benefit the Muscular Dystrophy association. MDA's Keystone Cops will issue warrants to both residents at their respective Boston offices and charge them with having a big heart.

Proodian and Brown will be escorted by limousine, provided by Customer Transportation Service of Braintree, to the International Restaurant & Pub, 184 High St., Boston, which is the official jail site for the event.

Celebrity judges, including several WCVB-TV5 personalities, will sentence Proodian and Brown, along with more than 600 other Boston business professionals participating in the event. They will serve one hour raising bail by collecting pledges from colleagues, friends and family on telephones provided by Cellular One and NYNEX Mobile Communications. All jailbirds raising more than $1,000 will be eligible for a prize drawing of two tickets to Paris, courtesy of American Airlines.

In lieu of the standard fare of bread and water, detainees will be treated to a buffet provided by the restaurant before being released for good behavior.

Funds raised will support MDA's local programs, which include an MDA summer camp, research and support groups for families and diagnostic and clinical services.

Proodian is an executive secretary at the Boston Athenaeum. Brown is a Boston attorney.

Greenbush Meeting is Slated

Representatives from the MBTA, which plans to restore the Greenbush line of the Old Colony Railroad through Cohasset, will attend the train mitigation meeting at 7:30 p.m., Nov. 18 at Cohasset Town Hall.

Skippers Lose Tough

South Boston Clips Football Squad

By Jim O'Sullivan
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

The Cohasset Skippers lost a hard-fought game to the visiting South Boston Knights last Friday in non-league action. Although they bowed 8-6, Cohasset showed excellent improvement on defense, holding the Knights scoreless for the final three quarters. The Skippers were helped with excellent defense from Jerry Cogill and Mike Rossi, and a good running game from Raheem Shepard.

Matt Belson kicked off to start the game with a blast, all the way to the one-yard line, but the ball was returned to the 22, where senior co-captain Grant Emde made the tackle. Jerry Cogill and Kevin Duffy combined for a tackle and John Kasameyer and Duffy joined for the next one. Defensive end Sean Parkinson and defensive back Jamie DeMichele dragged down a ball carrier, and the Skippers forced a Southie punt. An errant snap flew over the kicker's head and Belson, Jamie Buick and Justin Golden charged in to apply pressure, giving the home team possession at the 32.

Unfortunately, the Southie defense wouldn't budge, and Rossi came on to punt. A good boot went for naught as it was answered with a long return for Southie. An Alex Russell tackle could not prevent a touchdown on the next play, as a 19-yard pass tallied six points for the Knights. The two-point conversion made it 8-0.

Southie's kickoff sailed to the 17, where Cohasset took over. Emde sprinted for four yards and Shepard bolted for eight and a first down, ending the first quarter. Cohasset began the second with a punt, which drove the visitors back to the 36. Southie then took to the air, marching down the field with a series of short, effective pass plays. However, the Skipper defense held fast, forcing the Knights to throw on fourth down. Parkinson, Buick and Adam Sasso crashed through the line and made the sack, Sasso supplying the clinching hit.

The home team's offense just couldn't get into gear, though, and Rossi again came on. Southie's offense, in what would be the story for the rest of the night, could not move the solid Blue Line and turned over on downs, after Rossi made an excellent open field tackle. Shepard ate up eight yards for the Skippers, then two runs, for seven yards and five yards, respectively. Quarterback Pat Hurley fired to Buick for a seven-yard gain, but a CHS fumble was recovered by Southie just before the half and the Skipper threat went unfulfilled.

Shepard started the second half with a 23-yard jaunt and then rumbled for two more. Belson's two runs netted him nine yards, and set up Shepard's 17-yard sprint to the 3. Belson topped the drive, controlled by the sturdy CHS offensive line, with a three-yard TD carry. In a key play, though, the conversion failed, making the score 8-6.

Emde and sophomore Luke Caldwell combined to make the tackle on the kickoff, and Sasso and Duffy joined to make a tackle up the middle. Sasso again came charging up the middle on the next play, dropping the Knights for a loss. A Southie punt did no good for the Skippers and this was how the game went for the rest of the night, the squads exchanging punts and unsuccessful drives. In the final minutes, Cohasset mounted what could have been the winning drive. Gutsy runs by Hurley and a fake punt keeper by Belson added drama to the game, but the Skippers fell short, ending the game at 8-6.

Also in the closing drives, the Skippers lost lineman John-Paul Laugelle to a knee injury. Laugelle's wound only adds to the already extensive injury list. Co-captain Andy Hamilton emerged after a six-week hiatus to get in for a few plays last Friday, even making a second-half tackle, and Jordan Fiore, hampered by a neck problem, suited up but did not play. Senior Chad Whitman remains inactive, and Laugelle appears questionable for this week's contest, which will be in Norwell at 1 p.m. Saturday.

EXTRA POINTS/Joe Reardon

Just One More Betting Spree

I've never been a betting man. That's to say I've never been good at winning bets. This year for example I picked the Atlanta Braves to win the world series, Mike Tyson to beat Evander Holyfield and Roger Clemens to win 20 games. They all looked like sure winners..Okay...maybe not Clemens, but you know what I mean.

So now that we've learned that Boston College has had as much wagering going on as at Suffolk Downs, I realized just how serious a matter betting and gambling is in the eyes of the law. I buy a scratch ticket and keep one eye scanning the area when I rub off the numbers of the, what else, losing card.

But I have one more series of bets to make before I retire completely. Hopefully, the district attorney won't somehow come across this column and build a case against me with my past history of bad bets as incriminating evidence. But for the good of the Cohasset sports community, I'm making some bets. There won't be any wagering behind them, so I should be alright.

Reardon

I bet the Cohasset-Hull Thanksgiving day game will be another bone-chilling affair: Forget the fact that the game is being played on Cohasset's Alumni Field. It doesn't matter. I covered the Cohasset-Hull game before Jim O'Sullivan took over the football beat and it was murder just about every year.

The fall teams will mount a comeback next year and qualify for the tournament: The field hockey team just missed qualifying for the Division 2 South Sectionals, despite playing Hull and Hanover tough in each outing. The squad should be even stronger next year.

Both the boys and girls soccer teams were hurt by graduation, but they'll have stronger squads in the future. The .500 mark shouldn't be much of a struggle to reach.

There are better days ahead for the football team: Thanks to Torin Sweeney's freshman program, the Skippers will have a farm system of sorts to develop future players. Look for Cohasset a resurgance in Skipper football, but be patient. This change isn't going to happen over night.

Alumni Field will become Cohasset's new FleetCenter: No, that doesn't mean Eddie Money and The Oak Ridge Boys will be playing stadium gigs, remember, the Music Circus is still in town. But the field and track will be alive and kicking with athletes year-round. It shouldn't be long before we see the South Shore League meet in track being held there on a regular basis. The track is the best in the league and ripe for good times.

Youth Hoop Evaluations

It is important that your son/daughter attends a 45-minute evaluation session so that balanced teams can be drafted. Please note the date, time and place from the schedule below:

Saturday, Nov. 23

Grade 1 boys and girls, 9 a.m., Deer Hill School.

Grade 2 boys and girls, 10:30 a.m., Deer Hill School.

Grade 3 boys and girls, 12:30 p.m., Deer Hill School.

Grade 4 boys, 9 a.m. CHS gym.

Grade 5 boys, 10 a.m. CHS gym.

Grade 6 boys, 11 a.m. CHS gym.

Grade 7 boys, noon CHS gym.

Grade 8 boys, 1 p.m. CHS gym.

Grade 4-6 girls, 2 p.m. CHS gym.

Grade 7-8 girls, 3 p.m. CHS gym.

Coaches will draft immediately following these evaluations and call you shortly thereafter regarding team status.

Including playoffs, finals and consolations, a total of at least eight games will be played by all participants. League rules provide for an equal division of playing time, emphasize the team concept of play and encourage sportsmanship, rather than just winning. Team rosters, schedules and rules will be provided at the first game.

Thank you for your continued support. We hope to again make refreshments available throughout the season if enough volunteers come forward to manage the concession stands.

Questions or comments, just call Jack Worley at 383-6791.

SKI LESSONS AT BLUE HILLS

The Cohasset Recreation Department will conduct Blue Hill Ski Lesson registration Thursday, Nov. 14, at the recreation office, Cohasset Town Hall, between 3 and 4 p.m. and again in the evening, from 5:30 to 6:30 p.m.

Registration forms must be signed by a parent or guardian for participation in this five-week program. Beginner through advanced level instruction is available for children and youth, seven years old and older. Lessons are scheduled to begin Thursday, Jan. 2, and meet for five consecutive weeks, through Thursday, Jan. 30.

The bus will leave each week from the town hall parking lot at 3:20 p.m. and return from Blue Hills at about 6:45 p.m.

The fee for the ski lessons and transportation for the five-weeks is $100 and checks should be made payable to Town of Cohasset. Those participants who require equipment rentals may rent at Blue Hills and the cost for the five-week rental package is $45 per person. The rental fee can be included in the check for the program fee, i.e. $145.

This is the 20th year that ski lessons at Blue Hills have been offered through the Cohasset Recreation Department.

Over the years hundreds of youngsters have had the opportunity to learn how to ski or improve their techniques.

Remember, registration date is Thursday, Nov. 14.

ELM'S MEADOW SKATING AREA

The Cohasset Recreation Commission extends their most sincere gratitude to Paul Laugelle, Anthony Sestito and Harold Litchfield for their very kind donation of machines, effort and time cutting and cleaning out growth at the Elm's Meadow skating area at Spring Street and Cushing Road.

Each year it is necessary to cut and remove the considerable vegetation growth from the meadow in order to place boards in the Spring Street dam to collect water for freezing for ice skating.

Elm's Meadow is a lighted, shallow depth skating area available for winter ice skating to all residents.

Mr. Laugelle, Mr. Sestito and Mr. Litchfield, DPW Superintendent, are thanked for their day-long efforts Saturday, Oct. 19.

Cohasset High field hockey coach Deb Bostwick and her daughter Jenna (Center) pose with this year's All-Stars Lauren Dooley, Jo Hurley and Emily Collins. The All-Star game between the Atlantic Coast League and the South Shore League ended in a 1-1 tie.

MICRONESIA: MAJOR ADVENTURE

Micronesia is cradled in a part of the globe rich in almost every natural gift, yet known to only a tiny percentage of world travelers. Located about 3,000 miles southwest of Hawaii, the Federated States of Micronesia is a sprinkling of fairly small islands that includes Guam, the Mariana Islands, the Marshall Islands, and the Western and Eastern Caroline Islands. A trip to almost any of these islands can become a trip back through time, to an era when high-tech meant having flush toilets, and the most common communication devices were drums. While indoor plumbing and telephone service is now standard, the laid-back rhythms of the region remain. Prices tend to be inexpensive, and local residents are happy to welcome visitors from America, which offered a protective presence during World War II. Shopping for international goods as well as local handicrafts is superb.

We know you'll find that visiting unusual, out-of-the-way places like Micronesia will add more to your memories than you ever imagined. Let SCITUATE HARBOR TRAVEL put our knowledge, resources and experiences to work for you. Whether you are seeing the world by train, boat, plane, bus, or car, we'll help you get there at the best rate, with the least trouble, and with the most fun. Want more good news? Order Pies for Thanksgiving

The Appalachia Service Project, comprised of community student volunteers engaged in a home repair/home building ministry serving central Appalachia, will again be baking homemade pies and breads for its Thanksgiving fund raiser.

ASP volunteers will bake apple, pumpkin and pecan pies as well as cranberry and date nut breads. The price is $5 per loaf and $8 for apple and pumpkin pies and $9 for pecan pie.

Order forms will be available at local churches or by calling Second Congregational Church at 383-0345. Order deadline is Wednesday, Nov. 20. Pies and breads will be available for pick-up on Sunday, Nov. 24, from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. at Second Congregational Church or can be delivered that afternoon. ASP members appreciate the support of the community in their annual fund-raising endeavor and offer the following:

Hurrah for the Pumpkin Pie!

For a fine Thanksgiving treat,
One that's good and fun to eat,
Try a special kind of pie —
One whose price is not sky high!

Order now from ASP
And save yourself the misery
Of mixing, rolling, cutting and peeling
While your pressure hits the ceiling!

Get a pie while giving, too —
Pumpkin, apple or pecan will do!
This year we'll also bake your bread
To help you keep your masses fed.

These goodies are made with special care
By many teens who travel each year
To do some Appalachia home repairing
And give some hope to those despairing.

383-0345
Is the number to call to place an order.
Do it now and don't delay
So you can enjoy Thanksgiving Day!

Restoring 'Old Ironsides' is Topic

Cohasset Historical Society will host an illustrated presentation by Patrick Otton of the Naval Historical Center, Charlestown Navy Yard, Sunday, Nov. 24, at Kimballs By The Sea, 124 Elm St. The talk is entitled "Restoring 'Old Ironsides.'" He will discuss research findings underlying restoration of the USS Constitution to its original condition as a fighting sh of 1812.

There will be a cash bar at 5:30 p.m. Dinner will be served at 6:30 p.m., followed by the talk. Tickets are $16 for members, $20 for non-members and may be reserved by sending a check payable to Cohasset Historical Society to the society at 14 Summer St., Cohasset 02025. Reservations should be made by Nov. 18.

A cable TV personality will cap off the week on Sunday with a storytime for children ages 5 and older at 2 p.m. in Hingham and 4 p.m. in Cohasset.

Call Buttonwood Books and Toys at 383-2665 or Buttonwood for Kids at 749-2665 for more information or to sign up for activities.

Holiday Treasures at Consignment Shop

With Christmas only six weeks away, shoppers will want to visit the newly enlarged Cohasset Consignment Shop, located on Route 3A in Cushing Plaza. There is a new collection of Austrian Geiger jackets and authentic tartan kilts from Scotland; Burberry jackets and men's winter coats; cashmere jackets and sweaters; and designer party dresses, including a stunning white wool cape.

Collectors will want to view the Royal Copenhagen Christmas plates first issued in 1908, and English Lilliput and David Winter collections.

There is also an array of children's and adult velvet attire, along with Irish and hand-knit sweaters and gloves. Don't miss the sailor doll by Pauline, wood antique cradle and a varied display of stuffed animals.

Shop Manager Andy Merrill said the shop is open Monday through Saturday from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. The shop is staffed by volunteers, and she encourages both men and women to register for three-hour shifts.

Proceeds benefit the Social Service League, which provides confidential services, including family, geriatric, marital and teen counseling and advocacy and referrals for Hingham, Hull, Scituate, Norwell and Cohasset residents.

For further information, call 383-0771. To volunteer, call Andy Merrill at 383-0687.

PSO Auction Event Nears

Hurry and get your tickets for the PSO Fall Auction Event, from 7:30 to 11:30 p.m., Friday Nov. 22.

Here is a sampling of the auction items: a baseball clinic with Mo Vaughn, a Maine vacation home, hors d'oeuvres for a party, two children's sports clinics (baseball and swimming), watercolor instruction by a local artist, lobsters and more. Music will be provided by well-known musician and disc jockey David Becker. Hors d'oeuvres and a cash bar. For tickets call, Patty 383-2773.

Middle School Conversion Talk

In preparation for the fall of 1997 conversion of our current junior high school to a middle school, Dr. Robert Spear, executive director of the New England League of Middle Schools, will speak at 7:30 p.m., Nov. 13 in the Cohasset High School cafeteria. Dr. Spear will speak on the philosophy of middle schools and the process of implementing the changeover from the existing junior high to a middle school.

DRUG FACT

Marijuana contains over 400 known chemicals, and 61 of those are known as cannabinoids which affect the central nervous system. The primary psychoactive or mind-altering ingredient is called delta-9-tetrahydrocannabinol, or THC.

(From an article entitled "MARIJUANA: It's a Serious Health Problem," written by Pharmacists Against Drug Abuse and printed as a public service by McNeil Pharmaceutical.)

Teen Center is Selling Entertainment '97 Books

The Cohasset Teen Center will be selling Entertainment '97 books as a fund raiser for programs at the center. The coupons contained in the book and the accompanying card provide the buy with opportunities to enjoy two-for-one dinners at many South Shore and Boston restaurants, including Kimballs By The Sea, Whiton House, Inn for All Seasons, The Red Parrot and Michael's Waterfront.

There are also discounts for fast-food restaurants, movie theaters, dry cleaning establishments and airline tickets.

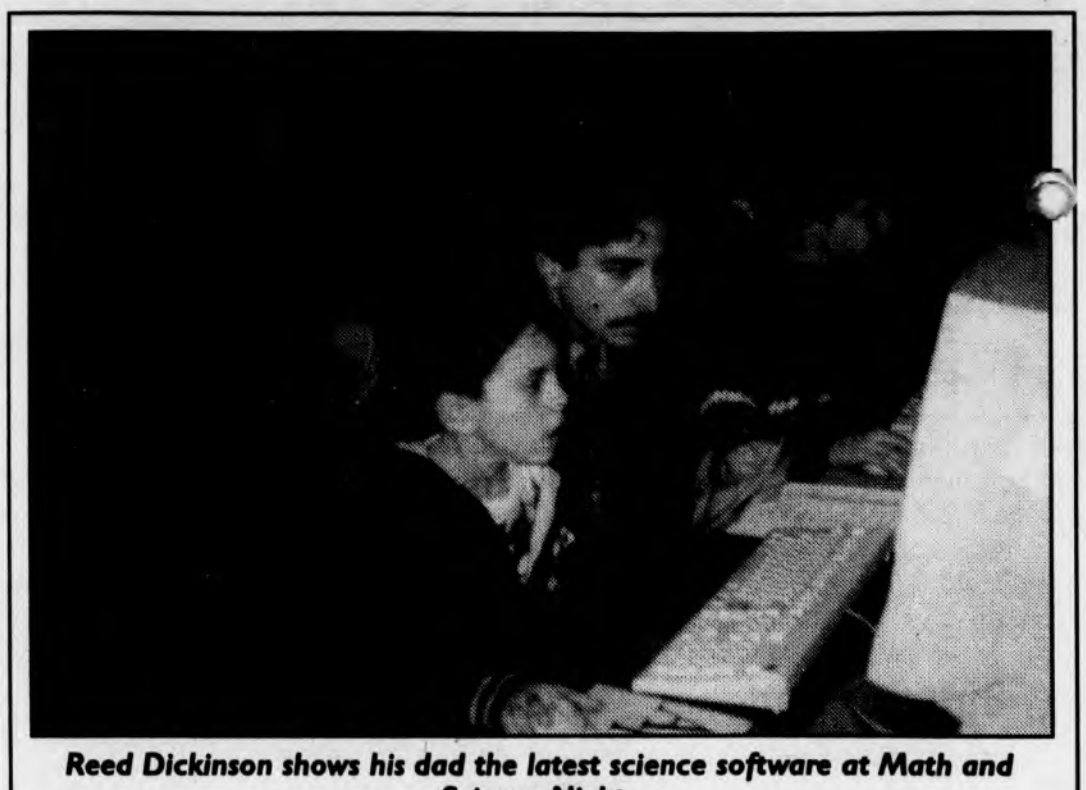
Anyone interested in purchasing an Entertainment '97 book to support the Teen Center is asked to contact Betsy Connolly at 383-1248.

Buy Wreaths to Support METCO

The Cohasset METCO Committee has embarked on a fund raiser this year. The group will be selling 22-inch double-faced balsam Christmas wreaths, supplied by growers who furnish fashionable nurseries. The cost is $8.

A limited number of "kissing balls" will also be sold, and both items will be available for pick-up at Cohasset High School Saturday, Dec. 7. Decorative handmade bows will also be available.

Watch for order forms in the school menus or call METCO coordinators Connie Afshar (383-6006) or Jean Hajjar (383-9917) to place an order.



Reed Dickinson shows his dad the latest science software at Math and Science Night.

Family Math and Science Night

The Osgood gym, library and computer room were alive with fun and learning as more then 30 second-and third-graders and their parents participated in Family Math and Science night. The Family Math and Science program provides an opportunity for families to work together to explore math and science concepts using common household items in a "hands-on," non-threatening approach.

In the science room, the pupils made predictions, tried experiments, and made observations based on the results. Balloons, plastic containers and cars were used to explore gravity. A bottle and tubing became a submarine in a tub of water. Children used markers and coffee filters to do chromatography. Parents watched in amazement as their children molded clay and straws in to three-dimensional cubes and hexahedrons.

The math room offered a variety of problem-solving activities. Children worked with ratios making three-bean salads, logic in maneuvering trains around a track, and spatial relationships in creating puzzles for their parents to solve.

Children took the upper hand as they demonstrated their computer knowledge by showing their parents some of their favorite math and science software.

Ending the evening was difficult as children and their parents found "one more" activity to try. Program developers, Osgood parents Mary Ernst and Linda Nash, are already planning an evening in February for kindergartners and first-graders.

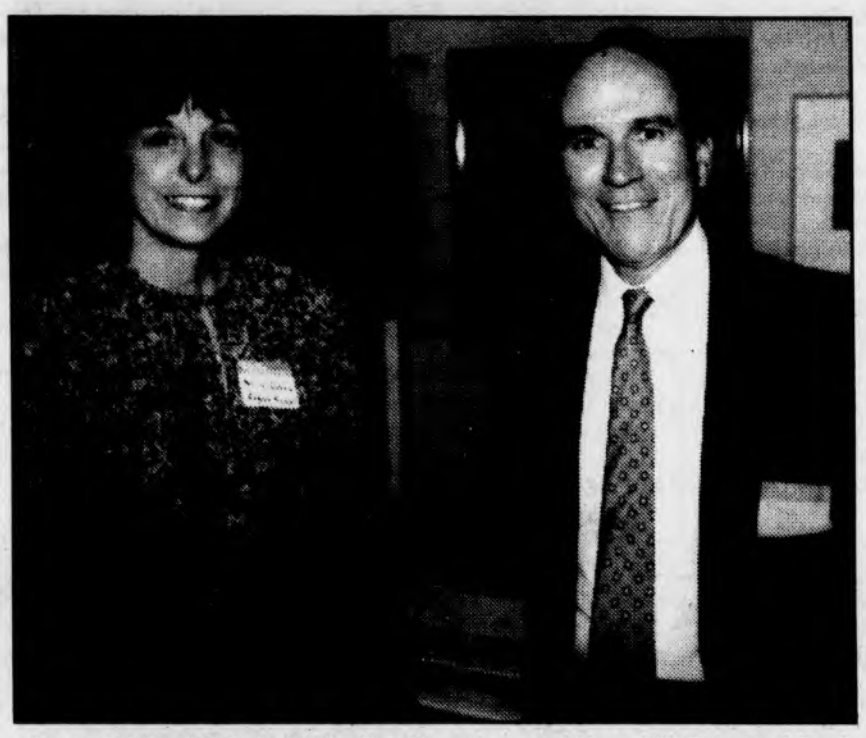
CEF's 'Evening for Education' was a Hit

Monday, Oct. 6, the Cohasset Education Foundation (CEF) hosted a successful "Evening for Education" fund-raiser at the South Shore Art Center. The occasion was hosted by the CEF as a kickoff for the new school year with the focus on the goal of underwriting of new equipment for the high school language laboratory. The evening also served as a showcase for CEF funded projects both completed and under development. Nearly 150 persons took the opportunity to support the CEF program and hear more on plans for the future.

The afternoon social also offered an opportunity for the attendees to meet with the system's two new principals, Paul Callahan, the new Deer Hill principal, and Marilee Cantelmo, the Osgood principal, discussed their mandates for the schools.

The gathering was entertained by members of the High School orchestra providing background music for the party. Jean Hansen, the Osgood computer instructor had several of her students demonstrating their proficiency with the technology that the CEF computer lab has provided elementary students. Another exhibit focused on the Naturalist in Residence Program and the recently completed Nature Trail other CEF-funded projects.



Osgood School Principal Marilee Cantelmo and Deer Hill Principal Paul Callahan were on hand to meet those who attended the education foundation's fund-raiser.

Representatives from a local distributor of Sony Corporation's language training equipment provided a working module of the system under consideration and demonstrated its features and flexibility. "A system's durability and adaptability will be important features in our selection. We need to ensure of a long service life, after all the existing lab was opened when I first joined the Cohasset system over 25 years ago," noted Paul Narkiewicz, the Language Department Chairman.

In keeping with the international theme of the event, celebrants were treated with pastries and dishes from a variety of ethnic origins prepared by members of the PSO Diversity Committee. Mike Hurley, CEF President, introduced and thanked the organizer for the event, Pam Speed. Mike also thanked the members of the community who graciously donated their time and fiscal support to the event and the foundation.

The CEF is an independent non-profit organization focused on developing new and non-traditional sources of support for the Cohasset Public School System. People interested in learning more about the mission of the CEF and its activities are encouraged to call 383-2833 or to write to the Cohasset Education Foundation, P.O. Box 224, Cohasset, 02025, for a copy of our brochure and additional information on our programs. As a registered non-profit organization, all donations to our project fund are completely tax-deductible and dedicated to enhancing the educational environment for Cohasset public school students.

CHS Students Named AP Scholars

Seven students at Cohasset High School have been named AP scholars by the College Board in recognition of their exceptional achievement on the college-level Advanced Placement Examinations. Approximately 54 percent of America's graduating seniors have taken one or more AP Examinations. Only about 12 percent of the more than 537,000 student who took AP Examinations in May performed at a sufficiently high level to merit such recognition.

The College Board recognizes several levels of achievement based on the number of year-long courses and exams (or their equivalent semester-long courses and exams).

Megan McNamara qualified for the AP Scholar with Distinction Award by earning grades of 3 or above on five or more AP Examinations, with an average exam grade of at least 3.5.

Ryan Sawchuck qualified for the AP Scholar with Honor Award by earning grades of 3 or above on four or more AP Examinations, with an average exam grade of at least 3.25.

Five students qualified for the AP Scholar Award by completing three or more AP Examinations, with grades of 3 or higher. The AP scholars are Erin Devine, Tafana Fiore, Conor Mangan, Kathryn Ross and John Whitehouse.

The Mariner welcomes letters to the Editor.

New Technology Behind Shaw's Septic System

By Charlene Vandini
COHASSET MARINER

Construction is well underway at the new Shaw's Supermarket at Cushing Plaza, with the recent installation of the septic system that should relieve many of the drainage and septic problems that plagued the shopping center in the past.

Cohasset health officer Dr. Joseph Godzik said the system has been designed to "contend with the high water table" and the ledge in the area.

In addition, the system is making use of new technology that includes pre-treatment of the waste water, installed at the request of the board of health.

With a larger commercial use, the septic system needs to address the higher BOD (biological oxygen demand) of organics going into the system, Godzik said.

John McGrath, an engineer for Tedeschi Construction which is building the new supermarket, said the system provides secondary treatment of the effluent.

The waste water goes through units that recirculates it through filters, purifying the effluent before it reaches the leaching field, but takes up no more space than a conventional septic system. It has the advantage of prolonging the life of the leaching field. That, in turn, benefits the businesses at the shopping center and their customers, because it decreases the likelihood that the parking lot will be periodically torn up to make repairs.

Godzik agreed, saying that with proper maintenance, the system could last indefinitely, but the key to that longevity is the education of the supermarket staff, for proper disposal procedures.

He also explained that supermarkets are no longer simply stores where customers buy groceries with meal preparation at home. Supermarkets now offer more prepared foods "to go" which is the reason for the health board's requirement for the pre-treatment component of the septic system.

Shaw's spokesman Bernie Rogan called the septic system a "smart business decision" that addresses the major drainage problems of the site. With the amount of paved surface, storm water sheets across the parking lot, across Route 3A and eventually through to Cohasset Harbor. If this situation is ignored, he said, "we could end up with one big sink hole," with the soils collapsing under the asphalt.

The technology, which Rogan called a "premier system," is a series of three leaching areas, Godzik said. Each area is designed to hold one day's worth of waste water, allowing a three-day rotation. A large commercial development "needs to build in a fair amount of redundancy" into the septic system.

Rogan said construction of the new supermarket remains ahead of schedule. The store is supposed to open in the spring of 1997.

Construction of Shaw's Plaza is well underway at the former Cushing Plaza site off Route 3A.

Coffee House to Present Sampou and McCormick

The Coffee House off the Square will present prize-winning blues/folk-oriented singer-songwriter Les Sampou and the masterful "modern minstrel," John McCormick Saturday, Nov. 16, at 8 p.m. The event will take place in Old Ship Church's Parish House, 105 Main St., Hingham Square.

Sampou's crystalline folk music combines with stomping blues, while McCormick's rich, deep voice, disarming humor and virtuoso guitar consists of a repertoire of contemporary and traditional songs.

Admission is $8 at the door. Coffee, Tea and desserts will be available. Proceeds will benefit Central American medical relief. The hall is handicapped accessible.

For more information, call Sue Krueger at 545-2798.

Tax Breaks for Elderly, Disabled Vets are on Table

By Mary Ford
COHASSET MARINER

Disabled veterans, qualified elderly and other low-come citizens who meet certain criteria have had the same real estate tax abatement for 50 years, selectmen learned Monday.

Windy Hill Road resident Joseph McElroy, speaking for the veterans groups in town, asked that the annual town meeting in the spring be allowed to consider increasing the abatements which would help take the burden off some needy homeowners, he said.

Under state law, towns can opt to increase abatements but must pick up the tab.

"Frankly, I think it's long overdue," McElroy said. "Especially in light of the rise in real estate taxes."

He noted that when the abatements were enacted in the 1930s and 1940s, the average house in town cost

THIS WEEK

School Board Meetings Go Live

Tonight's (Nov. 21) meeting of the Cohasset School Committee will be televised on Cable Channel 52, beginning at 7:30 p.m. This broadcast is the first of a trial series of televised meetings which will last until early next year.

"We've agreed to try televising our meetings to see if it helps more residents keep in touch with what's going on in the schools," said School Committee Chairman Ralph Kidder. "This is an idea which we've considered several times in the past. As part of our communications effort, several citizens have also recently suggested that we go 'live' with our meetings."

The school committee voted at its Oct. 17 meeting to undertake a

Harbor Park Progress Stalled

Abutter Wants More Action

By Mary Ford
COHASSET MARINER

Parker Avenue resident Russ Bonetti implored selectmen this week to do something about the town-owned Hagerty property.

Displaying photographs of dilapidated buildings at the harbor-front site, Bonetti said, "It looks awful down there."

Bonetti, who sits on the Hagerty study committee, said the group hadn't had a substantive meeting in months.

Town meeting authorized buying the property four years ago with the understanding it would be developed into a harbor park for all citizens.

Color renderings depicting walkways and picnic areas were displayed at an open house at the former Cohasset Colonials Showroom on the property shortly after the town bought the two-plus acre site.

Engineering studies are underway, selectmen say, but there has been no

'Citizen' Nominations Open

Nominations are now being accepted for the Cohasset Mariner's annual Citizen of the Year Award. This is a continuation of the award begun in 1993 to recognize an individual for outstanding service to the community or for a special achievement. Last year, Cohasset Mariner readers honored Dr. Robert T. Sceery, for his more than 40 years of dedicated service as a pediatrician in

Cohasset's Week

Pay Raises are Approved

Last week selectmen approved pay raises for David Weeks, a civilian dispatcher, whose hourly rate went from $11.82 to $13.09 effective Nov. 4 and for police officer William Quigley, whose annual salary will go from $32,607 to $33,333 effective Dec. 2.

Bills to be Paid

This week selectmen authorized payment of two bills for $567.87 and $2,000 from Gaffney Architects for work on the planned D.P.W. garage at the town landfill.

The board also approved payment of $1,065 to Hyla Ecological Services for wildlife habitat analysis which is part of the town's open space planning process.

Drug & Alcohol Committee Meets

The town Drug & Alcohol Committee held a round-table discussion last week with several concerned parents.

Committee members and parents discussed their role as educators as opposed to enforcers and sought ways to re-direct their focus from kids who do drugs to those who aren't. One suggestion was to offer support to those who make a choice to stay away from drugs, thereby making them feel stronger about their decision not to participate in illegal conduct.

Another suggestion was to ask the schools to always follow the rules in the student handbooks and notify parents every time a child is caught breaking the rules.

One resident suggested trying to obtain funding from alcohol and tobacco companies for drug education and hiring motivational speakers, such as famous sports figures, to speak to kids about substance abuse.

One parent pointed out that children are ridiculed for doing the right thing and another said that children get the message from parents who condone their behavior that what they are doing is acceptable.

The next meeting of the Drug & Alcohol Committee is at 7:30 p.m., Nov. 26 at town hall. All are welcome.

Pomarico to be Acting Chief

In accordance with the police union contract, Sgt. David Pomarico will serve as acting police chief from Dec. 9-14 while Chief Brian Noonan is on vacation, selectmen said this week.

Litchfield Resigns from Train Board

Selectmen accepted DPW Supt. Harold Litchfield's resignation from the Greenbush Mitigation Committee this week but will ask him to send a representative to meetings.

Calling Litchfield "an essential member," Selectman Nan Roth said she was not comfortable with his resigning without someone with his viewpoint on the committee.

Litchfield said he does not have time to attend the meetings because he also sits on the private ways committee and is involved in planning the DPW garage.

Volunteers Sought to Serve on Boards

Selectmen are looking for volunteers to serve on the Drug & Alcohol Committee and the Mosquito Control Committee. Interested citizens should contact the selectmen's office at 383-9900.

Tidal Grant Application Okay'ed

Selectmen authorized a grant application which would provide $10,000 for a joint program with Hull to automate the tide gates at Straits Pond. Each town would provide a $5,000 match, Town Administrator Gregory Doyon said.

Funds will be spent for design and construction of a mechanism to control water levels without the use of manual labor and for a new timing device which can be utilized in a pre-programmed mode to control the tidal gate operation.

"Recent storm events have shown how difficult it can be to control water levels with the existing partially mechanized gates, which still require heavy manual labor and the constant watchful attentions of an experienced attendant to monitor the operation," the grant application sates.

Shared Pump Station Promising

Town Administrator Gregory Doyon said "it looks good" that Cohasset will be able to join with Hingham in building a joint sewer pumping station in West Corner. Both towns are hooking homeowners in the West Corner area via a sewer main to the Hull treatment plant.

The former North Cohasset Fire Station was to be the site of the Cohasset pump station. It now appears that that building will not be needed, selectmen said.

Parking Change is Requested

Ronald H. Goldenson, M.D. wrote to selectmen Nov. 8 to ask that the handicap space be moved from its present location in front of the rug shop at the corner of South Main Street and Depot Court to next to Stagecoach Way where handicapped patients can easily walk to the office.

"Since the other end of Stagecoach Way has three steps, handicapped people must access the office from Main Street," Goldenson said.

Private Ways Board Okays Condo Plowing

Starts to Look at Street Acceptances

By Jason Bouffard
COHASSET MARINER

The road is paved for Cohasset's Private Ways Committee to begin making recommendations about the future of the town's roadways.

Last Wednesday, under the direction of newly-elected chairman Ross Rosano, who was assisted by co-clerks David Wadsworth and Henry Rattenbury, the committee wasted no time in voting unanimously to recommend approval of plowing and sanding services for the town's condominium complexes.

Selectmen will have the final say on the matter.

Committee members discussed the recommendation at great length and added several conditions which they feel must be met before condominium complexes start receiving the town services.

Terms of the agreement include the condition that complexes are serviced only at times when other town roads are serviced, that parking bans are adhered to when applicable, and that corners and fire hydrants are staked out so plow operators are aware of their location.

Other terms include that the town is not liable for damages, that roads with speed bumps will not be plowed, and that the town reserves the right to terminate the agreement if it sees fit.

Department of Public Works Supt. Harold Litchfield, who sits on the committee, said that the DPW has enough equipment so that the added services would not impose "an intolerable burden" on the department.

"We'll only plow the main loop of the developments," Litchfield said. Common driveways will not receive service, he said.

The recommendation comes in response to requests for services from several condominium residents. Committee members noted that most other towns do not offer plowing and sanding services to condominium complexes and that such services are normally paid for by the condo fee.

The recommendation will be reviewed by selectmen before receiving consideration from town council.

"I think what we have here is enough to send the selectmen and to town counsel to let them chew on it," said committee member Ben Curley.

During the meeting, the committee also began drafting a list of private ways which will be considered for acceptance by the town. Due to the number of roads to be reviewed, the list was not completed. However, the committee has already made a considerable dent in its "to-do" list.

The formal charge, recently set forth by selectmen, states that the Private Ways Committee will review the inventory of non-accepted streets in town and determine the pros and cons of accepting streets as public ways. The committee will also review policies for maintaining and plowing private ways and recommend changes. The committee will also meet with the sewer and water commissioners to discuss the installation of water and sewer mains on private roads. Committee members also agreed that they must understand the ramifications of reclassifying private ways as accepted town roads, namely, that such decision may open the door to developers. It was also noted that the committee should be mindful of potential road maintenance costs imposed on the town for newly-accepted roads.

The committee's next meeting is 7:30 p.m., Dec. 4 at town hall.

The Mariner welcomes letters to the Editor.

'Citizen' Nominations

town.

Once again, the Cohasset Mariner invites our readers to take this opportunity to nominate a person who has made a significant contribution to our community. This is a community award: The Mariner is the means by which we are able to recognize, thank and honor those around us who make the quiet, generous contributions that make Cohasset a wonderful place to call our home.

The deadline for nominations for the 1996 Citizen of the Year is 5 p.m., Dec. 31. Please see nomination form on page 4.

Following the close of nominations, a selection panel will review the names submitted and select the 1996 Citizen of the Year, who will be named in January, 1997.

Nominees may be someone in elected office, a member of an appointed town committee, teacher or school administrator, clergy member, firefighter, police officer, or other municipal worker, a person in the business community, sports figure or an "unsung"neighbor or friend who has given freely of his or her time and energy to a worthy Cohasset project or cause.

This year's recipient will be the fourth person honored as Citizen of the Year, joining past recipients:

1993: T. Gerard Keating, "Mr. Cohasset," for his more than half-century of contributions to his community, including chairman of the Council on Aging, chairman of the school committee, president of the hockey boosters club, vice president of the Cohasset Historical Society, director of veterans services, and lector, eucharistic minister, usher at St. Anthony's church and more.

1994: Joseph D. Buckley, for his work behind the scenes helping seniors understand the complexities of the health-care system and to access health benefits through SHINE (Serving Health Information Needs of Elders), his service on the Council on Aging, and volunteer work over the years with the Boy Scouts, Little League, Sunday School and more.

1995: Dr. Robert T. Sceery, for his more than 40 years of dedicated service as a pediatrician in town and school doctor. He also served on the board of health and led the fight back in the 1970s to get the town sewered. He is also a familiar figure at town meetings where he speaks his mind on important issues.

trail of four-to-six meetings televised from the AV studio at the high school. To allow these to be broadcast directly to Cohasset homes without having to depend on extra staff, the meetings will air on educational channel 52 instead of channel 3. Continental Cablevison is providing this access for the citizens of Cohasset free of charge.

"We hope this won't keep interested parents and other citizens from attending the meetings in person," cautioned committee member JoAnne Chittick. "Ideally, the broadcasts will help more people find out what issues are coming before the committee. We'll be looking at this trial early next year to see if it's a net plus for community awareness and involvement."

Sidewalks on Cedar Street Wanted

Melvin Waldfogel wrote to selectmen asking that the sidewalk committee add the part of Cedar Street, from the junction of Cedar and Main to the new town garage, to its list of recommendations.

"That section of the street on which Cedarledge Village is situated, which runs from Main Street to the RTF, carries a surprisingly high volume of traffic," Waldfogel said.

He pointed out that traffic will probably get worse with the completion of the DPW garage which will house town vehicles at the RTF.

Waldfogel said there are now young couples with children at Cedarledge Village.

"We worry about their safety when we see the children walking from the condominium to Cedar street. Even under the best of circumstances, when traffic is light, Cedar Street is a dangerous place to walk because of the layout of the street which is narrow, extremely curvy and hilly."

Early Deadlines Next Week

Due to the Thanksgiving holiday, the Cohasset Mariner will go to press a day early next week. All editorial copy for the Nov. 28 edition must be submitted by noon on Monday, Nov. 25. Items may be dropped off at Cohasset News on Brook Street in the village or mailed to PO Box 71, Cohasset 02025.

Cohasset Dancers to Perform This Season with Boston Ballet in 'The Nutcracker'

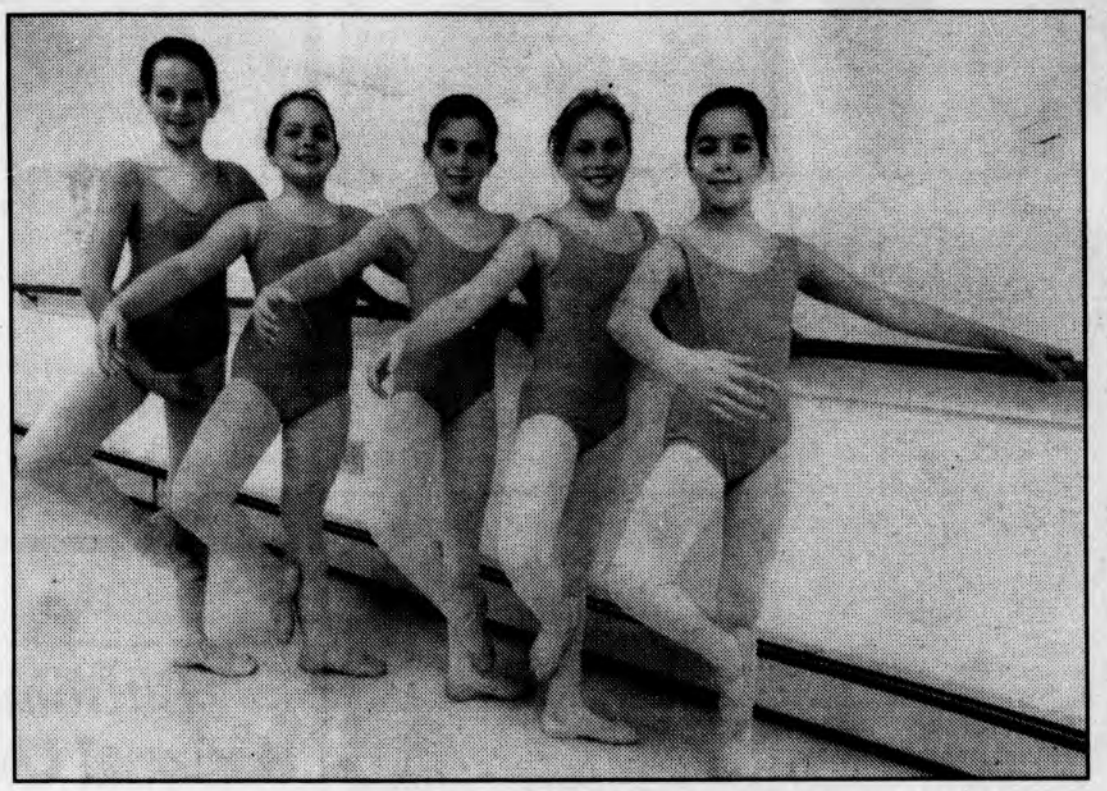
More than 450 young dancers, including 14 from Cohasset, will perform as toy soldiers, angels, cherubs, dolls, baby mice, reindeer, lambs, polichinelles, and party children in Boston Ballet's production of "The Nutcracker" at the Wang Center for the Performing Arts, Nov. 29-Jan. 5.

Traditionally, children have been a vital part of celebrating the holiday season in New England with the magic of "The Nutcracker." Featuring the familiar Tchaikovsky score, fairy tale scenery and stunning costumes, "The Nutcracker" is yuletide entertainment for the whole family.

Last season, Boston Ballet's production of "The Nutcracker" was completely restored, featuring breathtaking new costumes, scenery, and special effects. With an annual attendance of more than 140,000 people, Boston Ballet's production is the most popular in the world.

Performing a full-length ballet exposes students to aspects of ballet life they don't experience in regular ballet class. All children performing in "The Nutcracker" are students of Boston Ballet School. The students learn about the hard work, rigors, and enjoyment that goes into every facet of a live ballet performance.

This year, Cohasset ballerinas have been preparing and rehearsing since September for their roles in this holiday favorite. The soldiers are: Caroline Henderson, Mia Lieb-Lappen and Kimberly Ulmer. Caroline was the Gingerbread Boy last year, Mia was a doll, and Kimberly was a cherub for the last two years. Kate Schroeder is calvary; she has been a soldier and a candy cane in the past. The lambs are: Susan Curry and Laura Friedman. Laura was a doll last year. Amanda Faulker is a polichinelle; she was a doll last year. Megan Chastain is a party child; she was a cherub the last two years.



At the bar are ballerinas Kate Englander, Caroline Henderson, Mia Lieb-Lappen, Amanda Faulkner, and Laura Friedman. Not shown is Kate Schroeder.

The attendants are: Arianna Dedes, Kate Englander, Delia Regan, and Gillian Simons, Delia and Gillian were soldiers last year. Adrina DeVitre and Corey Sullivan are dancing "Tea." Both of them have been Clara in the past as well.

Tickets for "The Nutcracker" are available by calling Ticketmaster at 931-ARTS, or in person at The Wang Center Box Office, 270 Tremont St., Boston, from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m., Monday through Saturday. Ticket prices range from $12 to $59.

Susan Curry (standing) and Adrina DeVitre will be on stage in "The Nutcracker" at the Wang Center.

visible progress at turning the site into a recreational area since a couple of factory buildings were demolished and removed several years ago.

This fall, selectmen allowed the yacht club to store its floats at the site, an action that enraged Bonetti who questioned the policy.

Bonetti also questioned selectmen's authority in allowing storage of any kind at the site. He maintained storage qualified as a "change of use" and would need town meeting approval. The former cutting room is being used as a town garage.

Selectman Peter Pratt pointed out that selectmen have custodial authority over all town property and asked Bonetti what he thought was the "outstanding issue here."

Bonetti said the Hagerty project "needs more urgency." He pointed out that the antique boat house is being renovated by the Cohasset Maritime Institute, a non-profit school group.

"Their efforts are starting to show. I'd like to see the town catch up," he said.

Selectmen said they would ask Al Moore, chairman of the Hagerty committee, to come in to provide an update on progress at the site.

1997 Co-Captains Named at Soccer Banquet

We'll start off with a news flash for all of you CHS soccer fans — there was a break-up dinner last Sunday night, held at the Chart House. More than 170 players and their parents attended the pasta feast and said it was yummy!

Anyway, co-captains were announced, and here they are: co-captains for the girls soccer team will be Hannah Beggan and Alison Kinchla; co-captains for next year's boys soccer team will be Nate Cotter and Leigh Atherton.

It's easy to see that next year's new captains will help tremendously in their bid for the state title! By the way, thanks goes to this year's team. They certainly played as hard as they could and provided us with lots to cheer for! Plus, in years to come, they can always say they were members of the first teams to play on the brand-new Alumni Field.

Received news from Suffolk University recently. They welcomed Lauren A. Smith of Cohasset as she began her freshman year there, and we wish her a great semester and a great year at Suffolk!

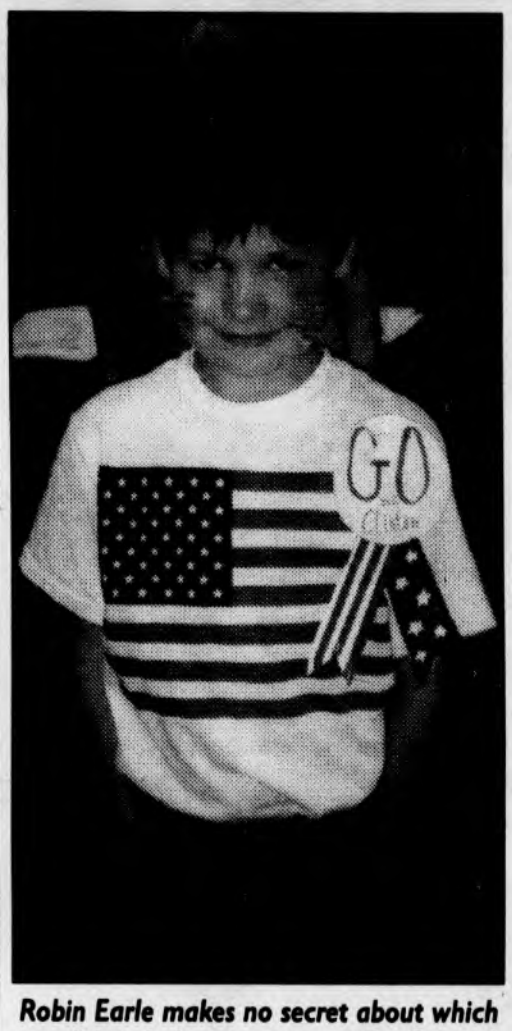
A reminder — be sure you purchase your ticket for the turkey raffle at the Legion; the raffle will benefit the Sons of the American Legion, who support many scholarships and programs for youth. They are $1 each or six for $5. You can get them from Tom Wigmore or any member of the Legion. Good luck!



Robin Earle makes no secret about which candidate he's supporting at the Osgood all-school "mock" presidential election on Nov. 5. Robin is in Ms. Wyre's second grade class.

Bryant College, located in Smithfield, R.I., sends us word that Erin E. Devine is attending their college as a freshman accounting major. Erin is a member of the Class of 2000!

We heard that Justine and Victor Vanderlugtf are celebrating like crazy the birth of their daughter, Grace Olivia, born Oct. 26. Congrats go out to you, and of course to Grace's grandparents, too. Hopefully we will be seeing Grace around town before the snowdrifts get too high to take the stroller out for a spin!

I must remind everyone once again to be sure to remember Cohasset Food Pantry. Their supplies have been dwindling, and they're in need of canned goods, including fruits, vegetables and tuna fish — jellies, jams, peanut butter, soups, laundry detergent, toothpaste and any non-perishables are welcome. At the moment, 30 Cohasset families are using the Pantry. That gives you an idea of how much food is needed!

Congratulations go to Steffanie Fox, graduate of Mansfield Beauty School, who is now a hairdresser at Finely Diane's Salon in Weymouth.

Hope you are all watching the school menus so you can see the order forms for wreaths (22-inch double-faced balsam) to support Cohasset METCO Committee. The wreaths cost $8 and will be ready for pick-up Saturday, Dec. 7. Call METCO coordinators Connie Afshar (383-6006) or Jean Hajjar (383-9917) to place an order or to find out more details.

Hope by now everyone has been in to see our newest market, CERES, located in the heart of downtown Cohasset! It is great, and such an addition to our village! If you want premium veggies and fruits, assorted cheeses, pates and all sorts of gourmet goodies (did you see the lovely bunches of flowers decorating the sidewalk last Sunday, just waiting to go on someone's dinner table?) Hopefully we have sparked your interest to go into CERES, then stroll through each and every shop to get ideas for the holidays!

During this season in which we are all thankful, it's time to thank Glenn Pratt for all he did in organizing the tribute to the veterans squares dedications! We all felt the loss of those soldiers honored; they touched many of our lives (in one way or another). Glenn made sure they were recognized, and it took him two years of planning to make it happen. We thank you!

This is a great week for news. Everyone has someone coming home or is going to visit someone. Call me and tell me where, what, when or how!

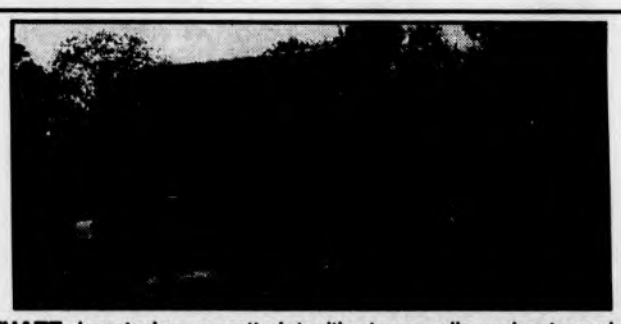
Community Gardeners to Meet

The regular monthly meeting of the Community Garden Club of Cohasset will be held Tuesday, Nov. 26. Coffee will be served at 9 a.m., and the meeting will begin at 9:30 a.m.

The club's own Frances Ford O'Toole will demonstrate how to create simple, elegant arrangements with a holiday flair. She studied Ikebana, the art of arranging flowers in the Japanese manner, and many of her arrangements will have an Oriental influence.



SCITUATE: Located on a pretty lot with stone walls and nature plantings, this oversized country cape has it all, bright country kitchen master bedroom suite with vaulted ceilings, lots of nooks and crannies and a spacious floor plan. Walking distance to the harbor $255,900.

Obituaries

Sumner Smith Jr.

Sumner Smith Jr., 76, of Cohasset, retired president of Abington Inc. and a former member of the Cohasset School Committee for 12 years, died at home Nov. 13, after a long illness.

Mr. Smith served on Cohasset's School Facilities Committee and represented Cohasset on the South Shore Vocational Technical High School Committee.

He also served as a trustee of South Shore Hospital in Weymouth.

He enjoyed outdoor activities and played hockey with the Cohasset Executive League and more recently with the Senior League in Quincy. He participated in the Senior Olympics in March.

After his retirement, he was a volunteer driver for FISH and the South Shore Cancer Society. He was active in Little League and was a member of the First Parish Church and the Council of Elder Affairs.

He served as a weather observer with the Army Air Corps during World War II.

Mr. Smith was born and raised in Lincoln. He was a 1938 graduate of Phillips Academy in Andover and a 1942 graduate of Yale.

He moved to Cohasset in 1949.

Mr. Smith leaves his wife, Martha (Hunt) Smith; two sons, Sumner Merrill Smith of Walpole and Lincoln Smith of Cali, Colombia; three daughters, Deborah S. Harrison of Dedham, Sarah Smith of Weymouth and Laura S. Fisher of Boulder, Colo.; a brother, Charles W. Smith of Ossipee, N.H.; two sisters, Elizabeth Bagby of Sarasota, Fla., and Alice Cornish of Brookline; eight grandchildren, and 10 nieces and nephews.

A memorial service was conducted Nov. 19 at the First Parish Church by the Rev. Jenny Rankin, pastor. Burial will be in New Lincoln Cemetery, Lincoln.

Arrangements were made by McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home.

Donations may be made to First Parish in Cohasset, 23 N. Main St., Cohasset 02025 or the Council of Elder Affairs, 3 N. Main St., Cohasset.

Holiday Bereavement Support Group

The Hingham Visiting Nurse will offer a special five-week Bereavement Support Group on Monday afternoons from 4:30 to 6 p.m. beginning Dec. 2. The group will focus on helping people cope with grief and loss during the holiday season, and is open to anyone who has suffered the death of a family member or friend within the past year.

Grace Lettis, LICSW, HVNA coordinator of bereavement services, will facilitate the weekly meetings which will be held at the Hingham Visiting Nurse office at 10 Downer Ave., Hingham. "The grieving process can be lonely and depressing," said Lettis, "especially during the holiday season, when heaviness of heart contrasts with the festive atmosphere. There are no easy answers, but the support group can help participants deal with their loss."

There is no charge for the series, but pre-registration is required due to space limitations. For more information or to register, call the Hingham Visiting Nurse at (617) 749-1160.

Engagements

Stone/Keleher

Mr. and Mrs. William Stone of Cohasset announce the engagement of their daughter, Chantal M. Stone, to Paul F. Keleher of Quincy.

The bride-to-be is a graduate of Cohasset High School and holds a BA in English from the University of Massachusetts in Boston. She is employed as a marketing coordinator for Tishman Construction Corporation in Boston.

Her fiancé is a graduate of Quincy High School and is employed by Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority.

A June wedding is planned.

Volunteer Musicians are Sought

New North Church, 1 Lincoln St., Hingham, is looking for singers and instrumentalists who would like to participate in the traditional candlelight service at the church Sunday, Dec. 22, at 4 p.m.

New North, a community church, invites everyone to participate in the service, which has been a Hingham tradition for more than 80 years. A Wassail reception by the fireside follows the service in the newly renovated parlor at the rear of the church.

There will be three evening rehearsals at New North in the weeks preceding the service. Choir singing experience is helpful, but not necessary, for vocalists.

Instrumentalists are encouraged to respond, with an eye towards forming an ensemble.

For further information, call Director of Music Sue Krueger at 545-2798 or following Sunday morning church services, which take place from 10:30 to 11:30 a.m., led by the Rev. Thomas Kepler. All are welcome to attend church services.

Lights, Camera, Action!

There's a new addition to the Thursday night TV line-up of 'Seinfeld' and 'E.R.'.

Starting at 7:30 p.m. tonight, school committee meetings will go live on cable channel 52.

The school committee has decided to try televised meetings on a trial basis through January.

We applaud this effort to bring more of the schools' business into Cohasset homes. Selectmen's meetings have been televised for years with great success. On many occasions, viewers have decided to come down to the meeting in person when the topic of discussion gets them fired up.

Communication in any medium is a two-way street. Citizens must tune in and find out what the school committee is all about or this pilot program won't work.

We think televising the meetings is a great way to reach more people. And the school committee can't go wrong with Thursday night when many people, armed with the clicker, are searching for something to watch until 'Seinfeld' comes on at 9 p.m.

Russ is Right

We agree with Parker Avenue resident Russ Bonetti. It's time some progress was shown at the Hagerty site. It doesn't appear that citizens have gotten much for their money. The town-owned two-acre harbor front parcel with its hodgepodge of dilapidated buildings has become an eyesore.

As Mr. Bonetti says, "It looks awful down there."

The Hagerty Committee, which once numbered an unwieldy 15 strong, hasn't had a substantive meeting in months.

Selectman Peter Pratt pointed out that selectmen are custodians of all town property. So we think it's time they took responsibility for the Hagerty parcel and got things moving down there. They could start by paring the Hagerty study committee down to a workable number of interested citizens and give them clear direction on what they expect to be accomplished.

Train Decision Was Too Hasty

To the Editor:

I was amazed as well as disappointed by the Cohasset Selectmen's abrupt decision to bypass a downtown Cohasset site for the railway station. I was even more disappointed with the selectmen's reasons for their action.

For the town's executive body to rely on a straw vote for authorization in deciding a question involving millions of dollars and that will seriously affect the town's future seems to me a dereliction.

For starters, a straw vote by definition is unofficial, never intended to be binding, and therefore has no standing. With the exception of those personally affected by the downtown site or were just plain anti-train, I doubt if many people gave the straw vote any heed. NIMBY (not in my back yard) perhaps?

Unless they were looking to place the responsibility elsewhere, why would the selectmen suddenly credit a straw vote with determining "the expressed wishes of the voters." With some 5,000 voters in town 311 voted for the 3A site and 112 for downtown. One hundred seventy-seven didn't even stay for the Town Meeting (that made the straw vote possible in the first place). Six and one quarter percent of the town's electorate favored the 3A site — hardly a mandate. Even if it had the standing of a referendum, that 6-1/4 percent would have been worrisome.

The five selectmen are the people to whom we have entrusted the power of appointment, enforcement of our bylaws, and the conduct of our town's day-to-day operations. We look to these people to accept the responsibility for carefully deliberated decisions. However, they seem to have ignored not only the unanimous recommendation of the Planning Board whose concern is with planning for the future of the whole town, and the request for further information from the Mitigation Committee which the selectmen themselves had appointed. On it were representatives of the Conservation Commission, Planning Board, Fire, Police and Public Works Departments, and the Chamber of Commerce. Sitting with them was the town administrator. One might think that the selectmen have an implied obligation to at least pay attention to and work with its own appointees.

Instead, they effectively washed their hands of the whole affair and called off the investigation nearly three weeks ahead of time, using the flimsiest of rationales, a straw vote, suggesting hasty judgment, if not prejudgment rather than careful deliberation.

The return of the railroad is no temporary expedient, a thing to be lightly dismissed. We can help make it a success for our people or we can just let it became a second-rate enterprise. The selectmen have the responsibility to make a well thought-out recommendation to the MBTA rather than dismiss it as a hopeless cause. I very much hope that the selectmen will reconsider and find ways to work with the railway for the benefit of our whole town.

Recycling Still Adds Up to Savings for Town

But It's No Longer a Money Maker

By Alice C. Coyle
COHASSET MARINER

The cardboard bottom has fallen out of the recycling market, but Selectman Merle Brown, who is also a member of the town's recycling committee, says separating out recyclable materials still has value for Cohasset.

About a year ago, Cohasset earned $85 for every ton of corrugated cardboard it recycled, this year it pays $20 per ton to have it removed.

Recycling newspapers is also costing the town money, Brown said.

Last year a ton of Boston Globes, Patriot Ledgers and Cohasset Mariners brought in $60, now Cohasset pays $20 per ton to have the papers hauled out of town.

"When the economy is good, the recycling market slows down. When the economy slows down, recyclables go up," Brown said.

Recycling is nothing new to Cohasset, it's been going on since just after the second World War, Brown notes.

The variety and amount of recycling has increased over the years as has the community's participation.

"We recycle just about everything there is to recycle," he said.

According to Brown, about 95 percent of Cohasset's population does a good job of recycling at the town's Recycling Transfer Facility (RTF) off Cedar Street.

From car and boat batteries and used oil to metals, cardboard, plastic and glass bottles— whatever goes into the recycling bins does not have to be transferred out of town with the rest of the trash at a cost of $75 per ton.

By separating out recyclables, Cohasseters are lightening their trash load, said Brown, who considers recycling not as a revenue generator but a cost avoidance for the town.

And despite a less-than-favorable recycling market, Cohasset is still earning high marks from the state Department of Environmental Protection's Division of Solid waste.

State Recycling Director Robin Ingenthron said Cohasset has earned an "A" on its recycling report card for the last few years and is currently recycling at a rate of 38 percent, above the state's average of 32 percent.

Still, Ingenthron says the grade and the percentage can be deceiving because some Cohasset residents and businesses use private hauling companies. Those companies are not required to report recycling percentages and may not provide access to recycling by giving users separate receptacles for glass and plastic containers.

By offering grants, now available to municipalities, which provide funding, recycling collection containers and consumer education to private haulers and by giving them recycling report cards, the state can encourage more recycling and edge closer to its goal of a 46 percent recycling rate by the year 2000, Ingenthron said.

Currently 70 percent of the state's population has both curb-side recycling and trash collection. Another 10 percent has curb-side rubbish collection but drop-off recycling and 3 percent of Massachusetts towns are known as "washed hands" communities, meaning they have closed their landfills and 100 percent of their residents have their trash removed by private haulers.

Cohasset is one of the 17 percent of Massachusetts communities with both drop-off rubbish and recycling, as well as some private hauling, Ingenthron said.

When the state set its goal in 1990, Ingenthron said state-wide recycling rates were below 10 percent. By making recycling as convenient as throwing trash away, the state is 2/3 of the way toward its goal, he said.

To improve recycling rates in Cohasset, Brown said the recycling committee is looking into implementing a per bag trash fee - a "pay as you throw" plan.

Currently residents pay a flat annual rate for a transfer station sticker — $65 per family and $33 for an individual. Those fees pay for about one half of the RTF's annual budget.

Under the per bag plan residents would buy special bags at cost of $1 per bag or $10 for a package of 10 bags. The bags could be clear or yellow with the town seal, Brown said. The idea behind the plan is that if residents have to pay for each bag of trash they bring to the RTF they will recycle more. And that adds up to less trash tonnage shipped out of town, Brown noted. It's also a fairer system for individuals and senior citizens who have less trash but now pay as much as those who generate more.

"We hope to go up from our 38 percent rate, but better yet, we are looking to bring the percentage down on what's hauled away," Brown said.

The plan, which requires the approval of the selectmen, could begin as early as next April, Brown said.

Reader Survey Question of November 21, 1996

To help residents keep in touch with the schools, the school committee is starting a pilot program in which meetings will be televised live on cable TV starting tonight, November 21. However, members are concerned that televised meetings will keep people at home. Which statement most closely expresses your feelings on this subject?

Press 1 Televising school committee meetings is a great idea and will actually encourage interested citizens to go to the meetings in person.

Press 2 Interested citizens will now watch the meetings at home, and won't attend in person.

Press 3 I don't plan to watch or attend any meetings.

Please note our early deadline, due to the Thanksgiving holiday: all responses to this week's question must be received by 12 o'clock noon on Monday, November 25.

Our readers are invited to record a brief comment after registering their responses to this week's question. Please speak clearly. We will print as many responses as space permits, but we reserve the right to edit any lengthy comments.

Cohasset Rail Station Prematurely Ends

To the Editor:

Nov. 12, the MBTA Greenbush Mitigation Committee asked the selectmen for additional time to collect further information before they decided upon the most suitable location for the MBTA Commuter Rail Station in Cohasset. The two choices were the former Winter Garden Site on Route 3A or beside the municipal parking lot in Cohasset Village. The design alternatives being considered by the MBTA regarding the village lot and the additional information requested by the committee on traffic and diesel impacts would address concerns brought forward by both the committee and the Oct.. 23 public forum. Because there are problems and benefits associated with each station site under consideration, this information we were requesting is absolutely essential to enable the committee to make an educated recommendation to the selectmen.

Instead the selectmen voted 5-0 to stop consideration of the village site and to locate the rail station on Route 3A, thereby prematurely ending a vital part of the mitigation process. What was the rush to make a decision nearly three weeks prior to the Dec. 1 deadline? If the mitigation committee as still unsure about the best location, how could our selectmen have felt so sure? The location of the station has far too many long-term impacts on the entire essence of the town to make an uneducated decision and end this important part of the mitigation process.

I personally do not yet know which would be the best station location. I planned to formulate my decision once I received all of the relevant information which I assumed would be the same way our elected officials would proceed. Mistakenly, I felt confident that we were working toward this common goal. It is ironic that there seems to be such mistrust of the MBTA when it seems we should perhaps be more worried about our own elected officials pulling the rug out from under our feet. Although we inevitably will be influenced by our emotions and those of our neighbors, I believe the best long-term decisions are made with careful scrutiny of all the angles and issues involved.

It appears that because a vocal group of village residents made such an uproar, the selectmen became intimidated to even consider a potentially unpopular village rail station. Al Moore, chairman of the elected planning board, which is unanimously in favor of a village station, said at the recent meeting that he felt the straw vote of 423 residents, (out of a possible 5,351 registered voters) was not an accurate reflection of the "silent majority" who he feels supports a village station as the best location for the town as a whole.

I suggest that if a silent majority does exist it is time to be silent no more. Your voice is important and is critical in keeping this process alive. As we have seen thus far, the loudest voice has won the selectmen's uninformed approval.

So, if you would like to make a decision based on facts, as I would, rather than on yet to be addressed fears, please let the selectmen know you would like the fact finding to go forward because you do not want consideration of a village station to be abandoned as of yet.

This is a personal view from Dean Rizzo, chairman of the mitigation committee.

Louis and June Simeone say 'Thanks to All'

To the citizens of Cohasset:

We extend a very large-size thank you to all who were responsible for the dedications of the Cohasset Veterans Squares on Nov. 10.

We are aware of the many hours in planning and execution that were expended to make this most memorable day.

A special thank you to Glenn Pratt, the shaker and mover and to our own personal liaison, Bob Jackson, who took such superb care of us.

We appreciate the collective hug given to us by the citizens of Cohasset.

Rights offerings: Should you buy in?

By the editors of Worth Magazine

It sounds like an offer you can't refuse: The closed-end investment company whose shares you own offers you rights to buy one additional share for each four you own — and at a price 20 percent below market value. Has the fabled free lunch finally appeared on your table?

YOUR MONEY'S WORTH

No; it's just Wall Street raising money again. Rights offerings are by no means gifts; they cost you whether you buy into them or not.

If you don't subscribe to the rights offering, the value of your existing shares get diluted by those issued to honor the exercise of the rights. And if you do, further dilution can occur if some of the fresh cash you pony up feeds the brokerage industry's fee mill. The best course to take if you want to remain a shareholder and minimize potential for loss is to sell the amount of shares you hold the rights to and then exercise those rights. That way you will come close to breaking even. The worst option is to do nothing. They're no free lunch, but ignore them at your peril.

In recent years, the markets have been awash in rights offerings by closed-end funds, whose shares are traded in securities markets rather than sold and redeemed by mutual fund organizations. From Jan. 1992 through April 1994, 59 closed-end funds raised $3.3 billion through rights offerings, according to Chicago-based fund watcher Morningstar. Many closed-end funds have enlisted brokerage firms to promote their offerings, normally paying them between 3 and 3.75 percent of the proceeds.

Closed-end fund managers like such deals because, unlike managers of open-ended funds, they see none of the cash that changes hands when investors buy and sell shares every day. To raise fresh cash for investment, closed-end funds sell new shares. Distributing rights to existing shareholders is the best way to make sure an offering succeeds.

Fund managers may argue that the more money there is under management, the better off shareholders are. Neither portfolio theory nor investment experience validates this view. It is, however, undeniably true that the more money that management manages, the better off management is.

If you plan to exercise your rights, wait until the latter part of the subscription period, when any uncertainties about the offering would have surfaced.

Why do shareholders barely break even — if that — in a rights offering? Let's say you own 100 shares of a closed-end fund with a market value of $10 a share. You and other shareholders exercise your rights to increase your holdings by 25 percent, one new share for each four shares held, at a price of only $8 a share.

You started with 100 shares worth $1,000, and you've just paid $200 for 25 new shares. If all that new cash goes to the company, your 125 shares should now be worth $1,200, or $9.60 a share; you have just about broken even. If you'd done nothing and let the rights expire, your 100 shares would be worth only $960, a 4 percent decline.

Never again wonder why the market value of closed-end fund shares shrinks after a rights offering is announced. If you plan to exercise your rights, wait until the latter part of the subscription period, when any uncertainties about the offering would have surfaced. Shareholders who don't want new shares can offset or minimize dilution of their existing shares several ways, depending on the deal's terms. Rights have an intrinsic value: the difference between the cost of exercising them and the value of the shares acquired. So you may be able to sell your rights when they start trading.

Non-transferable rights — those you can't sell — are a bit different. These, too, have value. If you don't want to add money but want to preserve your holdings, sell as many shares as you hold rights to, then exercise them.

You'll have to time this carefully. Typically, it takes two to three weeks from the time the offering is announced until the day the rights become shares, called the record date. However, you cannot sell your original shares until the ex-rights date, four trading days prior to the record date, if you want to receive your rights.

Suppose you own 300 shares of a closed-end fund with non-transferable rights to buy 100 additional shares at 80 percent of their $10 market price. On the ex-rights date, the shares will trade down to $9.50 each; your 300 shares are worth $2,850. Sell 100 of them for $950 using the proceeds to exercise your right to buy 100 new shares at $8 each, or a total of $800.

You keep the $150 in cash, minus transaction fees, plus 300 shares that, after dilution, are worth $2,850. Total: $3,000, just what you started with. Had you done nothing, you would have lost the $150, less transaction costs.

How to protect your Social Security benefits and other valuable tax tips

Many business owners and executives continue to work after they "retire." Some, however, fail to protect their Social Security benefits. If you retire between age 62 and 64 and earn more than $8,160 a year, the government will begin taking a bite out of your retirement checks. When your annual earnings surpass $24,480, Social Security checks will effectively vanish. The comparable annual figures in the 65 to 69 age bracket are: more than $11,280 — benefits reduced; more than $45,129 — benefits denied.

Because no penalties are assessed on earnings after you turn 70, the tax-wise move is to defer a portion of your earnings until you reach that age. For instance, if you're between 62 and 64, reduce your salary to $8,160 and defer the remainder. In your mid-to-late 60s, defer any earnings above the $11,280 ceiling.

Obviously, you may choose to earn more and experience some reduction in your Social Security benefits. When you continue to work after retirement, the key is to plan ahead so you don't need such high earnings from your company that it cancels retirement benefits altogether.

Wisdom for estate executors

If you're the executor of an estate that's unable to meet its tax obligations, the IRS will turn to you for payment. But if you maintain "good faith" contact with the agency, you can ultimately get off the estate-tax hook.

When the estate experiences tax problems, write a letter immediately to the IRS requesting a "discharge from personal liability pursuant to IRC Section 2204." Under this provision, the IRS must take you off its immediate target list and give the estate more time to meet the tax obligations.

You're not completely home free, though, until the estate pays up. The IRS, of course, will monitor the situation closely.

No Shallow Solutions for James Brook Flooding

By JASON BOUFFARD
COHASSET MARINER

A recent workshop held to discuss the flooding of James Brook proved that town decision-makers must wade through a series of options before determining a viable solution.

Town engineer Domenic Tutela told members of the James Brook task force last week that a major part of the problem is an inadequate culvert. He said that the two, 48-inch pipes which carry water into the culvert are only half as large as they should be to allow all the water that fell during the recent storm to drain. Seven inches of rainfall caused the Oct. 20 flooding conditions in the post office area.

The system, which was started in the 1920s, was never adequate, according to Tutela. He predicts frequent flooding if recent rainfall predictions continue.

Tutela said that flooding could be minimized by creating detention areas for water to collect and seep into the ground. Many residents in attendance complained that the town has not taken enough action to ensure that detention areas remain clear.

Some residents reported seeing neighbors illegally filling areas where flood waters have safely collected in the past, and expressed concern that such actions have worsened flooding conditions. They also complained about getting a limited response when reporting illegal filling to authorities.

Concern was also expressed regarding the amount of debris which has collected in James Brook. Branches and other obstructions have led residents to believe that the brook is due for a cleaning. One resident said that flooding has gotten worse as debris in the brook has mounted up.

Conservation Commissioner Jeff Waal invited residents to help remove the debris from the brook where possible and expressed interest in coordinating with DPW Supt. Harold Litchfield in order to address these issues.

However, Litchfield was concerned that limited DPW resources may put a damper on an extensive clean-up project.

Tutela also said that any added density in the environment such as a concrete train platform for the Greenbush line, would displace runoff water and have a detrimental impact on the flooding condition.

But clearing James Brook and opening up detention areas would only begin to alleviate the flooding. Selectman Peter Pratt said that a 250 percent improvement from the village area to Jacob's Meadow would be needed to solve the drainage problem.

In addition to limited detention areas, Tutela pointed out the tidal gates are beginning to allow water to seep through. He recommended that the gates be replaced in the near future.

"I think it's going to be a combination of answers that will make this thing work," said Conservation Commissioner Waal, who also cautioned that while storm water should drain quickly, enough water should be retained in order to preserve the town's wetlands.

"The eventual solution will require a sizeable injection of funds, hopefully not from Cohasset taxpayers," said Pratt.

He estimates that $25,000 to $30,000 will be needed to get "to the next level of engineering." He and Town Administrator Gregory Doyon will document the town's needs for federal funding available following the flood because Norfolk County was declared a disaster area. Doyon emphasized the need for residents to report all damages sustained from the flood, so that a higher level of federal funding can be attained.

A budget must be completed by Dec. 20.

Earlier in the meeting, Doyon explained that disaster assistance is available by calling, 1-800-462-9029.

"The town has been here before," Pratt said. "It's probably time for us to move on and find some solutions."

BE SURE OF YOUR TRAVEL INSURANCE

When an illness or other personal crisis hits, travel insurance can help keep vacation dreams from turning into nightmares - if you are a savvy consumer. The ins and outs of travel insurance can be complicated. The most important thing is to make sure you understand what type of coverage you are, and are not, getting. For example, trip cancellation waivers that are often offered by cruise lines typically protect the consumer's prepayment is the passenger needs to cancel within a specified period of time. The key here is to find out exactly how much money will be refunded, by what deadlines, and for what allowable reasons. Also, different insurance policies may be available through independent agencies by by the cruise or tour companies themselves. An experienced travel agent can help ensure that you understand the fine print and sort out what all the options mean for you..

Tax Breaks

about $5,000. Today the typical Cohasset house is valued upwards of $230,000.

Selectmen agreed to appoint McElroy to the ad hoc committee, which recently studied and rejected the "volunteer work for tax break proposal" for administrative and fairness reasons for elderly taxpayers but agreed to examine other options for tax relief.

In a telephone interview Tuesday, McElroy said veterans in town truly believe that Cohasset is "going the way of the western affluent suburbs" and will eventually have no economic diversity. McElroy, who is a disabled veteran, said the issue is a matter of principle to him and pointed out that he will not take the increased abatement if it is approved.

McElroy suggested the exemptions be doubled. Disabled veterans may currently qualify for $175 and needy elderly for $500 in annual exemptions.

Assessor Jim Lagrotteria said 128 Cohasset citizens currently qualify for the abatements. He told selectmen he was not in favor of increasing them because of the administrative load it would create at the busiest time of year in the assessors' office. Under state law, those who qualify for the increase would not be able to pay less than they did in the prior year. Increasing the exemption may put some qualified citizens into that category creating an administrative nightmare and tying up the office's time with explaining the law, Lagrotteria said.

"We'd be spending a hell of a lot of effort to grant additional monies to 128 people. It's not worth the effort at this point an time," he said.

Lagrotteria also said it also is unfair to ask the balance of the homeowners to pay more.

"We'd be asking 2,300 homeowners to assist 128," he said. "This is poor timing with what we face in town with additional tax burden."

Currently the town grants $31,864 in annual abatements. Of that amount the state picks up about $13,000. Doubling the abatements would cost the town an additional $22,000 a year.

Town treasurer/collector Joe Buckley said he felt the property tax deferments currently in place are the best solution for elderly citizens who have trouble paying their tax bill.

McElroy said it was important to look at the intention of the laws which is to help needy people.

Buckley said while it's good to have higher exemptions, many young couples are holding three jobs to make ends meet.

He explained that with tax deferrals, the town recoups the money plus interest when the house is sold. Last year the town granted $55,000 in deferrals and collected $53,000. He said 15 homeowners are currently deferring all or part of their taxes.

McElroy, who said while deferrals are an option, the equity in a home is all some have to pass on. He stressed that the issue of increased exemptions should be put on town meeting floor for a fair airing.

Advisory board chairman Roger Whitley said he agreed that it should be discussed at town meeting.

Jones' Star is Still Rising

Former Cohasset High star Ray Jones breaks a tackle for a big gain during a Trinity College game. Jones had a huge season for Trinity, setting a number of rushing records along the way.

Former Cohasset Athlete Excels on Trinity Team

By Joe Reardon
COHASSET MARINER

Sometimes great athletes with a bevy of accomplishments have somewhat inauspicious starts in their sports careers.

Trinity College's Ray Jones, a former Cohasset High student, is one of those fierce competitors who pushed the disappointment of being cut from one sport behind, and put his best step forward in another.

Jones was cut from the JV basketball team during his sophomore year, but before you could say "Half-Nelson" the wrestling coach recruited him for the high school grappling squad.

"(Wrestling coach) Torin Sweeney picked him right up and he never missed a beat," said Cohasset High Athletic Director Clark Chatterton. "That's kind of a Michael Jordan story. He didn't make his high school team as a sophomore either."

Like Jordan, Jones has been successful in his athletic endeavors. Once on the wrestling mats, Jones took a liking to the sport and proceeded to earn a state championship. He continued to improve and earned All-American honors by finishing seventh in the 167-pound weight class. On the track, where he was also a state long-jump champion in high school, Jones broke the Trinity record in the event.

But it has been on the football field where Jones has put up career numbers that have been nothing short of eye-popping.

Jones, a running back and kick returner, became just Trinity's third player ever to rush for 1,000 yards in a season, scrambling for 1,270 this fall. He was the leading rusher in the New England Small College Athletic Conference and scored 13 touchdowns, also a conference best.

Clippers Shut Down Cohasset

Football Team Drops 20-0 Decision

By Jim O'Sullivan
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

In their first Saturday game of the year, the Cohasset Skippers lost 20-0, to a Norwell Clippers squad which relied on a powerful running game and a greedy defensive secondary. The Skippers were led by Jamie DeMichele, John Kasameyer and Mike Kearney, all of whom played quite well on defense. Hurt by penalties, the Skipper offense never found its groove, and could not reach the Clipper end zone.

In the first quarter, Jarred Batts and Luke Caldwell provided the pass protection that allowed quarterback Pat Hurley to connect with Jamie Buick on a fake punt. However, the Skippers gave up an interception, and the Norwell offense took the field. A sturdy CHS defense, led by Kearney's superb pass coverage, forced a punt, which Justin Golden carried back to the 44-yard line of Cohasset before he was collared. Hurley punted away. Tackles by Andy Hamilton, Kevin Duffy, DeMichele, and Kasameyer all only delayed Brian Fabrizio's 18-yard touchdown run at the start of the second quarter. Golden, DeMichele and Matt Belson stuffed the two point conversion.

Hurley started off the Skipper drive with a completed pass to a diving Buick. Penalties forced the Skippers to punt, and Hurley, in his first game as a punter, uncorked a long line drive which bounced all the way to the Norwell 25-yard line, for a total of 61 yards. But, the Clipper offense got going again. Belson, Jerry Cogill, DeMichele, Grant Emde, Hamilton, Alex Russell all assisted on tackles. The Clippers looked as if they would score, however, until DeMichele came from his safety position to make an interception.

However, the speedy Norwell secondary answered this with a pick of their own. The game grew sloppy at this point, as the Clippers returned the ball to the Skippers when Belson ripped it loose and Buick pounced on it. The Skippers were able to squeeze off a few plays before tossing an interception. This led to a Matt Lewis 13-yard touchdown catch from QB Brian Doherty. DeMichele and Kasameyer stopped the conversion and the score stood at 12-0. Just before halftime, Golden fell on the kickoff, and the Skippers ran out the clock before the break.

The second half started with a Norwell drive, despite tackles by Cogill, DeMichele, Golden and defensive end Sean Parkinson. Belson knocked Fabrizio out at the goal line but the back answered with a touchdown run and then the conversion, making the score 20-0, where it would stand for the remainder of the game.

Emde's rushes couldn't gain a first down and the Skippers punted again. Hurley's punt was caught, but Parkinson forced the returner out of bounds. Russell and Duffy crashed through the line to register a sack. A Fabrizio TD was called back because of an illegal block, and Buick, Duffy and Hamilton held up the Clipper offense. The Clippers threatened, though, and appeared to have a touchdown pass, when Kearney made the hit, jarring the ball loose and saving another Norwell tally. Russell forced a fumble and Rossi jumped on it, but the Skipper offense couldn't gain any momentum.

The game ended this way, with the CHS offense failing to get started, and the defense playing well enough to stop the home team. Caldwell and Cogill both made tackles in the final few minutes, but the game was already out of reach.

Jones is ranked 11th in the nation in Division 3 with a 143.1 average per game.

It's safe to say that as Jones went, so did Trinity. In the nine times he rushed for over 100 yards in his career, Trinity was a perfect 9-0.

But by far, the statistic that makes you shake your head in utter amazement is the 303 yards Jones rushed for on Nov. 9 in Trinity's 35-28 win over Wesleyan. The phenomenal chunk of yardage Jones ate up shattered the school's 16-year-old record of 269 yards.

Jones finished the first half with a modest 51 yards, but offensive changes brought his running game to another level, enabling Jones to run rampant for 252 second-half yards. He had touchdown runs of 90 and 35 yards.

"We threw in some new plays we hadn't used all year and the linemen really opened up the holes," Jones said. "It was great."

Probably the person most surprised by the performance, is, well, Jones himself. "Even with the big run I thought I didn't have that many (yards). It's hard for it to sink it. I haven't seen the game film, but I still can't believe it."

The career game earned Jones the prestigious Coca Cola New England Sport Writers Division 2-3 "Gold Helmet" Award. Add that to the four NESCAC Offensive Player of the Week awards he garnered and Division Honor Roll title and Jones had his best season, moving on to the next level of national recognition.

Still, Jones considers what the team as a whole did this season to be the most satisfying accomplishment. Trinity wasn't expected to do much on the playing field because so many players graduated. However, the squad gelled quickly and wound up with a fine 7-1 record, and was ranked as high as No. 9 in the ECAC Weekly Division 3 New England Football Poll.

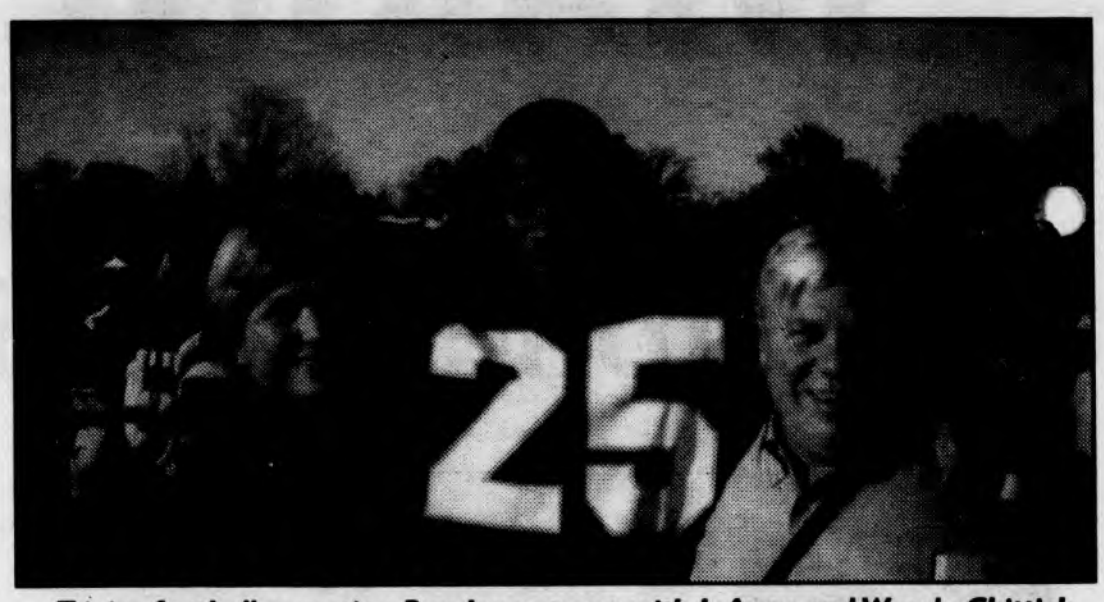
"I thought this season itself was a huge accomplishment," Jones said. "We weren't expected to do that well."

Jones hasn't been a one-dimensional entity at Trinity, concentrating on sports and nothing else. He works hard in his classes and has been a member of the school's oldest acappella group, "The Pipes," since his freshman year.

"It has been a great experience," he said of singing with the group. "Some of my best friends are in the group and we've been able to travel and tour."

Jones hasn't forgotten his ties to Cohasset, particularly the Chittick family, who served as his METCO host family since Jones was in sixth grade. He plans to visit them over the Thanksgiving holiday and again at Christmas.

Jones became friends with Ben Chittick in the first grade when they found out they shared the same Feb. 1 birthday.



Trinity football sensation Ray Jones poses with JoAnne and Woody Chittick following a college game.

"They've been buddies ever since," said JoAnne Chittick, Ben's mother.

Ben, who attends Dartmouth, keeps in touch with Jones through E-mail, as does Chloe Chittick, Ben's sister and a student at Colby.

JoAnne Chittick said having Jones around the house was a great experience and he fit in like one of the family.

"He was like another son," said JoAnne. "Ray was always agreeable. He did his own laundry and did his own chores without making a big deal about it.

"Trinity has been a great place for him. The academics are stressed and he has had the opportunity to excel."

Jones is looking forward to attending the Hull/Cohasset Thanksgiving day game and the word is Chatterton is trying to get Jones to sing the National Anthem with a couple of other singers.

Jones hasn't talked with Chatterton yet, but he did say he loves the new Alumni Field.

"I'm definitely jealous," he said.

Jealousy, however, can work both ways.

You can bet every player on the Cohasset High football team would trade playing on Alumni Field for Jones' mplishments in a minute.

Cohasset Booters Lead Milton Squad

Cohasset's Cara McKenney and Lydia Crafts, varsity soccer players for Milton Academy, celebrate the end of their 15-1 season. This was the most successful girls' soccer team in Milton Academy history. The team placed second among the 16 schools in the Independent School League, one of the most competitive high school leagues in the East. The team qualified for the New Englands and lost to Phillips Andover in the quarterfinals.

Youth Hoop Evaluations

It is important that your son/daughter attends a 45-minute evaluation session so that balanced teams can be drafted. Please note the date, time and place from the schedule below:

Saturday, Nov. 23

Grade 1 boys and girls, 9 a.m., Deer Hill School.

Grade 2 boys and girls, 10:30 a.m., Deer Hill School.

Grade 3 boys and girls, 12:30 p.m., Deer Hill School.

Grade 4 boys, 9 a.m. CHS gym.

Grade 5 boys, 10 a.m. CHS gym.

Grade 6 boys, 11 a.m. CHS gym.

Grade 7 boys, noon CHS gym.

Grade 8 boys, 1 p.m. CHS gym.

Grade 4-6 girls, 2 p.m. CHS gym.

Grade 7-8 girls, 3 p.m. CHS gym.

Coaches will draft immediately following these evaluations and call you shortly thereafter regarding team status.

Including playoffs, finals and consolations, a total of at least eight games will be played by all participants. League rules provide for an equal division of playing time, emphasize the team concept of play and encourage sportsmanship, rather than just winning. Team rosters, schedules and rules will be provided at the first game.

Thank you for your continued support. We hope to again make refreshments available throughout the season if enough volunteers come forward to manage the concession stands.

Benefit Scholarship Road Race

A five-mile Thanksgiving road race on Thursday, Nov. 28 will benefit the John C. Venable Memorial Football Scholarship.

The race will begin near the Marshfield High School track at 8 a.m. and finish at the track. Runners may enter in the following categories: male and female junior (18 and under), male and female open (19-39), male and female masters (40-49), male and female seniors (50-59), male and female grand seniors (60-69) and male and female super seniors (70 and older). The entrance fee is $10; the first 150 entrants will receive commemorative mugs.

The course has been accurately wheel-measured, and accurate split times will be provided. The finish line and race results will be provided by the Marshfield Road Runners. Two water stops and post-race refreshments will be available.

Last year's male winner, Gregory Ward, finished with a time of 26:20. The female winner, Lauren Kelly, finished at 34:12.

All proceeds will benefit the John C. Venable Memorial Football Scholarship, awarded annually to a Marshfield High School Graduating Senior. Steve Cummings, the 1996 recipient of the scholarship's "Unsung Hero Award," is now attending Framingham State College.

To reach the Marshfield High School track, take Route 139 in Marshfield to Forest Street, to the Martinson Middle School. The race will begin near the track located behind the school.

For more information, write to: Venable Road Race, P.O. Box 465, Green Harbor, MA 02041, or call (617) 585-9113.

The Cohasset High varsity soccer team had a tough season in the South Shore League after qualifying for last year's Division 3 South Sectional tourney, but is looking to get back into tourney contention in '97.

CHS to Present 'The Mikado'

Cohasset High School will present "The Mikado," a tale of love, loss and reconciliation, Dec. 13 and 14 at 7:30 p.m. and Dec. 15 at 2 p.m.

During the performance, the gentlemen of Japan, chorus of schoolgirls, nobles and guards will help Nanki-Poo avoid the executioner's axe and find his beloved Yum-Yum.

The event will provide a lively, colorful evening of song and dance.

Thanksgiving Event for World Hunger

Saturday, Nov. 23, Cohasset Community Church will host a family Thanksgiving celebration at Cohasset Town Hall, 41 Highland Ave., from 3:30 to 5 p.m. Activities planned are songs, crafts and a puppet show. A youth group from Calvary Bible Church of Derry, New Hampshire, will present the puppet show. Refreshments will be served.

All proceeds for the event will go to fight world hunger. A suggested donation of $3 per individual or $10 per family is requested. All donations will go to the World Hunger Fund of the Foreign Mission Board, SBC.

Cohasset Community Church is a new evangelical church in Cohasset. Rev. Robert Hurlbut is the pastor. For more information, call the church at 383-7054.

Newcomers' Holiday Open House

The Scituate-Cohasset Newcomers' Club will hold its annual Holiday Open House on Dec. 7, from 6 to 9 p.m. at the home of a member. All members are invited and asked to bring an hors d'oeuvres and a check for the holiday charity donation. Anyone interested in more information about the party can please call 544-3479.

Anyone interested in membership information can please call 383-6963 or 545-4937. The club is always open to new members, and invites all residents of Scituate and Cohasset to join.

Community Thanksgiving Eve Service

The Cohasset Community Thanksgiving Eve service including all eight of the town congregations will be held Wednesday, Nov. 27, at 8 p.m. at Saint Stephen's Church, 16 Highland Ave. Saint Stephen's Church is marking its centennial this year. The music with organ and trumpet will include two town-wide choirs. The children will sing: "God of Great and God of Small," by Natalie Sleeth. The combined adult choirs will sing Gerre Hancock's "Judge Eternal." The congregation will sing hymns such as "Rejoice, O Pilgrim throng!" and "We plow the fields, and scatter."

The Rev. John Mulvehill from Saint Anthony's Church will issue the call to worship. The invocation will be led by The Rev. Shuma Chakravarty of the Vedanta Centre. The lessons will be read by The Revs. Gary Ritts of the Second Congregational Church and Robert Hurlbutt of the Cohasset Community Church. The Rev. John Maheras of the Nativity of the Virgin Mary Greek Orthodox Church will sing a fervent Litany of Thanksgiving. Ms. Barbara Bliss of First Parish will offer a prayer of thanksgiving for diversity of races and cultures, while The Rev. Bert White from the Beechwood Congregational Church will offer a thanksgiving for the beauty of the earth and give the benediction. The Rev. E. Clifford Cutler will tell a children's story and issue a welcome to all.

The altar will be arrayed with harvest fruits and vegetables which then will be donated to the Mary Martha Learning Center in Hingham. The offering at the service will go in part to Oxfam America and its efforts to combat world hunger. In addition, locally, the offering will support Wellspring in Hull which provides a variety of needed services. Small loaves of bread will be blessed and given to each person who comes. All are invited to attend this Cohasset Thanksgiving Eve celebration.

Legal Issues of Alzheimer's Care

The Affiliated Community Visiting Nurse Association will recognize Alzheimer's Awareness Month this November with a program on legal issues in Alzheimer's care, presented by Attorney Brian E. Barreira of Plymouth and Hingham.

The program will be offered at Rockland Public Library, 20 Belmont St., Tuesday, Nov. 19, from 2:30 to 4 p.m., and Thursday, Nov. 21, from 7:30 to 9 p.m. at Cohasset Council on Aging, 3 North Main St., Cohasset.

Barreira, who is past president of the Mass. Chapter of the National Academy of Elder Law Attorneys, will discuss financial planning and elder law issues with a particular focus on the Kennedy-Kassebaum federal legislation and its immediate consequences on long-term care planning.

Newcomers' Club Donations Noted

The Scituate-Cohasset Newcomers' Club is pleased to announce donations to three area organizations. The club presented checks to the Scituate Youth Center, the Friends of the Paragon Carousel in Hull, and the Cohasset Light House Keepers Association totaling $800.

Part of the money donated to the Light House Keepers Association was raised at the Newcomers' Club first annual Light House Keepers Ball silent auction. The Ball was held at beautiful Bancroft Hall overlooking Cohasset Harbor. The black tie event was in celebration of a wonderful year of Newcomers activities and included dancing, cocktails, hors d'oeuvres and elegant desserts all catered by the Borrowed Butler. The Ball was one of the most glamorous events of the Newcomers season, and attracted an impressive crowd of 80 guests.

The following members helped make the event a success: Laurie Sheehan, Ginny Callahan, Michelle Frederick, Kathleen Knight and Laura Lee McQuade.

The Scituate-Cohasset Newcomers' Club is always open to new members, and invites all residents of Scituate and Cohasset to join. Anyone interested in more information can please call 383-6963 or 545-4937.

Winterfest '96 Planned

Winterfest '96, Hingham Historical Society's fifth annual exhibition and sale of traditional American folk art and crafts, will be held Saturday, Dec. 7, from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Sunday, Dec. 8, from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. at Hingham Middle School, 1103 Main St., Route 228, Hingham.

This year's show will host 50 professional artisans, many of whom have been featured in national magazines such as Country Home, Country Living and Colonial Homes. More than half the exhibitors have been selected by Early American Homes for their Directory of Fine Craftsmen.

The range of arts and crafts offered at the event is wide and diverse, ranging from miniature quilts, period tinware, theorems and carvings to primitive paintings, pewter, redware and 18th- and 19th-century reproduction country furniture.

Winterfest '96 provides an opportunity to view and purchase unique, museum-quality pieces from some of the best craftspeople in the country.

Admission is $3 for adults and $1 for children under 12, with proceeds supporting Hingham Historical Society. Luncheon and refreshments will be available.

The program is free and open to the public. For more information, call 749-1160.

Jingle Bell Walk is Nov. 29

The South Shore Community Center invites families and friends to join in the holiday spirit at the Jingle Bell Walk, a Cohasset tradition offered by the S.S.C.C., which begins at 1:30 p.m., Nov. 29, when Santa Claus arrives by boat with his elves at Cohasset Harbor (Border St.). After Santa distributes jingle bells to the children, he will ride the fire truck and the walk continues along the sidewalks of Elm to Main Street in Cohasset. At 2 p.m., the South Shore Community Center welcomes you to partake in cookies, a beverage and a holiday sing-a-long. Holiday music and carols will also be sung by choruses from local schools and churches.

The holiday workshop at the nursery school will be open for young shoppers to purchase small gifts, and Santa will be upstairs in the center to pose for pictures with you and your children. Merchants participate by offering complimentary treats or discounts to shoppers. Please stroll through the village to share in the local shops' holiday ambiance.

Listen to the Bells of St. Stephen's playing from 2 to 4 p.m., while enjoying a hayride around the Commons. Hayrides will be available 2:30 to 3:30 p.m. The festivities culminate on the Cohasset Common at 4 p.m. with the lighting of the tree.

The rain date is Nov. 30.

Buy Wreaths to Support METCO

The Cohasset METCO Committee has embarked on a fund raiser this year. The group will be selling 22-inch double-faced balsam Christmas wreaths, supplied by growers who furnish fashionable nurseries. The cost is $8.

A limited number of "kissing balls" will also be sold, and both items will be available for pick-up at Cohasset High School Saturday, Dec. 7. Decorative handmade bows will also be available.

Watch for order forms in the school menus or call METCO coordinators Connie Afshar (383-6006) or Jean Hajjar (383-9917) to place an order.

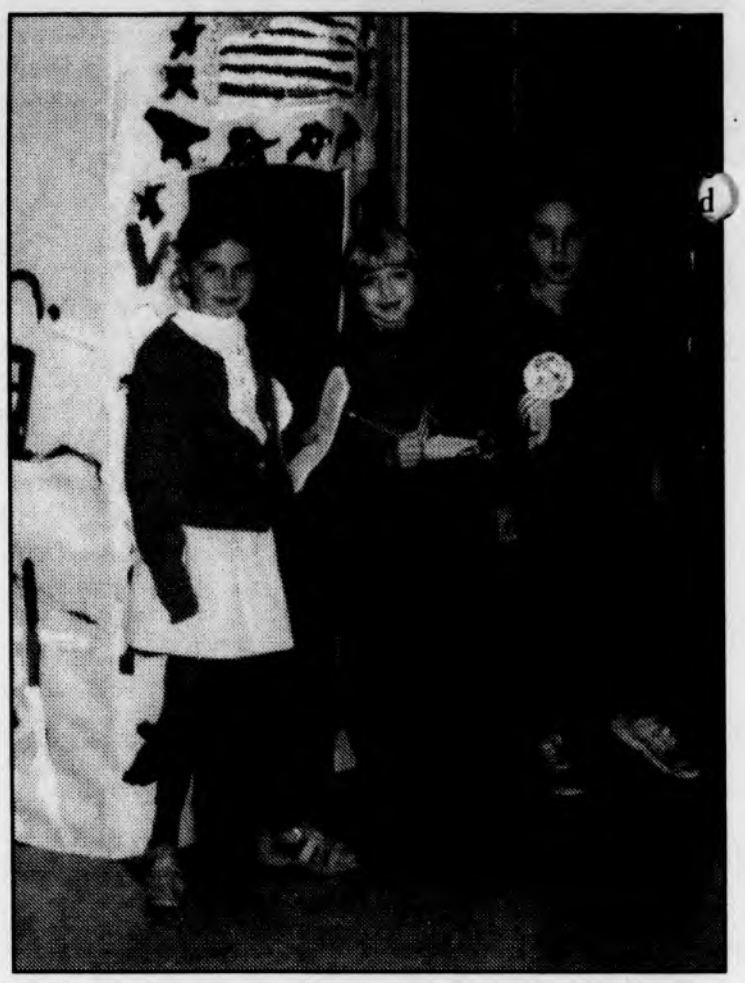
Auction Item Count Hits 100-plus!

Local response to the PSO auction has been tremendous. Organizers report that they have more than 100 items to be sold Friday evening at the PSO party. A wide variety of items should ensure something to interest anyone. Past auctions suggest that there will be some incredible bargains. The following is a brief sampling: four orchestra tickets for Andrew Lloyd Weber's 'Music of the Night;' Boufier photo sittings; hotels: Boston Harbor, Sheraton (Boston & Hyannis); horseback riding packages (lessons for all ages); painted furniture by a Hingham artist; a tennis party; vacation homes (Nantucket & Maine); restaurant certificates; children's computers; holiday goods: Christmas tree, flowers, signed Jan Brett gift sets (inc. posters, puppets, etc.), wine & cheese baskets, frozen hors d'oeuvres, and more. For tickets, call Patty at 383-2773.

DRUG FACT

"When you hold a joint in your hand — before you light it up — it contains 90 different chemicals. Not a medicine or drug in the world can come close. When you light it up, it contains 421 different chemicals. I know most of them. They're poisons. The major psychactive ingredient in marijuana, THC, stays in your body for three months, destroying fatty tissues, especially in the brain and reproductive organs."

— From a talk given to students at Cohasset High School in the late 1980s by David Toma, the former Newark undercover detective who inspired the television series "Baretta."



Lauren Strazzula, Ryan Ingram, and Jared Dick cast their votes during the Osgood 'mock' presidential election on Nov. 5.

Reducing the Racket at the Lightkeeper's

Visitors to Bancroft Hall, operated by the non-profit Cohasset Lightkeepers Corporation on Government Island, will be pleased that the unsatisfactory acoustics were corrected this week. The contractor, Snaptex East, has applied two inches of high-density acoustical fiber glass to the ceiling, over which is stretched a heavy white fabric.

Other than the poor acoustics, the renovation of the decrepit lightkeepers house into an attractive and popular function room has been a real success story. The magnificent view of the harbor is complemented by the quality and taste of the renovations, and further enhanced by landscaping donated and maintained by the garden clubs of Cohasset. The amazing improvement in the acoustics adds to the success of the project.

The generosity of many people and organizations, and the efforts of approximately three dozen public-spirited volunteers led by Joe McElroy, accomplished the ambitious reconstruction of the building over a four-year period. The acoustic improvement was conceived by the current president, R. Murray Campbell.

The Bancroft Hall function room is available at no charge to non-profit groups. The operating costs are provided for by rental income from two second-floor apartments and by function room fees for private gatherings. About half the bookings are free of charge.

Erich Georg installs a special acoustic ceiling at the Lightkeeper's Residence on Government Island.

Ford Joins Chokachi on Bay Watch Set

Cohasset resident Candy Ford, director and founder of Ford Model Management, visited David Chokachi on the beachside set of Bay Watch. She made a special detour to personally review Chokachi's latest photographs with him for the 1997 Ford book, which will be in color, a first for the New England modeling agency industry. The book debuts this month.

Chokachi has remained a Ford model, where he started his career in the early 1990s. Ford said when the Plymouth native came to her about five years ago, she knew there was something special about him. Within a week of signing with the agency, he was getting bookings for runway, print and TV assignments.

On the Bay Watch set are Cohasset's Curt Smalzel, Bay Watch star David Chokachi, Candy Ford who is director of Ford Model Management, and Candy's and Kurt's daughter Colby.

Fifteen Arrests in October

In his monthly status report to selectmen, Police Chief Brian W. Noonan said the department made 15 arrests including one for assault with intent to murder; two for operating under the influence of liquor; and four for operating a motor vehicle with a revoked license. Three people were arrested on outstanding warrants, one for using a motor vehicle without authority, two for being minors transporting alcohol, and two individuals were taken under protective custody.

Noonan said there were two breaking and enterings reported last month, one at a residence and one at a business.

"Our dispatch center received a total of 152, 9-1-1 calls during October," Noonan said.

He said police department personnel are currently fulfilling their yearly in-service training requirements during which each officer attends one week of training at the Mass. Criminal Justice Training Center in Plymouth. Courses of study include domestic violence, legal update, motor vehicle law, edged weapons as well as recertification in First Reponder and C.P.R.

Golf Clubs Stolen in Break In

Police Sgt. Robert Jackson said 15 expensive drivers were stolen from a storage area at the Cohasset Golf Club either late Friday night (Nov. 15) or early Saturday morning (Nov. 16).

The theft was reported at 8:39 a.m., Saturday.

Jackson said the matter is under investigation. He said it was the second burglary of this type at the country club.

"It had the same 'M.O.'," he said.

Public Notices

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS
THE TRIAL COURT
THE PROBATE AND FAMILY COURT
NORFOLK DIVISION
DOCKET NO. 96P2669E1

Estate of DAVID BOYD COLEMAN late of COHASSET In the County of NORFOLK

NOTICE

A petition has been presented in the above-captioned matter praying that the last will of said decedent be proved and allowed and that JOAN A. ROBERTS-COLEMAN of COHASSET in the County of NORFOLK be appointed executrix named in the will without surety on the bond.

If you desire to object to the allowance of said petition, you or your attorney should file a written appearance in said Court at Dedham on or before 10:00 in the forenoon on December 18, 1996.

In addition you should file a written statement of objections to the petition, giving the specific grounds therefore, within thirty (30) days after the return day (or such other time as the Court, on motion with notice to the petitioner, may allow) in accordance with Probate Rule 16A.

Witness, David H. Kopelman, Esquire, First Justice of said Court at Dedham, this thirteenth day of November, one thousand nine hundred and ninety-six.

Wellspring Seeks Help for Food Baskets

Wellspring's annual holiday food basket program fed 255 families, a total of 658 people in 1995, and at least that many are expected for each of the two upcoming holiday seasons.

The community as well as local groups are invited to experience the joy of holiday giving in a most practical way by contributing food to Wellspring. For Thanksgiving baskets, non-perishable items may be dropped off in advance Monday or Wednesday, between 9 a.m. and 2 p.m., at the center, 814 Nantasket Ave., in Hull, or other times by prior arrangements. Call 925-3211. Perishable items (frozen poultry and fresh vegetables) and complete holiday meal baskets will be gratefully accepted Monday, Nov. 25, between 9 a.m. and 2 p.m. Christmas basket hours will be similar, and published later in this paper. Here's a list of what's needed:

Three hundred turkeys, 12-15 lbs.; 100 chickens, 6 to 8 lbs.; fresh potatoes; yams, fresh or canned; vegetables, fresh or canned; stuffing mix; gravy, canned; pie filling; pie crust.

Calls ahead with promised donations will help Wellspring shop, organize and distribute more efficiently. Those who can volunteer to help package ar distribute can call Food Pantry coordinator Vi Haukom at Wellspring, 925-3211.

Lab Floated for Hagerty House

Lightkeepers Offer to Renovate Structure

By Charlene Vandini
COHASSET MARINER

The fate of the showroom on the Hagerty property has again been bounced by the selectmen back to the Hagerty property committee, this time for the committee's comments on a plan to use the site for a marine biology research center.

Local oceanographer Kevin Ulmer made a pitch more than a year ago to use the Victorian house on the site for the research center, leasing it from the town for $1 a year, and making all necessary improvements himself, with money raised through corporate and private foundation grants.

But at that time selectmen suggested the Hagerty Committee hold an open forum on the fate of the former Cohasset Colonials showroom. Paul Trendowicz, owner of the Marina across the street, had also offered to buy the house to use for offices and a ship's chandlery. The committee held two public forums late last year to dis-

Pantry Provides Help for Thanksgiving

By Alice C. Coyle
COHASSET MARINER

Area food pantries have been gearing up to provide needy families a "turkey day" feast with all the fixin's for Thanksgiving.

Cohasset's Food Pantry at the Second Congregational Church is no exception, says director Margie Steele, who along with the pantry's more than 30 volunteers was busy this week shopping, stocking the shelves and getting ready for the big day.

In general, Steele says the pantry is busiest and fortunately

'Bag Ladies' Come to Cohasset

Pay as You Throw Works in Halifax

By Charlene Vandini
COHASSET MARINER

The self-styled Halifax "bag ladies" told Cohasset selectmen that the "pay as you throw" program in their town is a success, and Cohasset can benefit from their experience.

Members of the Halifax recycling committee said Monday none of the problems anticipated when the program began five years have materialized and the program has won converts.

There has been no increase in the amount of trash dumped on the side of the road; the bags are not too small or flimsy and will hold a substantial amount of trash, they said.

Paying to dispose of each bag of trash has made residents more conscious of what they throw away, created a greater incentive for recycling and composting, and has been the most equitable way to handle trash disposal, according to recycling committee chairman Joyce Bereika.

Wellspring Seeks Help for Food Baskets

Wellspring's annual holiday food basket program fed 255 families, a total of 658 people in 1995, and at least that many are expected for each of the two upcoming holiday seasons.

The community as well as local groups are invited to experience the joy of holiday giving in a most practical way by contributing food to Wellspring. For Thanksgiving baskets, non-perishable items may be dropped off in advance Monday or Wednesday, between 9 a.m. and 2 p.m., at the center, 814 Nantasket Ave., in Hull, or other times by prior arrangements. Call 925-3211. Perishable items (frozen poultry and fresh vegetables) and complete holiday meal baskets will be gratefully accepted Monday, Nov. 25, between 9 a.m. and 2 p.m. Christmas basket hours will be similar, and published later in this paper. Here's a list of what's needed:

Three hundred turkeys, 12-15 lbs.; 100 chickens, 6 to 8 lbs.; fresh potatoes; yams, fresh or canned; vegetables, fresh or canned; stuffing mix; gravy, canned; pie filling; pie crust.

Calls ahead with promised donations will help Wellspring shop, organize and distribute more efficiently. Those who can volunteer to help package ar distribute can call Food Pantry coordinator Vi Haukom at Wellspring, 925-3211.

Lab Floated for Hagerty House

Lightkeepers Offer to Renovate Structure

By Charlene Vandini
COHASSET MARINER

The fate of the showroom on the Hagerty property has again been bounced by the selectmen back to the Hagerty property committee, this time for the committee's comments on a plan to use the site for a marine biology research center.

Local oceanographer Kevin Ulmer made a pitch more than a year ago to use the Victorian house on the site for the research center, leasing it from the town for $1 a year, and making all necessary improvements himself, with money raised through corporate and private foundation grants.

But at that time selectmen suggested the Hagerty Committee hold an open forum on the fate of the former Cohasset Colonials showroom. Paul Trendowicz, owner of the Marina across the street, had also offered to buy the house to use for offices and a ship's chandlery. The committee held two public forums late last year to dis-

Cohasset's Week

Local Issues is Topic

Cohasset residents are invited for coffee and an informal discussion of local issues with Selectman Ronnie McMorris and School Committee member Maureen Jerz Wednesday, Dec. 4, at 7:30 p.m. at First Parish House.

Jerz and McMorris are planning a series of coffees for the purpose of providing residents with an opportunity to talk with them about their concerns, ideas and suggestions.

The forums are open to all interested residents, and discussion on a variety of issues is encouraged.

Both McMorris and Jerz believe that keeping in touch with the community is an essential part of serving on a town board.

Those seeking further information, or residents who would like to host a future coffee in their home, may call Maureen Jerz at 383-6592 or Ronnie McMorris at 383-1219.

Village Design Weekend Planned

Join Cohasset Chamber of Commerce, town officials, town boards and committees and fellow neighbors Saturday, Dec. 7, and Sunday, Dec. 8, at South Shore Community Center for a design weekend addressing the many concerns brought forward by the Revitalization Committee concerning Cohasset Village.

Residents will help design concepts to improve areas of concern, such as sidewalks, lighting, parking, traffic flow, plantings and benches during the Village Design Charrette.

The plan will help the Town of Cohasset apply for various state and federal grant programs which are available.

The schedule is as follows:

Dec. 7 — 9 to 11 a.m. — Open Design Forum and comment period; 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. — Roundtable Design groups.

Dec. 8 — noon to 5 p.m. — review drawings for master plan.

Residents who would like to be part of one of the design groups are asked to call Dean Rizzo at 383-1994 or 383-2284.

The architectural firm of Carr, Lynch and Sandell, Inc. of Cambridge is also involved in the plan.

Sponsors of Charrette are Cohasset Chamber of Commerce and Cohasset Rotary Club.

Open Houses Set to Review Greenbush Plans

The MBTA will hold four open houses for review of Greenbush Line plans for each Greenbush town. The open houses will be held at the following locations:

Braintree, Dec. 3, at Town Hall, 7 to 9 p.m.; Scituate, Dec. 4, high school cafeteria, 7:30 to 9:30 p.m.; Weymouth, Dec. 11, Abigail Adams School cafeteria, 7 to 9 p.m.' and Cohasset, Dec. 12, Town Hall, 7 to 9 p.m.

The open houses will give residents an opportunity to review plans regarding the restoration of passenger service on the Greenbush Line.

Project staff will be in attendance to answer questions about the environmental components of the project. The staff will be seeking comments and input on the basic layout and design of the project, in order for the MBTA to be aware of community concerns when designing the mitigation plan, which will be presented to town mitigation officials in January.

Anyone with questions about any of the public meetings may contact Andrew Brennan, MBTA manager of environmental affairs, at (617) 222-3126.

Water Company: Flushing has Ended for Year

Massachusetts-American Water Company has announced that flushing operations in the towns of Hingham, Hull and Cohasset are now complete for the year. Due to impending cold weather, it has become necessary for the company to case flushing because of safety concerns. Flushing operations will resume in the spring.

The company has expressed appreciation to the towns and their residents for their cooperation and patience during flushing program.

"We understand the flushing operation may have created several system disturbances resulting in discolored water for short periods, for which we apologize," said Operations Manager Eileen Commane.

"However, we are confident that this aggressive flushing program is critical in assuring the delivery to our customers of the high quality of water produced by the new plant," she said.

Customers will be advised in advance of the spring flushing program.

Renovations at Legion Post

Selectmen are considering further renovation plans for the American Legion Post 118.

The post has added a wheelchair ramp to make the building at 98 Summer St. handicapped accessible.

Duncan McCormack said that by eliminating a hallway on the first floor, the restrooms can be enlarged to also make them handicapped accessible.

The Legion officials want to add a wheelchair lift at the end of the ramp. This will provide access to the second floor through a new door that will replace an existing window.

On the recommendation of Town Administrator Greg Doyon, the Legion's plans will be referred to the town's design review committee.

Condos Could be Plowed

The town may be able to plow snow on private ways at two condominium complexes.

Town administrator Greg Doyon said the plowing will require two stipulations: indemnification for the town, and insurance coverage in the event that private property is damaged.

Last week, the private ways study committee voted to recommend condominium complexes be plowed.

Selectmen have referred this matter to town counsel.

Happy Thanksgiving!

DPW Sprinklers Discussed Behind Closed Doors

Discussion of the latest cost over-run for the new public works garage was conducted behind closed doors Monday, while selectmen attempted to determine who is to blame.

Selectman chairman Merle Brown convened the executive session, explaining that the board wanted to determine who is responsible for the lack of a sprinkler system for the garage.

Brown also said the project now does not have a building permit.

The DPW garage was originally set at $700,000, but is now likely to exceed $1 million. Voters have approved an additional $290,000 at the October special town meeting due the unexpected additional cost to blast ledge for connection of the garage to the town's water system.

The sprinkler system could add another $50,000 to that.

Gaffney & Associates, the architects on the project, told selectmen last week that the garage does not need a sprinkler system. They advised seeking a waiver from the building code requirement for sprinkler systems in all public buildings larger than 7,500 square feet. The DPW garage is more than 13,000 square feet.

Building inspector Robert Egan and Fire Chief Roger Lincoln joined the selectmen in the executive session.

better stocked in the fall and winter months.

"The support in town has been terrific, really wonderful," Steele said, noting the constant support the pantry receives from local churches and through food drives recently held by two nursery schools. An annual collection by Cohasset postal workers in May helps load up the shelves for the summer months when supplies and donations dwindle, she noted.

With the help of dedicated volunteers like Bob Thompson, Steele said the pantry which opened three years is able to serve about 30 Cohasset families.

While generally considered an affluent town, Thompson said there is a very definite need for a food pantry in Cohasset.

The only requirements to receive food from the pantry is that families reside in Cohasset and receive some form of government assistance, Thompson said. Families can pick up food at the Pantry every other Tuesday from 9:30 to 10:30 a.m. and from 7 to 8:30 p.m. and donations are accepted Monday through Friday at the church office which is open from 9 a.m. to noon. Cash donations are also welcome and are used by pantry volunteers to purchase food and other supplies at the Boston Food Bank, BJ's and other local stores, he said.

Frozen meats and fresh produce are also available year round at the pantry, said Steele who noted that local gardeners bring vegetables to the pantry fresh from their gardens in the summer. Milk and eggs are made available to families by voucher at the Tedeschis in Cohasset, Steele said.

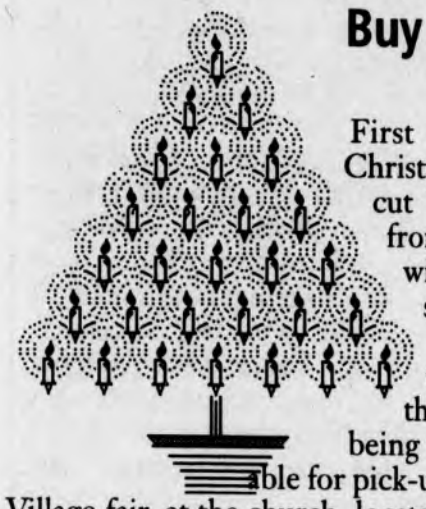
In addition to donations of canned fruits and vegetables, soups and white sugar, Thompson said personal items like toothpaste and bar soap are always appreciated at the pantry. Juice boxes for children's lunches are also a welcome item, but Thompson said they're "in good shape, pasta-wise."

For more information on the Cohasset Food Pantry call 383-0345.

Ten Minutes for Walk-ins

Selectmen set aside 10 minutes at 8 p.m. on their meeting nights to address any concerns from members of the public who have issues that are not on the agenda.

If the matter cannot be handled briefly, it will be placed on a future agenda, selectmen said.



Buy Christmas Trees at First Parish

First Parish in Cohasset is selling Christmas trees. On sale will be fresh-cut Vermont balsam trees, ranging from five to nine feet tall, with widths of thin, wide or full. Any size tree is $35.

Extra trees are being ordered to enable individuals to choose their own trees. Pre-orders are being accepted, and trees will be available for pick-up Saturday, Dec. 7, the day of the Village fair, at the church, located at 23 North Main St.

To order a tree, call Jodee Doyle at 383-9845.

'Bag Ladies'

Halifax now recycles 46 per cent of its trash, already reaching the state guidelines for recycling for the year 2000.

A family of five in Halifax generates one bag of trash per week, when it sorts out the glass, cans, newspaper, and plastic that can be recycled. Residents have learned to flatten items so they take up less space in the bags.

The town began the program when it faced paying for trash collection, Bereika explained. As a host community for a Browning Ferris Industries (BFI) landfill, residents in Halifax enjoyed free trash collection. But when the landfill closed, they confronted paying for the service.

The community was able to implement the program after three months' development, during which time they held public hearings, and addressed many residents' objections.

For example, to test the strength of the bags, Bereika said the members of her committee dropped the bags from second floor windows on cold days.

"We did our homework and we were prepared," Bereika said.

Bereika said the trash bags are sold in four local stores at a cost of $1 each for the large bags and 50 cents for the smaller ones. An employee fills orders at the stores twice each week. The stores sell the bags at cost, providing a service to the community. Each package of trash bags includes an information sheet.

For residents with trash compactors, each large bag will hold one bag of compacted trash. Two compacted bags are too heavy, and the bags will split, Bereika noted.

State department of environmental protection recycling coordinator Joe Lambert said the bags are 1.5 millimeters thick, which is not "flimsy." The bags can hold a substantial amount of trash, but will split if residents try to fill them beyond capacity.

Proceeds of the bag sales completely pay for curbside trash collection, said committee member Beverly Smith. The department maintains an enterprise account whereby monies collected go into the account, and expenses come out of it.

Lambert noted that the majority of communities with "pay as you throw" programs do not have curbside trash collection. Residents take their trash to the recycling and transfer facilities, as is the case in Cohasset.

Some towns do keep a portion of their trash disposal costs in the town budget which allows residents to benefit from the property tax deduction on their income taxes.

The DEP has grant money available to towns that start their "pay as you throw" programs, to provide informational mailings to residents, and for the initial purchase of the trash bags, which are made in Massachusetts.

Selectmen chairman Merle Brown, who is also a member of Cohasset's recycling committee, told the Mariner in a recent artilce on recycling that the charge-per-bag program is a fairer system than the present, when everyone pays the same amount regardless of the amount of trash they generate. Cohasset now recycles 38 per cent of its trash, which is above the state average of 32 per cent.

While most towns are not, at this time, being paid for their recyclable trash, the Halifax representatives agreed with Brown that these programs are still successful because reducing the amount of trash avoids an expense.

Smith also said that residents in Halifax are more aware of buying items that cannot be recycled, and therefore must go into the trash bag. This, in time, will complete the cycle: creating more demand from manufacturers who want to buy recycled trash to produce materials that come back again for remanufacture.

The selectmen have said they have the authority to implement a "pay as you throw" program, which could begin as early as next spring.

Compost Bins Available

Due to efforts of the Cohasset Recycling Committee, composting containers are available for purchase by townspeople at a very good price due to a grant from the state Department of Environmental Protection, said Jack Hubbard of the recycling committee.

There are two styles of containers, the Earth Machine and the Brave New World Composter. Prices range from $20 to $30.

The new containers are on sale at from 9:30 a.m. to 5 p.m., Monday and Wednesday through Saturday at Aquarius Sunrooms on Depot Court. Payment must be by check made out to the town of Cohasset.

Lobster Lab

cuss progress on the harborfront park but the issue of the showroom was not resolved.

This week, Ulmer returned to the selectmen, accompanied by a representative of the Cohasset Lightkeepers Corporation. R. M. Campbell said the CLC would lease the property from the town, and rent space to Ulmer for his project which would include a "lobster lab" where students could conduct hands-on research. The Hagerty Committee and CLC are tentatively scheduled to meet at 7:30 p.m., Dec. 12 at the Lightkeeper's to discuss the proposal.

Campbell said the CLC was very impressed with the plan, and overwhelmingly in favor of it, adding that it would cost the town no money. Ulmer intends to pay rent for the second floor space that he would use for his office. Ulmer would also donate his library of research material and his computers for students' use, as well as his internet connection.

Ulmer said he will keep his private research business separate from the lab facilities on the first floor which will be dedicated for students' use.

But selectmen Nan Roth and Michael Sullivan questioned the proposal, particularly noting the lack of its integration with the public school curriculum, and the lack of a formal business plan covering the maintenance and financial aspects of the property.

Ulmer said that if the center is not successful, the selectmen could tear down the building at a later date, but the program would have "no permanent negative side effects" on the building.

He noted that town has many programs for some children, and recently made improvements to the town's athletic fields. There are also private dance lessons and art lessons at the Cohasset Community Center and the South Shore Art Center.

"What do we offer the nerds?" Ulmer asked the board.

There are local students who are interested in science who have no opportunities to explore this area.

Campbell added that the head of the science department at Cohasset High School is very enthusiastic about Ulmer's proposal.

Sullivan also said the Lightkeepers Corporation has generated criticism from some people who have complained to him that it charges more than necessary for rentals of the function facilities at the Lightkeepers House.

Campbell said he has heard no comments—either in writing or verbal—of this nature. The only reason some people choose not to rent the Lightkeepers House is because the capacity is too small for some functions, he added.

The rent charged is the amount necessary to operate the building because the rent from the two apartments is not adequate to cover all the expenses. Half of the bookings are free-of-charge, Campbell said. In addition, the Lightkeepers Corporation is trying to build up a reserve, which will be tapped for future maintenance and major repairs.

The fate of the Hagerty house, which used to house the offices and showroom of Cohasset Colonials (the cutting room is at right) is still up in the air.

Some of the money, approximately $10,000, now accumulated in the reserve account could be invested to make some renovations in the Hagerty house for the lobster lab.

But Sullivan said that would be an inappropriate investment for the Lightkeepers: the lobster lab does not succeed, the Lightkeepers would lose their investment.

He also said that the lobster lab focuses heavily on Ulmer's involvement, without sufficient involvement from the school department.

"You're the only one who has a clue about this, Kevin," he said.

But Ulmer said others will follow as the program develops, but he needs the use of the building before anything more can be done.

School committee chairman Ralph Kidder was very supportive of Ulmer's plan. He told selectmen that he had been watching their meeting on television at home, and decided to attend in person to participate in this discussion.

"This is real science," Kidder said, adding that the school department will work with Ulmer, but does not need to be involved with the program at this point.

Ulmer said he expects to have equipment donated to the center, and will apply for corporate grants. The lobster lab component is likely to attract the most interest from businesses.

In response to questions from selectman Nan Roth, Ulmer said he needs access to seawater, and cannot afford to buy another property. Using the Hagerty property preserves a town asset.

Sullivan also said the Lightkeepers House has more of a general community use as a meeting place and function room. The Hagerty property, under Ulmer's proposal, would be used by only a small segment of the community.

But Campbell responded that the educational component of lobster lab makes it a more valuable community resource.

"It's better than fixing up a function room," he said, adding that the Lightkeepers House was not eligible for any grants.

Hagerty committee member Veneta Roebuck said the group voted on Ulmer's original request this year, and said at that time it wanted more involvement by the school committee. The committee did not support it as presented.

Selectman Peter Pratt said the Hagerty committee should consider the proposal again, "now that the proposal is firming up."

Roebuck said an engineering survey of the site is proceeding but it is unlikely to be completed before the spring. Wetlands have been flagged, and the outside boundaries of the property have been surveyed.

The town bought the Hagerty Property nearly four years ago with the understanding it would be turned into a passive recreational area available for all town citizens to use. The town later removed and demolished some of the factory buildings at the site but left the showroom, cutting room and antique boat house. The boat house is being renovated by Cohasset Maritime Institute, a school-based organization, for use as a rowing center. The cutting room is being used for town storage and the parking lot is being used to store Yacht Club floats for the winter.

Recycling Forum Slated for Dec. 5

An informative meeting on how South Shore towns will handle their recyclable paper in the future will be held at the Hingham Public Library Thursday, Dec. 5, at 7:30 p.m. in the Whiton Room. The forum is sponsored by The Hingham League of Women Voters.

Several towns are part of the South Shore Regional Refuse Disposal Planning Board (SSRRDP), which seeks solutions to regional refuse management issues they are all facing.

With the recent closing of the North Shore Fibers facility in Libbey Park, Weymouth, which had handled 80 percent of the South Shore's waste paper, the SSRRDP is seeking an interim lease for this purpose at Hanger Two in the South Weymouth Naval Air Base.

Waste paper prices in the last two years have seen dramatic fluctuations—from $40 to $200 per ton. If a transfer station were created at the air station, waste materials could be stored there until prices were more realistic, according to Carol Swete, Solid Waste Planner at the Metropolitan Area Planning Council, which is co-sponsoring the forum.

The shift from Libbey Industrial Park to the Naval Air Station, three miles away, would not result in increased truck traffic which was ten 95-cubic yard trucks weekly, according to Swete.

Plans for the Navy-operated South Weymouth Air Station, due for closure next year, include a park, or various mixed-use development options. The airport option was excluded recently by the Naval Air Station Planning Committee.

Social Service League Welcomes New Volunteers

Let's start off with some news from Pullman, Wash. Stuart Tolman, a senior studying food science at Washington State University, was awarded a $2,000 Northwest Food Processors Scholarship and a $500 Frank P. Feenan Memorial Scholarship for the 1996-'97 school year.

Stuart is a member of the Food Science Club, Golden Key Honor Society and Gamma Sigma Delta Honor Society. Stuart, a 1979 graduate of Norfolk County Agriculture High School, is the son of Peter and Constance Tolman, Black Horse Lane.

Cohasset Social Service League, founded in 1912 to serve the towns of Hingham, Hull, Scituate, Norwell and Cohasset, derives the majority of its funds for its services (immunization clinics for flu and pneumonia, cancer screening, counseling and support groups, including geriatric, marital, teen and grief counseling, and Meals on Wheels) from their Cohasset Consignment Shop, located on Route 3A in Cushing Plaza.

The shop has welcomed the following new South Shore women volunteers: Ann Fitzpatrick, Frances Gale, Susan Adams, Joan Timpany, Maxine Carter, Rachel Priestman and Edith L'Heureux of Scituate; Deborah Donofrio and Lorraine Lincoln of Hingham; and Ruth White of Cohasset.

Andrew Fontaine is all dressed up for the Halloween party last month at Sandcastles Childcare Center off Route 3A in Cohasset.

Manager Andy Merrill said the shop is staffed solely by volunteers, and is open year-round, Monday through Saturday from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Both men and women are urged to register for three-hour shifts. She commended the new volunteers for helping to make the continuation of the league's programs possible. For more information about SSL, call 383-0771. To volunteer, call Andy at 383-0687.

If you don't have the time to volunteer, but are an astute, wise shopper, "hear ye, hear ye!" Head for the shop for designer clothes, sweaters, tuxedos, new lamb jackets, American folk art, ski jackets, music boxes, antiques and designer jewelry—oh-so-many wonderful treasures!

And don't forget that your purchases help support the many worthwhile program stated above. If you wish to consign, call Andy.

South Shore Community Center invites families and friends to join in the holiday spirit at the Jingle Bell Walk, a Cohasset tradition that begins at 1:30 p.m. Nov. 29. Santa Claus will arrive by boat at that time with his elves at Cohasset Harbor. Santa and his helpers will give bells to all the children, then ride in the fire truck down Elm Street to Main Street, with all the kiddos and their adult friends walking with him.

After the walk, the center welcomes you to partake in cookies, beverages and a holiday sing-along. Seasonal music and carols will be sung by choruses from local schools and churches. There will be a holiday workshop for young shoppers at the nursery school to purchase small gifts. Santa will be upstairs at the center to pose for pix with you and your children.

Merchants will participate by offering complimentary treats or discounts to shoppers. Stroll through the village and share in the ambiance of the holiday shops and listen to the bells of St. Stephen's play from 2 to 4 p.m. while enjoying a hay ride around the

BASKING IN BASQUE COUNTRY

Trying to decide between a visit to France or Spain? Pick a vacation in Basque country, and you'll be satisfied on both counts. Actually, the Basque provinces are neither really Spanish nor French in spirit, but a unique cultural mix that its inhabitants have long fought to preserve. The city of Bayonne, located in southwestern France near the Bay of Biscay, is a great place to begin exploring. Three separate quarters within the ancient settlement offer varied experiences. Old (or Grand) Bayonne is known for its Gothic Cathedral of Notre Dame, and its strong flavor of the Middle Ages. In Little Bayonne, visitors can get a sense of the history of Basque culture by browsing through the streets of tall, colorful historic homes and stopping in at the Basque Museum. Quartier St. Esprit, the third quarter, is famous for its citadel walls, built for France's King Louis the Sixteenth.

Many clients choose SCITUATE HARBOR TRAVEL because they have an idea of what they want their next adventure to be (like basking in the beauties of Basque) and know they can turn to us for expert planning. Others have no idea where to go and they know we'll help them find the perfect spot. Either way, you can count on us to make your travel dreams come true. Our staff at 53 Cole Parkway, Scituate Harbor, is qualified, experienced, and well-traveled. We've probably been where you're going, so see us first or call 545-4281 or 800-354-2720.

EDITORIALS & OPINIONS

A Time for Giving Thanks

On Thursday, we celebrate the 375th anniversary of Thanksgiving, a holiday that commemorates not only the Pilgrim's first harvest at Plymouth in 1621, but all that we have to be thankful for as a nation.

Two years before the Pilgrim's first Thanksgiving in Plymouth, on Dec. 4, 1619, some 39 English settlers on the James River in Virginia celebrated a strictly religious thanksgiving that did not involve a feast or harvest festival. The charter that governed this group of settlers required a day of thanksgiving every year to give thanks at harvest time.

Harvest festivals have been held for thousands of years around the world to celebrate the bringing in of plentiful crops.

The Thanksgiving we celebrate today, marked by high school football rivalries and the Macy's Thanksgiving Day parade in New York, is inspired by the humble gathering of Pilgrims huddled on the edge of the New England wilderness 375 years ago for the simple purpose of giving thanks.

They had much to be thankful for, having arrived safely in Cape Cod Bay in November of 1620 after crossing the Atlantic Ocean at a treacherous time of year.

In November of 1621 they were thankful they had survived the disease and near famine of their first winter in Plymouth, a cruel and hostile physical environment to the newcomers.

Out of the 102 men, women and children who booked passage on the Mayflower, 50 had died within less than six months of their arrival on these shores.

But most of all, they were thankful for the help of the native Americans who taught the Pilgrims what kinds of crops to plant in this alien environment and how to sow and reap a harvest that would sustain them through the coming winter, fraught with the dangers of cold, wind, snow and inadequate shelter from the elements.

History records that some time during the autumn of 1621, the Pilgrim leaders invited their native American neighbors to join them in a celebration of the first successful harvest that included a feast of wild turkey, geese, duck, a vegetable of succotash, as well as cod, bass and deer.

Deeply mindful of the guiding hand of Providence in their safe arrival here, the Pilgrims gathered together to give thanks again in 1623, when Governor William Bradford decreed a thanksgiving day for the purpose of prayer and celebration. The feast was held outdoors and took many days of preparation. A thanksgiving celebration was also held in 1630.

It was much later, in 1723, that Massachusetts Governor William Dummer officially took note of "the many Instances of the Divine Goodness in the course of the Year Past."

In that year, Dummer issued a proclamation "to order and appoint that Thursday the Twenty-eighth of November Currant be solemnly observed as a Day of Publick Thanksgiving."

In 1789, the nation's first president, George Washington, proclaimed Nov. 26 a national day of thanksgiving. Also that year, the Episcopal Church set aside the first Thursday in November as an annual day of giving thanks.

In the early to mid-1800's, each state was left to decide how to celebrate Thanksgiving. New York was among the first states to set aside an official day of thanks in 1830, followed by Virginia in 1855.

In 1863 while the Civil War raged, President Abraham Lincoln issued an executive proclamation making Thanksgiving an annual holiday.

That year Lincoln proclaimed the last Thursday in November "a day of thanksgiving and prayer to our beneficient Father."

In 1863 the Lincoln White House dined on, what else — roast native turkey and gravy with stuffing, squash, sweet potatoes and, can you believe it, cranberry relish, of all things.

Deer Hill School Teachers Praised

To the Editor:

I had the opportunity to participate in the wonderful experience of Camp Bournedale, which the Deer Hill School made available to the sixth grade class last week. Camp Bournedale is an educational camp located on a lake in southern Plymouth. It offers science and nature classes and recreation programs, all of high quality.

It was very gratifying to see people with broad smiles, so obviously enjoying the beautiful setting, the learning experiences, and the opportunity to bond with each other in a unique way. And here I am just talking about the teachers. The students were extraordinarily enthusiastic about this program, in which they learned a great deal and, at the same time, enjoyed themselves immensely. The staff was experienced, knowledgeable, well-organized, and effective. It was a great experience for our children and a great educational experience as well. In short, it was our school providing education at its best.

I write not only to let other parents know what the sixth-grade parents have heard from their children. More importantly, I want to give credit to the teachers and the principal, who deserve our gratitude for going the extra mile — literally and figuratively — by organizing the program and attending it day and night, and giving it their all. What was so gratifying as that our teachers did it with all their heart and with the pride of knowing that it was such a good experience for their students. I am very proud that these are the teachers of our Deer Hill School. Thank you.

Results of Reader Survey Question for November 21, 1996

The help residents keep in touch with the schools, the school committee is starting a pilot program in which meetings will be televised live on Cable TV starting November 21. However, members are concerned that televised meetings will keep people at home. Which statement most closely expresses your feelings on this subject?

2 Televising school committee meetings is a great idea and will actually encourage interested citizens to go to the meetings in person.

0 Interested citizens will now watch the meetings at home, and won't attend in person.

0 I don't plan to watch or attend any meetings.

Your comments:

I think it's a great idea. I have two young children. I've wanted many times to go to school committee meetings, but haven't been able to find the time. I'm very interested in what goes on at these meetings. To be able to see it would be great. If the agenda is read at the beginning of the meeting, I might hear of something that I'm especially interested in, and I might be able to convince my husband to watch the kids while go there in person, and maybe make a contribution. I hope the pilot is successful.

'Mr. Average' is no Ordinary Republican

Hedlund says Blue Collar Roots are Helpful

By Mary Ford
COHASSET MARINER

As Carl Harris, chairman of Hingham's Republican Town Committee, says — Bob Hedlund isn't your country club Republican.

The only blue blood in this 35-year-old state senator's veins is of the blue collar kind — stemming from years shining shoes as a child at his grandfather's Weymouth restaurant and pumping gas at the Lincoln Street Mobil Station after classes at Hingham High.

A Republican state senator in a predominantly Democratic state, Hedlund — who represents the Plymouth Norfolk District stretching from Weymouth to Duxbury — was reelected Nov. 5 in a landslide when many of his party were defeated.

Just how Hedlund, who dreamt of becoming a social studies teacher, went from relative obscurity to becoming one of Massachusetts' most popular state senators is due as much to luck as sheer doggedness.

> 'We'd be better off having more diversity.'
> — Bob Hedlund on the number of lawyers in the legislature

"The funniest thing of all, is that I never saw myself as a candidate," Hedlund recalls about a political career which has its roots in the presidential primaries of 1979.

"I was relatively quiet in high school," he recalls. "I didn't play organized sports or participate in extracurricular activities. I was weak in math and science but did well in government and social studies."

It was in teacher David Lacatell's class that Hedlund's interest in the presidential race developed. After class discussion, Hedlund decided he liked a U.S. Congressman from Illinois, Philip M. Crane, who ended up taking just 1.8 percent of the Republican primary vote in Massachusetts later that year.

Perhaps it was that early experience in backing a candidate based on his views and not his chances that nurtured Hedlund's ability to stand up for what he thinks is right — and not always to toe the party line.

And although as a senior in high school, his interest in politics was sparked – the flame didn't ignite until years later.

"I finished in the middle of the pack. I was Mr. Average," Hedlund recalls about his contribution to the Hingham High Class of 1979.

At 18, he moved out of his Foley Beach Road home, where his mother still resides, and started working full-time in a truck repair business, which he eventually bought. Hedlund took classes at Quincy College and UMass Boston but has not finished college.

Although he was making good money and had no inclination to run for office himself — Hedlund stayed on the fringes on the political process in the early 1980s by campaigning for local candidates, such as Mary Jeanette Murray, the state representative for Hingham, Hull and Cohasset.

The South Shore Chamber of Commerce triggered Hedlund's deeper political involvement by appointing him to its Government Affairs Committee. Serving on the committee meant testifying on legislation and employee mandates.

"I was the youngest and only blue-collar member of the committee," Hedlund recalls.

Further getting the juices flowing was his razor thin win over challengers to the "unpledged" delegate spot to the 1988 Republican National Convention at the state caucus that year.

"I knew nobody, threw my speech away, and spoke off the cuff — I won by two votes," Hedlund says. "I was 26 or 27 and it was a thrill."

By 1988-89, Hedlund's trucking business was going well but disagreements with incumbent state Sen. William Golden at the South Shore Chamber of Commerce led to his seeking the Republican nomination to challenge Golden.

As it turned out, Golden ran for lieutenant governor instead of seeking reelection— and the primaries on both sides of the political aisle heated up for the open seat.

Hedlund faced opposition from Republicans Don Hussey of Hingham and Christy Mihos of Cohasset.

"It still stands up as one of the most expensive state senate races in history," says Hedlund who was outspent several times over. Mihos was declared the winner by one vote — but that was overturned the following morning when Hingham's official count was posted showing Hedlund had won by three votes. A recount later revealed he won by 39.

Hedlund went on to beat state Rep. Robert Ambler of Weymouth for the senate seat. He lost in 1992 to Brian McDonald of Weymouth but regained the seat by defeating McDonald in 1994.

Attributing his recent victory to hard work, a great staff, and enthusiastic volunteers, Hedlund says he was able to accomplish a lot over the past two years primarily due to a change in leadership in the legislature.

State Sen. Robert Hedlund

Although bemoaning the fact the legislature is primarily "lawyer-driven," Hedlund says the post-William Bulger years under Thomas Birmingham have been fairer ones in the senate enabling him to get more accomplished.

"Unfortunately one of the only professions you can practice while serving in the legislature is law. We'd be better off having more diversity," he says.

As an example, Hedlund points to killing a bill mandating how snow blades were to be attached to trucks.

"I thought, 'I'm probably the only person in the building who ever attached a snow plow to a truck,' " and then he took the floor.

"Sometimes, practical experience is helpful," he says.

Historical Society Elects Officers, Directors

The Cohasset Historical Society recently held its 1996 annual meeting at its headquarters, the Caleb Lothrop House, and elected officers and directors for 1997. Elected president for the coming year is Ernest Grassey who also will continue to serve as treasurer of the organization into 1997. First vice president is John Hovorka, 2nd vice president is Patricia Murphy and secretary is Deborah Junks, all of Cohasset.

Newly elected members of the society's board of directors are: Diedre Barrett, Thomas Cowan, Martha Gjesteby, Thomas Gruber, J. David Ledoux, Edward Lincoln, Jr., James Mullen and Robert Thompson, all of whom were elected for full three-year terms of office. They will join present board members Jo Ann Ford, Martha Hurtig, Mary Hartshorne, Arthur Lehr, Jr., David Pottenger, Penelope Redfield and Ira Stoughton, Jr.

The Cohasset Historical Society was incorporated in 1928 to "preserve and present" the history of the town as an early New England village, and operates three historic buildings in Cohasset, the Maritime Museum and Capt. John Wilson House, seasonal museums at Elm Street, Cohasset center, and the 1821 Federal style Caleb Lothrop House, its year-round headquarters at 14 Summer St. The Maritime Museum contains extensive collections of maritime related artifacts and documents relating to Cohasset's long seafaring history. The society also maintains an extensive archives and library of local and area history which are available by appointment for research at its headquarters. In addition to its extensive general museum collections the society maintains a large collection of 19th century gowns and costumes. Some of the items from this collection are displayed short-term "rotating" exhibits at various locations in Cohasset.

MEAP

test scores don't give the school department all the answers. Designed to measure the strength of school curricula, the MEAP does not offer individual test results and does not provide districts with copies of the test, Hart said.

"Without individual scores, it can't be used diagnostically," said Hart of the exam. "It's not designed for that. It's designed to look at the overall performance of a school district."

And while school principals and department heads review the exam results, Hart said they do not spur specific curriculum changes.

Another problem with the exam, Hart noted is that it is not tied into the state department of education's new curriculum guidelines. Hart said he is looking forward to the implementation of a more comprehensive state assessment test which will be more directly tied into those frameworks and will be more helpful to the school department.

The MEAP exams are taken by students in grades 4, 8 and 10 every two years, and test students ability to grasp facts, think critically and communicate clearly in the areas of reading, science, social studies and mathematics. Scores are scaled in a range of 1,000 to 1,600 with a mean average of 1,300.

State-wide, more than 170,000 students took the exam which includes both multiple choice and essay questions. In Cohasset, a total of 235 students — 30 of them special needs students — took the test in April.

The exam results are broken into four levels ranging from the most basic understanding of facts to an ability to think critically and communicate clearly and creatively on the information, and indicate the percentage of Cohasset students that scored at each proficiency level.

When looked at individually, many school administrators say the MEAP doesn't give a school district as much information as other standardized tests like the Comprehensive Test of Basic Skills (CTBS) and the Scholastic Aptitude Test (SAT). Results from other tests like the CTBS which is offered at grades 3, 5 and 7 can be used to help determine if a group of students are performing as expected, he said.

The three-hour tests also include a personal survey questionnaire at each grade.

While younger pupils are queried on how many books they have at home, how much time they spend reading for fun, and how much time they spend talking about school work with family members each week — older students are questioned on the amount of time they spend doing homework, how many reports and compositions they've completed over the last month, how many days of school they have missed in that same period of time and how much time they spend working at a part-time job.

This kind of information is helpful in reaffirming research that suggests that students who work part-time jobs during the school year or often miss school don't achieve as well as students who do not work and have good attendance records. But again, Hart said school administrators take this information with a grain of salt.

"One assumption you have to make is that everyone is taking the personal questionnaire seriously," he said.

Under education reform schools can soon expect to see annual testing with individual as well as district results, school officials say. And passing a 10th grade exam will soon be a requirement for high school graduation.

A TALK WITH TANIA LINGOS, M.D. MEDICAL DIRECTOR, SOUTH SUBURBAN ONCOLOGY CENTER

Milton resident Dr. Tania Lingos is leading one of the region's most exciting health care developments. As Medical Director of South Suburban Oncology Center (SSOC) in Quincy, Dr. Lingos is bringing world-class medical care to cancer patients and their families in communities south of Boston. Under her direction, SSOC offers cancer patients a top-quality, state-of-the-art community-based alternative for radiation treatment.

For years, patients have traveled to Boston for expert cancer care. Now they have an alternative at their doorsteps. Instead of incurring added commuting costs, fighting city traffic and enduring extra stress, patients can turn to Dr. Lingos and her SSOC medical team which has decades of collective experience in radiation and cancer care programs.

In a recent interview, Dr. Lingos spoke about the commitment of the South Suburban Oncology Center to helping cancer patients and her involvement in that commitment. Here are some excerpts from that interview.

Q. Why was SSOC established ?

A. Cancer patients do better when they are close to home. They and their families are less stretched and are able to maintain more normal schedules. At SSOC we have the expertise to meet this need - which is widespread on the South Shore - comprehensively, with compassion and with world-class resources.

Q. What does SSOC offer to people who live and work on the South Shore?

A. SSOC offers patients social service support, nutritional counseling, patient and family education, and medical consultation. SSOC's Patient Resource Room even has an Internet connection which gives patients access to computerized medical information sources and allows them to interact with online cancer support groups. Our equipment is state-of-the-art and is designed to treat deep-seated and superficial tumors. We have a Varian 2100 CD linear accelerator, simulator for on-site treatment planning and a multi-leaf collimator. As a community resource SSOC will treat close to 400 South Shore patients this year.

Q. What is your medical background?

A. For the past 15 years, I have been a practicing physician. I have been an associate with the Joint Center for Radiation Therapy, Harvard Medical School. I am Board Certified in Radiation Oncology. I completed my medical training as Chief Resident, Massachusetts General Hospital and am affiliated with the Dana Farber Cancer Institute, New England Deaconess, Quincy and South Shore Hospitals.

Q. How do your peers regard you?

A. Well, I am fortunate to have been selected by my medical peers for inclusion in the recent edition of The Best Doctors in America: Northeast Edition, 1996-1997.

Q. How many female physicians were listed in the radiation oncology section of Best Doctors? How were these doctors chosen?

A. I was the only female physician listed in the general radiation oncology section. The Best Doctors publication, the leading referral guide to the medical profession, surveyed thousands of doctors from Maine to Delaware. The Survey asked doctors the following question, "If a friend or loved one came to you with a medical problem in your field of expertise, and you could not handle their case, to whom would you send them?"

Q. Can you tell us about some of your other professional activities?

A. I have served as President of the New England Society of Radiation Oncology and appeared on CNN. I am also active in outreach and educational projects of the Wellness Community and the American Cancer Society. In addition, I publish in medical journals and lecture frequently.

Q. What do you work to achieve on a daily basis?

A. I came to medicine to help patients and their families. That is always my top priority and at SSOC my role permits me to bring first-class medical care to those in need without boundaries.

Q. What attracts you to the South Shore?

A. I grew up in Brockton and now reside in Milton with my husband and two children. The area is home to me and this is where so many family and friends live. Being able to serve your home community is very fulfilling.

Q. Now that readers have met you, what can they expect in the future?

A. This is the introduction to a series of articles that I will write. Starting next Saturday, I will offer a column that explores different aspects of cancer. For example, every year prostate cancer impacts 200,000 American men, the majority of whom are successfully treated. Next week, I will focus on prostate cancer.

Q. How can patients contact you?

A. I can be reached at South Suburban Oncology Center, located at 700 Congress Street, Crown Colony Park, Quincy at the intersection of Routes 3, 128 and 93. My Internet address is tlingos@shields.com and my telephone number is (617) 471-3700.

Water Quality Study Possible in Town

By Jason Bouffard
COHASSET MARINER

The Army Corps of Engineers has moved a step closer to closing a deal with Cohasset to conduct a water quality study in the Aaron River/Lily Pond watershed.

At a meeting of the Water Resources Protection Committee last week, members discussed a cost-sharing letter agreement issued by the Corps of Engineers in response to a project proposal submitted in September by Committee Chairman John McNabb Jr. Pending a few modifications to the letter, a formal agreement is expected to be reached in the near future, but the study is expected to begin no earlier than January.

It is expected that the study will cost approximately $20,000, and will be completed within six months of its initiation. Expenses will be split evenly between town and federal funds.

The Aaron River/Lily Pond watershed is the primary source of public drinking water for about 90 percent of Cohasset's residents and encompasses an area more than nine square miles in size in parts of Cohasset, Hingham, Norwell and Scituate. According to Chairman McNabb, the quality and future viability of the watershed is threatened by several potential sources, including uncontrolled nonpoint source pollution, septic systems, leaking underground storage tanks, industrial runoff, existing and closed solid waste landfills and residential development.

The investigation is aimed at determining, on a broad scale, the actual water quality in the area by monitoring several potential areas of contamination, establishing baseline water quality conditions for the area and recommending a water quality monitoring plan for the watershed.

In the original project proposal, McNabb expressed major concern about potential contamination from such sources as Cohasset Heights Ltd. (CHL) landfill, which is located about one mile uphill from the water supply. According to a letter from the Department of Environmental Protection, however, a comprehensive site assessment (CSA) investigation conducted in August in the vicinity of the landfill revealed that "contaminants in the ground and surface waters were not identified to be migrating toward Brass Kettle Brook and the public water supply."

McNabb was dissatisfied with the findings and will attempt to require further testing.

Single-family homes situated along the Aaron River and Lily Pond were also named as areas of concern, as were two sites in Wompatuck State Park which were formerly used by the military.

Committee members also discussed the possibility of contamination coming from road runoff in the form of salt, oil and gasoline.

"There is at present a need for up-to-date water quality information of the potentially threatened areas of this watershed and no 'early warning' system to alert us to any potential sources of contamination which may impair the quality of the water supply," McNabb stated in his proposal.

Based on available funding, the Corps of Engineers will sample from 10 to 12 locations and will likely measure fecal coliform and phosphorus counts, as well as conductivity and pH levels. Sampling at four of the stations will also measure volatile organic compounds (VOCs) and 13 metals.

But Board of Health Chairman Joe Godzik expressed reservations about taking such measurements from winter-chilled water, noting that microorganisms such as fecal coliform cannot survive in cold temperatures, a situation which could yield inaccurate test results.

While the study will be conducted primarily by the Corps of Engineers, members of an environmental studies class at Cohasset High School will conduct their own studies to complement the Corps of Engineers measurements.

While McNabb called the proposed watershed study a "snapshot," pointing out that an in-dept water study cannot be conducted for $20,000, it is hoped that it may guide future efforts for long-term solutions to the contamination problem.

The Water Resources Protection Committee is in the market for a new member. Anyone interested in joining should contact Committee Chairman John McNabb at 383-6202.

Author Signing at Buttonwood

Dinosaur expert Don Lessem will talk about dinosaurs and sign copies of his new book, "Dinosaur Worlds," Saturday, Dec. 7, from 2 to 4 p.m. at Buttonwood Books & Toys in Cohasset.

Founder of the Dinosaur Society and science adviser to the blockbuster movie "Jurassic Park," Lessem is a journalist with a specialty in dinosaurs.

Lessem is the author of several dinosaur books, including "Raptors!: The Nastiest Dinosaurs." His new book is a non-fiction work geared to ages 10-14 (and dinosaur lovers of all ages). "Dinosaur Worlds" dramatically illustrates and explains the rise and fall of dinosaurs, stage by stage, and reveals surprising ways in which the mysterious days of dinosaurs reflect our own.

Call Buttonwood at 383-2665 for more information or to order a signed copy of the new book.

It's Happening

Christmas Fair is Dec. 7

On Christmas Fair Saturday, Dec. 7, from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m., Cohasset Common will be awash in wonderful aromas drifting from the Unitarian Parish House. The Swedish coffee shop, presided over by chef Sine Pounder of The Bread Shop fame, will feature fresh baked goodies and delicious coffees. Fresh-cut balsam Christmas trees from Vermont, will also be on sale outdoors.

Both services supplement the annual First Parish jumble sale, this year nicknamed the "First Parish Junque Sale" in recognition of the elegance of some of the donations. The customary wide range of useful and entertaining items will be seeking new owners.

The sale of pre-ordered Christmas trees is a new addition to the Fair festivities. One stop between 10 a.m. and 2 p.m. and the right tree will be waiting. To assure the preferred height — 5, 6, 7, 8, or 9 feet — and bulk — thin, fat or full — phone Jodee Doyle at 383-9845. Some extra trees will be available but maybe not in the precise dimensions that pre-ordering makes possible. All sizes are $35.

Book Sale at Village Fair

One of the features of the Village Fair, coming on Saturday, Dec. 7, is the Book Sale held in Walton Rodgers Hall at St. Stephen's Church, beginning at 10 a.m. and continuing until 3 p.m. Book bargains in great variety are available, including craft and cook books, children's books, sheet music, songs books, as well as CDs and tapes.

There will be a silent auction of several choice books, the bids to be opened at the close of the sale. Browsers can enjoy a cup of coffee while listening to Blanche Thompson, pianist, play show tunes in the festively decorated hall.

This book sale in the church's centennial year will benefit its Outreach Program, including Habitat for Humanity, Quincy Crisis Center, and Wellspring, among many other good causes,

CHS to Present 'The Mikado'

Cohasset High School will present "The Mikado," a tale of love, loss and reconciliation, Dec. 13 and 14 at 7:30 p.m. and Dec. 15 at 2 p.m.

During the performance, the gentlemen of Japan, chorus of schoolgirls, nobles and guards will help Nanki-Poo avoid the executioner's axe and find his beloved Yum-Yum.

The event will provide a lively, colorful evening of song and dance.

Jingle Bell Walk is Nov. 29

The South Shore Community Center invites families and friends to join in the holiday spirit at the Jingle Bell Walk, a Cohasset tradition offered by the S.S.C.C., which begins at 1:30 p.m., Nov. 29, when Santa Claus arrives by boat with his elves at Cohasset Harbor (Border St.). After Santa distributes jingle bells to the children, he will ride the fire truck and the walk continues along the sidewalks of Elm to Main Street in Cohasset. At 2 p.m., the South Shore Community Center welcomes you to partake in cookies, a beverage and a holiday sing-a-long. Holiday music and carols will also be sung by choruses from local schools and churches.

The holiday workshop at the nursery school will be open for young shoppers to purchase small gifts, and Santa will be upstairs in the center to pose for pictures with you and your children. Merchants participate by offering complimentary treats or discounts to shoppers. Please stroll through the village to share in the local shops' holiday ambiance.

Listen to the Bells of St. Stephen's playing from 2 to 4 p.m., while enjoying a hayride around the Commons. Hayrides will be available 2:30 to 3:30 p.m. The festivities culminate on the Cohasset Common at 4 p.m. with the lighting of the tree.

The rain date is Nov. 30.

Advent Service at St. Stephen's

The season of preparation for Christmas begins with an Advent service of lessons and carols Sunday, Dec. 1 at 3 p.m. at Saint Stephen's Church, 16 Highland Ave. in Cohasset. The service, led by The Rev. E. Clifford Cutler, begins with the lighting of candles recalling Jesus' coming as "a Light to enlighten the nations." The Bible stories of prophecy, the annunciation, and John the Baptist are read. Saint Stephen's Choir, directed by organist Fredrick Guzasky, will sing chorales such as "Rejoice, Rejoice Believers," and "Ave Maria" by deVictoria. The service will feature Gregorian Chant as well as carols such as "Lo, How a Rose" and "E'en So, Lord Jesus." Advent carols will also be sung by the congregation.

The organ music on the church's 3,000-pipe Aeolian-Skinner organ will be by Brahms and Drischner. All are invited to enjoy the music and story that better than anything else can prepare our hearts for Christmas.

Book Angel Program at Buttonwood

In the spirit of sharing holiday happiness, Buttonwood Books & Toys in Cohasset and Buttonwood for Kids in Hingham will give a 15 percent discount on books purchased through their Book Angel Program.

Books selected at Buttonwood in Cohasset will go to children and adults served by Wellspring in Hull. Books purchased at Buttonwood in Hingham will be gifts for children served by Hingham Interfaith Food Pantry, Mary Martha Learning Center and the South Shore Educational Collaborative Teen Parent Program.

The Book Angel Program provides an opportunity for children to understand the deeper meaning of the holidays. For further information, call Buttonwood at 383-2665 or 749-2665.

Winterfest '96 Planned for Dec. 7

Winterfest '96, Hingham Historical Society's fifth annual exhibition and sale of traditional American folk art and crafts, will be held Saturday, Dec. 7, from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Sunday, Dec. 8, from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. at Hingham Middle School, 1103 Main St., Route 228, Hingham.

This year's show will host 50 professional artisans, many of whom have been featured in national magazines such as Country Home, Country Living and Colonial Homes. More than half the exhibitors have been selected by Early American Homes for their Directory of Fine Craftsmen.

The range of arts and crafts offered at the event is wide and diverse, ranging from miniature quilts, period tinware, theorems and carvings to primitive paintings, pewter, redware and 18th- and 19th-century reproduction country furniture.

Winterfest '96 provides an opportunity to view and purchase unique, museum-quality pieces from some of the best craftspeople in the country.

Admission is $3 for adults and $1 for children under 12, with proceeds supporting Hingham Historical Society. Luncheon and refreshments will be available.

Massachusetts-American Water Company

THANK YOU!
To our customers and our employees

Now that we have completed the most difficult phases of our intensive water main flushing program, we want to thank you—our customers and our employees—for your cooperation and patience through this year. We know that the impact of this year's changes has often been challenging and difficult.

It's no small feat to bring a new, state-of-the-art water treatment facility on-line, at the same time as flushing an entire water system. While we've worked hard to minimize inconvenience to our customers and to support our dedicated employees, we know many of you still had to bear the burden of these necessary efforts.

But now, the worst of the water distribution system disruptions are over, and we hope our customers are enjoying the fine, clear water provided by the new water filtration plant.

So, to our customers and our dedicated employees, we'd like to say: Thank You. Our very best wishes to you and your families for a Happy Thanksgiving.

With appreciation,

Ardizzoni's Successor Has Energy to Spare

Erin Sutherland Brings Teaching Approach to Gymnastics Helm

By Joe Reardon
COHASSET MARINER

By the time the Cohasset High gymnastics team has its first practice the first week of December, Erin Sutherland, the new head coach, will already have watched hours of meet videotape and laid out a plan for the Lady Skippers' season.

And the 22-year-old Sutherland, can't wait until the season gets underway.

"I wasn't necessarily a great gymnast," the personable, Class of '92 graduate said, "but I love to teach and coach."

Sutherland is a logical choice to take over the head duties after the squad's coach of 11 years, the hugely popular Ruthann Ardizzoni, resigned from the position at the end of last season. Ardizzoni, who led Cohasset to three consecutive South Shore League titles, will still be a familiar face around the Cohasset gym. She plans on helping out Sutherland two times a week and judging meets outside the SSL on other evenings.

Sutherland, who has been helping Ardizzoni coach at the South Shore Community Center since she was 12, is more than happy to have Ardizzoni helping out.

"The key to the transition is having Ruthann around a lot," Sutherland said. "I have a little mental rolodex of the best people in the world and Ruthann's right at the top of the list."

Sutherland, who competed for the Cohasset squad for five years during her junior high and high school years, has an extensive background in gymnastics. She began at the SSCC and has a good relationship with the girls on this year's team. Some were actually Sutherland's teammates at one time.

Hull Coach Leery of Thanksgiving Clash

By Joe Reardon
COHASSET MARINER

The annual Thanksgiving Day game between Cohasset and Hull doesn't shape up to be one of the more competitive games fans of both schools have seen over the years.

But Cohasset is looking to stage a big upset against its long-time rival. It's a stretch, but surely not impossible.

The Skippers have struggled all season with their new South Shore League schedule after a successful run in the Independent League. Injuries have crippled the squad and the team has found itself on the losing side of several lopsided scores.

On the flip side, Hull is enjoying its best season since its Super Bowl campaign of 1992. A win over the Skippers would guarantee the Pirates the SSL title and a berth in the Division 4B Super Bowl.

Cohasset Athletic Director Clark Chatterton is expecting a crowd of more than 1,500 if the weather conditions are favorable. He said a large Cohasset contingent will be on hand to view the first Thanksgiving Day game at Alumni Field. The Pirates, too, will have scores of spectators anticipating another trip to "Super Saturday."

But Hull head coach John Anderson isn't thinking about the Super Bowl. He regards the Skippers as a serious threat and is predicting a rough game against Cohasset. Anderson has spent the last week instilling into his players that looking beyond Cohasset would be a critical error.

"I'm very leery of Cohasset," Anderson said. "There's a long history here. Hull had an undefeated team one

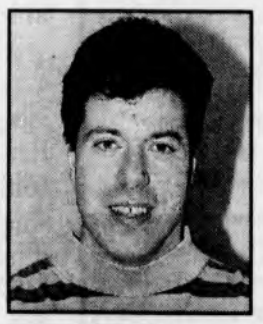
Football Isn't Only Holiday Competition

While high school football dominates the Thanksgiving Day sports scene with teams throughout the state going at their rivals, another breed of athletes also have a big day on tap.

With the possible exception of the Fourth of July, Thanksgiving has the biggest lineup of road races of all the major holidays.

No doubt the Hull-Cohasset game will draw a huge turnout with the Pirates needing a victory to clinch their second South Shore League title and Division 4B Super Bowl berth in four years.



Reardon

And while many local runners would like to spend the morning cheering on their favorite teams, the lure of a Thanksgiving Day race is just too tempting.

Manchester, Connecticut and Andover boast the two biggest races and deepest fields, but there are local events that are establishing themselves and drawing more runners every year.

In Weymouth, runners will be bolting from the starting line of the Fourth Annual Dreamcatcher Classic at 8 a.m. The 5-mile race, which is a vehicle to raise funds for the Julie Rodick Scholarship Foundation, begins at the junior high school on Pleasant Street.

Rodick was a paramedical who was killed in an automobile accident four years ago in Hingham.

The foundation gives two $1,000 scholarships to graduate students at UMass-Boston.

This race is attractive because it also offers a 2-mile fun run for novice runners who are not yet ready to tackle the longer distance, but are itching to compete in an organized event. A walk is held in conjunction with the fun run, making the Dreamcatcher Classic an event with something for everyone.

Chatterton has Fond Memories of Hull Rivalry

By Joe Reardon
COHASSET MARINER

Cohasset High Athletic Director Clark Chatterton isn't ruling out a Skipper victory over Hull in the annual Thanksgiving Day game.

Chatterton believes in payback.

A member of the undefeated 1957 team, the first year the two squads met in the holiday game, Chatterton remembers the Skippers rolling through an undefeated season the following year, only to have Hull ruin Cohasset's perfect record with a tie.

"We had gone two years without losing one game and we tied Hull on Thanksgiving and it cost us the championship," Chatterton said.

The tides turned in the 1965 game when undefeated Hull was heavily favored against the Skippers. Cohasset was a .500 team at the time, but pulled off the victory in front of a fanatical crowd.

Thursday is also a special day for Chatterton because it marks his wedding anniversary. "Thirty-three Hull games ago," he said. "It was the same week Kennedy was assassinated."

Next year will be the 40th anniversary of the two teams playing each other and Chatterton is hoping to have a big Thanksgiving reunion of all the teams and players of the past.

As for Thursday's game, Chatterton is looking for a big game from the Skippers.

"It's a good game for an upset," he said with a laugh.

Thanksgiving Tickets on Sale Wednesday

Thanksgiving Day tickets for the game between Cohasset and Hull will go on sale Wednesday, Nov. 27 from 8 a.m. to 2 p.m., at the Powder Puff game. Tickets will cost $5 on game day for all spectators. Athletic Director Clark Chatterton said spectators should park at Milliken Field because of what Chatterton expects to be a crowd nearing 1,500.

Trophies and prizes are awarded and there is also a raffle following the race. The entry fee is a reasonable $12 on race morning.

Runners interested in a more rural course can head to Marshfield for the John C. Venable Memorial 5-Mile Road Race. Venable was a popular athlete at Marshfield High School, who excelled in football and was particularly popular among his teammates.

The Venable race begins at 8 a.m., at the high school and finishes on the track. The course is flat for the first mile and then follows rolling hills until the final mile, which is also flat. There is a short, steep uphill at the halfway mark, but runners can get their wind back on a gradual downhill that rolls for nearly a half mile.

Prizes will be awarded to the top male and female runners in the following categories: Junior (18 and under), Open (19-39), Masters (40-49), Seniors (50-59) Grand Seniors (60-69) and Super Seniors (70 and older). The entry fee is $10 and the first 150 entrants receive coffee mugs.

To reach Marshfield High School, take Route 3 South to the Marshfield/Pembroke exit and take a left onto Route 139 East. Follow to Forest Street until you reach the high school. The race begins behind the Marstinson Middle School, adjacent to the high school.

For those of you who are truly motivated, there's the chance you can race and still be able to see most of your favorite high school game.

It's the classic case of having your turkey and eating it too.

In a Stalling Pattern?
▶ When a car stalls, it is usually an intermittent problem that can be detected by a diagnostic checkup. To help isolate the problem, car owners should be able to tell their auto technicians when stalling occurs (when the engine is hot or cold?). If stalling occurs only when the engine is cold, it may be that carbon buildup in the engine's intake manifold is the culprit. If the engine stalls when it is fully warmed up, and it seems to idle too slowly, then a defective idle air control in the fuel injection system may be at fault. On certain automobiles, a broken speedometer cable may cause the engine to stall. These cars' on-board computers depend on an electrical speed signal, which is not produced if the cable is inoperable. The computer uses the speed signal to reset the idle air control which, in turn, regulates idle speed.
▶ If you discover your car stalls frequently, don't hope the problem will just go away--get service fast to prevent breakdown on the road. At SOUTH SHORE CHEVROLET-GEO, you'll like the way we do business because we put the customer first. At our shop, you'll find uncommon courtesy and the utmost in respect for your requests for service and automotive care. Expert follow-up is our commitment to you.
Visit our convenient location at 828 C.J. Cushing Hwy., Rte 3A.
Why not give us a call at 383-9090?
Hint:
If a car is experiencing a peculiar stalling problem, the speedometer speed signal should be checked to see if it is correct.

Ardizzoni's Sucessor

"When I was graduating in 1992 a few of them were in the seventh grade," she said, "so I was on the team with them for a year."

Sutherland, however, is no longer a teammate of the girls, but rather the club's authority figure. She knows there is a big difference between the two.

"I have to understand I'm the adult here," she said.

Ardizzoni said Sutherland's strongest characteristics are her endless enthusiasm and motivation to coach. Sutherland considers herself as much a teacher as a coach, with her own experiences in the sport to fall back on.

"I think Erin's a great choice," said Ardizzoni. "She's very excited and motivated. She has worked with these kids before, but she wants to get even better as a coach."

Ardizzoni believes the fact that Sutherland's age is not too far removed from the seniors' is an advantage. However, she said it's important that the girls realize Sutherland is their coach, not a teammate.

"I found the first year you coach you try to be everybody's friend," Ardizzoni said. "But I learned after the first year you can be their friend and crack down when you have to also."

Sutherland is currently riding out a hectic schedule she expects will slow down in mid-December when she earns her teaching certificate. She already has finished her B.A. work in her history major and is doing a required student teaching internship in Mashpee.

"I'm looking forward to when I'm able to put all my energies into coaching," Sutherland said.

When that happens, the Lady Skippers will have one dynamic coach at the helm.

year and wound up losing to Cohasset on Thanksgiving. I almost wish we were playing a Scituate."

Anderson knows the Skippers have had their problems this season, but expected head coach Bob Knurek's team would have inevitable "growing pains" its first season back in the SSL.

Anderson is also aware Cohasset has done some good things on the field, and, with Knurek at the helm, has a coach fully capable of throwing a variety of offensive formations Hull's way.

"They mix up the offense and have a quarterback that can throw the ball," Anderson said. "We want to be aggressive from the start and control the flow of play."

The Cohasset High field hockey team poses for a shot at its awards dinner held at the home of Natalie Cheel's family. The Lady Skippers finished the season with a 4-8-4 record. Members of the squad included: (Front) Co-captain Jo Hurley, Natalie Cheel with Jenna, the coach's daughter and assistant, co-captain Emily Collins (Second Row) Katie Devine, Katie Buckley, Alia Afshar, Lindy Holway, Whitney Cook, Kristen Reynolds, Sue Gill, Megan Connolly, Kelly Lordan, Liz Kidder, Lauren Dooley, Sue Magner and head coach Debby Bostwick. The Parents Advisory Council will hold its monthly meeting Tuesday, Dec. 3, at 7:30 p.m. in the Deer Hill School teachers lounges. All parents and guardians of children receiving services under Chapter 766 are welcome.

For further details, call PAC Chairperson Kim Maynard at 383-2707.

PSO Teams Up with Learning Express

Learning Express in Hingham is assisting Cohasset PSO with its holiday fund raiser.

On Monday, Dec. 9, from 6 to 8 p.m., Learning Express will donate 20 percent of purchases made to Cohasset PSO. The shop offers an interesting variety of quality toys. All are welcome to participate in helping raise funds for Cohasset schools.

200 Attend PSO Auction

The PSO reports on the huge success of its Auction/Fund-raiser last Friday. Thanks to parents, principals in attendance, and the many donors within the community, the event was fun and profitable with close to $15,000 raised.

The PSO thanks the following fund-raising committee chairmen: Tomi Bukowski, Lesley Faber, Patty Smith, and Jane Wasel and the more than 20 people on their sub-committee.

Buy Wreaths to Support METCO

The Cohasset METCO Committee has embarked on a fund raiser this year. The group will be selling 22-inch double-faced balsam Christmas wreaths, supplied by growers who furnish fashionable nurseries. The cost is $8.

A limited number of "kissing balls" will also be sold, and both items will be available for pick-up at Cohasset High School Saturday, Dec. 7. Decorative handmade bows will also be available.

Watch for order forms in the school menus or call METCO coordinators Connie Afshar (383-6006) or Jean Hajjar (383-9917) to place an order.

Second-grader Sarah-Beth Butman casts her vote in the Nov. 5 mock presidential election at the Osgood School. Ms. Wyre's and Mrs. Collins' classes collaborated and designed voting booths, ballot boxes and ran the election poll. Sarah-Beth is in Mrs. Wyre's class.

Doing due diligence using on-line data systems

Edited by Elizabeth MacDonald
WORTH MAGAZINE

A company has caught your eye, and you want to conduct due diligence before deciding whether to invest. You're sitting at your home office, drumming your fingers on your mousepad, wondering: Which is the best and most cost-effective on-line data service?

YOUR MONEY'S WORTH

That's what we decided to find out. First, we asked Van Kasper, a San Francisco–based stock picker, to suggest a fast-growing, somewhat obscure company for us to research. Kasper chose Odwalla Inc., a maker of fruit and vegetable juices virtually unknown outside the San Francisco Bay area. We weren't surprised he suggested it, as Kasper's firm, Van Kasper & Co., helped, ahem, underwrite Odwalla's initial public offering. But no matter — it fit our criteria of falling in the outback of the market's stock arcana.

We then logged onto Prodigy. Three sessions provided progressively more data, ultimately yielding a detailed three-page report and a one-year price history — for under five bucks. We learned that Odwalla, based in Davenport, Calif., operates primarily in northern California and Washington, and that sales recently rose 60 percent, to $6.3 million. The company made a net profit of $126,000 in one recent quarter, versus a year-earlier loss of $89,000.

The report listed the company's top officers, address, phone number, various financials, return on equity, and a comparison of Odwalla's performance against industry averages. Hambrecht & Quist Group, an aggressive San Francisco investment bank, was listed as owning 19 percent of the company, which it took public in Dec. 1993.

Like Prodigy, America Online offered an easy-to-use quote service, and its free Hoover's Company Profiles lists 7,300 companies, though not Odwalla. Hoover's reports are comparable to Prodigy's but contain less financial detail.

We did find on AOL an old Business Week story that included Kasper's forecast that Odwalla's earnings would rise from 12 cents a share in the fiscal year ending Aug. 1994 to 30 cents in 1995 and 50 cents this year. Investor's Daily, also on AOL, had an article describing Odwalla founder Greg Steltenpohl as a former artist who said he is "learning to respect the fruit." The article mentioned Odwalla's recent acquisitions of juice companies in Denver and Bellingham, Wash., and said the company is "building a fanatically loyal following that other juice makers lack." ID said the company was expanding its product line and aggressively marketing the health benefits of its drinks.

The San Jose Mercury News, which runs its own Mercury Center on AOL, had the interesting news that Hambrecht & Quist had sold several thousand Odwalla shares.

All the AOL data was free, save the $9.95 monthly charge. Not so with CompuServe, except for a bare-bones rundown of Odwalla through the business report service. A search of CompuServe's premium services revealed that Odwalla's stock is rated a moderate long-term buy by Vestor, an on-line stock-advisory service. IBES, a company that compiles earnings estimates from Wall Street brokerage houses, forecast earnings in line with Kasper. We downloaded three Dun & Bradstreet reports for $22.50, and found them less-detailed than the $3.95 Prodigy report.

For $17 we could have obtained the company's financial statements from Disclosure Inc., which puts Securities and Exchange Commission documents on-line. Another $25 buys a list of major Odwalla stockholders. InvesText, which puts stock analyst reports on-line, charges $20 to search for a report and $20 for each one downloaded (brokerage houses give these away). But most of what we needed was in the Prodigy material.

CompuServe also archives dozens of California newspapers, from which we learned that by 1989, the earliest article date, Odwalla offered its employees 100 percent health and dental insurance, flexible work weeks, time-off programs, hot lunches, and a music festival, and also used recycled plastics.

The company was founded in 1980 when Steltenpohl bought a $225 juicer to sell fresh-squeezed orange juice to restaurants in Santa Cruz. By Dec. 1993, when it went public, Odwalla had a 65,000-square-foot plant in the San Joaquin Valley, and was selling juice through supermarkets, health-food stores, and restaurants. Its product line had grown to more than 25 all-natural juices. The articles also described a lot of volatility. Odwalla lost $427,000 in 1993, made $39,000 in 1992, and lost $895,000 in 1991.

We left CompuServe richer in information, but dazed by the pricing system. Each service charges differently; one may charge $45 an hour to search for information, and the next will charge per search or per report. Our cost — $42 plus the $9.95 monthly fee — could have been much higher.

Our final stop was Dow Jones News/Retrieval, with articles from more than 1,400 publications. We limited our search to the Wall Street Journal and the Dow Jones News Wire, finding six articles that added little to what we already knew. In one story, however, a dietitian questioned why one Odwalla serving provided several times the recommended daily amount of key vitamins, as claimed. Our Dow search took just four minutes but cost $37. Searching further could add hundreds in no time, making the service practical only if your budget is unlimited.

After our investigation, we knew a fair amount about Odwalla's history, leadership, products, and prospects, enough to make an informed investment decision. Prodigy provided the best value; its company profile and a new Homework Helper research tool put it a bit ahead of CompuServe and AOL. CompuServe, the most comprehensive of the three, was also by far the most expensive. None of them is truly comprehensive, so the wisest strategy at present is to cover yourself by subscribing to more than one service.

The number of funds within the equity fund rating universe tracked by Morningstar as of 9/30/96 was 1,708, 1,018, and 557 on a 3-, 5-, and 10-year basis, respectively. Morningstar equity fund universe included domestic stock funds (which included, but were not limited to, growth, growth and income, and equity-income objectives), international stock funds, and specialty funds. There is a minimum 3-year performance requirement before a fund is rated.

But here are the real reasons we're the leading mutual fund company.

With over $450 billion in assets under management, no other investment management company can match our knowledge, expertise, and resources. Our simple, but powerful, philosophy is to manage your investments:

Stock by stock.
Visiting over 6,000 companies, talking to CEOs, kicking tires, testing firsthand projections and product development plans are what we do best.

Analyst by analyst.
Over 300 analysts cover industries and companies with a depth that no other firm can offer.

Year by year.
For over 50 years we have played a leading role in bringing the benefits of professional money management to investors.

No one can promise that tomorrow's performance will be as good as yesterday's and you may have a gain or loss when you sell your shares. But at Fidelity, we are always investing in your future–stock by stock, analyst by analyst, year by year. Because we believe our knowledge can be your wealth.

Dead Wood Takes on New Life at Audubon

By Lesley Mahoney
COHASSET MARINER

They are four men, each touched by nature. More specifically, by wood.

"The beauty of it, the grain," Jack Nash, one of the men, says by way of explanation.

They will tell you that no two pieces of wood are quite the same. When wood from a tree is split, patterns in the grain are all unique. And it is around the patterns that the men work their magic.

The visage of a man — something Henry Cahill of Abington calls a "wood spirit" — is carved in color on a cedar log branch at the center.

They are wood-turners, who shape and maneuver their raw material on a machine called a lathe until it takes on some form unbeknownst to them at the outset. Resembling a waist-high workbench, the lathe has a circular spinning device on one end, into which a piece of wood is inserted and maneuvered with tools as it spins. Later, a finished piece of work can be coated with shellac, varnish or wax to give it a shiny, smooth finish.

Some of the men's finished wood-turning pieces — from vases and bowls to more abstract sculptures and wall hangings — are on exhibit in the library gallery of the Massachusetts Audubon Society's South Shore Regional Center in Marshfield.

"Art Forms in Wood" displays the work of Jack Nash, Wallace Kemp, Albert Vandam and Henry Cahill, all South Shore men, all with very different approaches to turning wood. A modest exhibit, its pieces are assembled without much narrative, some displayed without names or credit to their artist — but incidentally, the work speaks for itself.

Nash, a contractor, has loved wood all his life. He's been turning it for 23 years, since he was 13. He was introduced to the art of wood-turning in seventh-grade shop class and has been doing it ever since.

"Apparently it's just in me to do this. I'll probably always (work with wood) as long as I'm able," says Nash, who enters his pieces in art shows and has sold some of his work.

Working out of his Cohasset home in his spare time, he says his pieces are evolving into more unusual things like the "Cobra," "Spaceship" or "Jack-o'-lanturn" — pun intended — all included in the show. The three represent his latest work and resemble the objects of the names they bear.

Formerly, he was doing work like his "Gridlock," also on display at Audubon. A round plate shape on a stand, this piece is made of light and dark wood — paduke and birch — interwoven. Nash says he had to turn the wood separately, then glue it together to create the lattice effect.

Wallace Kemp, a 71-year-old retired general surgeon, turns wood in his studio in back of his Hanover home. Not surprisingly, he has always been interested in working with his hands. Kemp's backyard is lined with wood, ready for turning. He explains that burls (like cancerous growths of a tree, in the respect that they result from abnormal cell growth) and crotches (the "V" where a tree separates into branches) are ideal for turning. Spalted, or rotting, wood covered in mushrooms or fungi is also a choice bet for turning.

Burls, crotches and spalted wood, Kemp explains, are no good for furniture or any other use — but when split and turned, they reveal graceful lines perfect for artwork. While burls and crotches usually bear rings and swirls, spalted wood often has unique lines running through it, resembling brown, blue or green ink. Ultimately, the wood would be discarded or used for firewood. So, Kemp says, to turn it into art is to "recycle" forest products that, otherwise, would not be used.

"After taking a tree apart, you see many interesting and beautiful things," he says. And one never knows what patterns and shapes will surface until a piece of wood is split.

Kemp started turning wood about 25 years ago, making mostly bowls. But his focus has changed since then, thanks in part to the ideas and inspiration he got at meetings of wood-turning groups.

One of Kemp's pieces, "Fantasia," is mounted on the wall at Audubon — an abstract work, nothing remotely resembling a bowl. Three dark rings of shellacked, burled wood are arranged in procession and connected with brass rods.

Across the room, a burl takes the form of Kemp's "Nite on Bald Mountain," affixed atop a white, wooden stand.

Kemp, who stresses that wood-turning is an art and its creators are artists, says wood-turning is a "growing phenomenon." The American Association of Woodturners (AAW), of which he is a member, has grown in membership from 1,000 to 7,000 over five years, he says.

Kemp sells his pieces on a regular basis at Silver Ribbon, an art and craft gallery in Pembroke. He also enters his work in locally judged shows at the North River Arts Society in Marshfield and the South Shore Art Center in Cohasset.

In Scituate, Albert Vandam, also an AAW member, turns wood out of his basement. His avocation is in stark contrast to his full-time investment sales job at Fleet Bank in Boston, where he sells "services or concepts — things you can't touch." Vandam says he enjoys creating something he can hold.

Vandam, 54, started turning wood only four years ago. Originally setting out to make furniture, he was soon drawn to the multiple uses of the lathe and switched to making bowls and platters, some of which are on display at Audubon.

Creating bowls, he notes, takes a matter of hours instead of the period of weekends it can take to make a desk. "I receive pleasure in looking at a final object in a short period of time," he says.

But Vandam, who calls wood-turning "therapeutic — mentally cleansing," says its greatest pleasure is probably that it is "all free-form" with "no rules and no measurements."

He turns mostly functional objects out of his lathe: bowls, platters, letter-opener handles. He will actually use the pieces that he makes — like bowls for eating out of or for storing potpourri.

Vandam uses mostly green or fresh wood because he says it is easier to work with. It creates a challenge, however, because the finished product from fresh wood is more likely to warp.

Vandam doesn't generally sell his items or display them at galleries but makes things for people who have been nice to him. And, he says, there is a rule he goes by: "if someone gives you wood, give them a bowl back."

Henry Cahill, who is "semi-retired" from his contracting business, Henry E. Cahill & Sons, says wood-turning is "fun to do and relaxing." He stumbled upon wood-turning when he was contracted to do the interior of a bank. The designer had provided for rope turnings in the wood, something Cahill, 75, had never constructed.

"I couldn't do it," he says. So he started to take lessons turning wood and has been doing it for the last 12 years out of his shop at his home in Abington.

Cahill does his pieces at night. Instead of watching TV, he says.

One of his pieces on display in "Art Forms in Wood" is made of cabbage palm knocked down during Hurricane Bob and brought to him from Florida by a friend. Cahill turned the light wood into a high, dish-like object with scalloped edges, patterned with spots and a few stripes.

A vase he made from spalted wood is the biggest piece in the exhibit. Cahill found the wood for it on Black Rock Beach in Cohasset. Tall and lacquered, the 2-foot-high vase is decorated with what looks like blue ink etchings, a result of spalting.

Sometimes, however, he doesn't even have to look for potential pieces because he'll find them at his front door. People in the area who know that Cahill turns wood drop burls, crotches and the like on his doorstep.

Cahill is also into carving. The visage of a man — something Cahill calls a "wood spirit" — is carved in color on a cedar log branch at the center.

While Cahill turns bowls and vases, he does not consider his work functional. He says that he would never use a bowl that he makes for eating out of.

Cahill is a gallery artist, entering his wood in shows — including those at the South Shore Art Center and the Art Complex Museum in Duxbury, where he won a blue ribbon.

But Cahill says that the best job he has done so far is making wooden plates for the movie "The Crucible." He is waiting for the movie to come out so that he can see the plates that he crafted out of plain maple burls.

Nash, Kemp, Vandam and Cahill continue to get new ideas from other wood-turners through association meetings, catalogs and personal contacts.

But with the closest wood-turners' groups meeting in Worcester and on Cape Cod, Kemp is interested in starting an AAW chapter on the South Shore to expand the local network of wood-turners. Nash, Vandam and Cahill might just be the first three to sign on.

"Art Forms in Wood" is on display in the library gallery at the Massachusetts Audubon Society's South Shore Regional Center, 2000 Main St. in Marshfield. Admission is free. Information: (617)-837-9400.

Paul Pratt Library

Guidebooks are Available

Paul Pratt Memorial Library has a number of guidebooks for buyers of boats, cars and trucks. The guides are listed in the computer catalog of holdings. Some are kept behind the desk; a librarian may be asked for assistance with these guides.

The guidebooks include:

"Sailboat Buyers Guide: The Complete Guide to Boats & Gear," which describes sailboats by length and has indexes to companies, gear, services and advertisers.

"Large Boat Appraisal Guide" and "Small Boat Appraisal Guide" offer issues three times a year, listing values for all kinds of boats by make and year.

The "Official Used Car Guide" is issued monthly and prices domestic and imported cars and trucks by year of make.

"The Used Car Book" by Jack Gillis gives ratings (safety, maintenance, complaints) on more than 1,200 models.

"The Used Car Reliability and Safety Guide" by Adam Berliant gives trouble-shooting guides, safety comparisons and recall information on domestic and imported cars and trucks.

A review of all aspects of ownership or leasing, including depreciation, insurance, operating costs, repairs and how to buy and sell is contained in the IntelliChoice "Complete Car Cost Guide."

"The Car Book" by Jack Gillis does for new cars wh his "Used Car Book" does f used cars.

"The Truck, Van and 4x4 Book" is Jack Gillis' "guide to this year's best and worst."

U.S. Department of Energy's "Fuel Economy Guide" give fuel rating estimates."

New Town History to Get Underway

By Mary Ford
COHASSET MARINER

By the end of the year 2000, the town could have the third volume of its history compiled by local citizens.

But before the project can get underway, selectmen have put out the call for volunteers and will appoint a committee of up to 20 people to complete the task expected to take about four years.

Interested applicants should fill out a town government/resource bank form available at the selectmen's office at town hall by Dec. 15.

"The intent is to have as many diverse skills as want to get involved," said Wigmore Pierson, a member of the historical commission.

Voters at the Oct. 28 special town meeting appropriated $5,000 as "seed money" to get the project underway.

Planning Board Letter Rails Selectmen

Want to Put Village Station to Rest

By Mary Ford
COHASSET MARINER

The proposed village station won't die despite a recent selectmen's vote to kill it.

Planning board members took matters into their own hands last week by sending a letter to state Environmental Secretary Trudy Coxe backing a village train station.

Although acknowledging the planning board is elected and can act independently of selectmen, Selectmen Chairman Merle Brown took time out at this week's board meeting to publicly chastise the planning board.

"It would have been nice if they'd told us," Brown said explaining selectmen found out about the letter after it was sent. "I disagree (with the letter) and think we should stick together on this."

Selectmen decided to send a letter of their own to Coxe stating why they support the Route 3A site.

On Nov. 12, selectmen unanimously endorsed the Oct. 28 special town meeting, non-binding "straw poll" that advised that the commuter rail station should be on Route 3A. The straw poll vote was 311 in favor of a Route 3A station

Planners will Push Village Site

Planning board member Robert Sturdy, who also sits on the mitigation committee dealing with the MBTA, said Tuesday the planning board will continue to press for a train station in Cohasset Village.

Responding to the news that selectmen were upset by a letter planners sent to the MBTA last week in support of a village station, Sturdy pointed out that the planning board has statutory planning authority and is not run by selectmen. (See related story).

"Merle Brown may be upset, but we're upset that our role is being usurped by selectmen," Sturdy said.

Cohasset's Week

Open Houses Set to Review Greenbush Plans

The MBTA will hold open houses for review of Greenbush Line plans for each Greenbush town. The remaining open houses will be held at the following locations:

Weymouth, Dec. 11, Abigail Adams School cafeteria, 7 to 9 p.m.' and Cohasset, Dec. 12, Town Hall, 7 to 9 p.m.

The open houses will give residents an opportunity to review plans regarding the restoration of passenger service on the Greenbush Line.

Project staff will be in attendance to answer questions about the environmental components of the project. The staff will be seeking comments and input on the basic layout and design of the project, in order for the MBTA to be aware of community concerns when designing the mitigation plan, which will be presented to town mitigation officials in January.

Anyone with questions about any of the public meetings may contact Andrew Brennan, MBTA manager of environmental affairs, at (617) 222-3126.

Animal Control Budget Recommended

Selectmen will recommend town meeting approve a fiscal year 1998 budget of $12,981 for animal control including salary and equipment. The budget includes $10.41 per hour (a 2.5 percent increase) for Kathleen Maguire, Cohasset's new animal control officer.

The overall ACO budget will actually go down slightly because the amount requested for vehicle maintenance drops from $1175 to $900, Police Chief Brian Noonan said. He explained that money to paint the ACO's car was put in this year's budget and that has already been done.

Auditor's Bill Approved

Selectmen approved payment this week of $3,750 to Tucci Roselli, the firm that audits the town's books.

Maintenance Sub-Committee Started

Selectmen Peter Pratt and Nan Roth will serve on a selectmen's subcommittee to study maintenance practices in town buildings.

State Aid Amount Considered

Selectmen May ask the Hingham League of Women Voters to sponsor a forum on changing the way state Education Aid (Chapter 70) is allocated among Massachusetts cities and towns.

Sandwich selectmen wrote to their Cohasset counterparts to report that the Mass. League of Women Voters has published a proposal that estimates Cohasset would receive $220,000 more in FY'98.

They invited Cohasset selectmen to a meeting today (Dec. 5) at Sandwich High, which would also include the Sandwich school committee and finance committee, to look at the proposal. Alan MacDonald, chairman of the Milton Finance Committee, who is spearheading the MLWV proposal, will lead the discussion.

"We have invited members of our State House Delegation, members of the local press, citizen watch-dog groups and members of the public," the Sandwich selectmen wrote.

Selectmen Chairman Merle Brown said he would try to attend.

Selectman Ronnie McMorris suggested contacting the Hingham League of Women Voters to ask them to host a local forum on the issue and invite local legislators.

Vets Memorial Park Update Wanted

Selectmen will regenerate a letter sent months ago to the Veterans Memorial Committee asking that progress on the honor rolls at Veterans Memorial Park move forward.

They were responding to a letter from American Legion Post Commander Steve Wigmore stating his concern over lack of progress at the park.

"Because this memorial is on town property, it is not only appropriate by incumbent upon you to assure continued progress," Wigmore wrote.

Volunteers Needed for Town Boards

Selectmen said this week volunteers are needed to serve on the mosquito control committee, the sidewalk study committee and the drug & alcohol committee. Interested citizens should call the selectmen's office at 383-9900.

Town History

Pierson said that money will be used for a range of needs including obtaining copies of documents and photographs.

He said the historical commission feels that it is important that the town provide some money "to show its commitment to the project."

This will be the third volume of the town's history. The first, written by E. Victor Bigelow and published in 1898, covers the town from its geological creation to the close of the 19th century. The second, written by E. Burtram "Burt" Pratt and published in 1956, covers the next 50 years which included two World Wars and the Great Depression.

'To impart to a new generation the flavor of the bitter opposition endured by the committee who advocated this new and costly enterprise would be impossible. Folly was the least of the charges hurled at them.'

— E. Victor Bigelow, 1898.

Pratt's son, Peter Pratt, who is a selectman in town, pointed out that the town's archives are far more complete than was the case when his late father and the appointed Volume II committee on town history compiled Cohasset's history of the first half of the 20th century.

He noted that while there have not been the "earth-shattering" events such as world wars in the past 50 years — the new volume should put events in perspective of what was going on in the town, country and world.

Pratt said in Bigelow's history, for example, he talks about the effort to "centralize" the school system in town. Bigelow captured the controversy surrounding the construction of the new Osgood School, built in 1890 (where the police station now stands).

Here is an excerpt which depicts the debate:

"As last the town voted at its march meeting in 1890 to buy a suitable lot of land and to build a central schoolhouse costing $20,000.....Instead of $8,000 as first presented, a debt of $20,000 was required.

"To impart to a new generation the flavor of the bitter opposition endured by the committee who advocated this new and costly enterprise would be impossible. Folly was the least of the charges hurled at them. Many parents threatened to boycott the new building by keeping their children at home, or at least in the little old schoolhouses," wrote Bigelow.

The new history will cover the creation of the town's zoning laws, post war development and the initial rise of planned subdivisions, and show the impact of the Vietnam War during which Cohasset lost eight men — more than it did in World War II.

Interestingly, the Benjamin Report, a master plan for the town created in the early 1960s, predicted a more aggressive rate of development in the town. Pratt said the report predicted the town would now have a population of 12,000 to 18,000.

"In many ways the town has not changed as much in that era as some said it would — we've kept the small town sense and values," he said.

The memorials committee, which organized the naming of the town squares for the eight Cohasset men killed in Vietnam and one in Korea, put the matter before the October town meeting.

Volume III will be dedicated those soldiers, continuing a tradition started with Volume II, which was dedicated to the Cohasset men killed in World War II.

Pratt said at the selectmen's meeting this week that 12 people have signed up for the town history committee so far.

Watch Out for Scams

As the holiday season approaches, scam artists kick into high gear. Realizing this, Cohasset Elder Affairs hosted a presentation on fraud and financial exploitation. Brian Lelio, investigator for the Plymouth Country District Attorney's office senior protection team, conducted the session and included the following tips in his presentation:

• Be wary of telemarketers who state you have won a prize. In order to obtain the prize, you must first send money to cover postage and handling. You may receive an inferior prize or no prize at all. In addition, the telemarketers then sell the names to another company, which, upon realizing the senior was willing to send in money to obtain a prize, will hound the individual. To receive legitimate prizes, no money should have to be sent.

• Never give out credit card or social security numbers over the telephone unless placing a mail order. With the advent of computers, even individuals with unlisted telephone numbers are not immune to being contacted by these organizations. Those obtaining unlisted numbers then sell the list, which is more valuable since the numbers are unlisted.

• When contacted by telephone, be polite but hang up. If interested in making a donation to the organization or receiving a prize, investigate before sending money. Once the money has been sent, it is almost impossible to get it back.

• Other scams include installations of driveways. Residents are contacted at their homes and convinced they can get a good deal. The materials are often inferior and not appropriate for repaving driveways. With the first heavy rain, the driveways wash away, resulting in a hazardous waste situation. Use extreme caution when approached.

• Only deal with reputable contractors. Information on registered contractors may be obtained from the Attorney General's office, which keeps track of, and documents complaints against, registered contractors.

DPW Sprinkler Issue Open to Interpretation

By Jason Bouffard
COHASSET MARINER

DPW Building Committee Chairman Terry Atherton called the issue of whether or not sprinklers must be included in the new DPW garage "a question of interpretation."

The issue was discussed at length at Tuesday's meeting of the building committee.

The committee asked Gaffney Architects to initiate an appeal to the state's Automatic Sprinkler Appeals Board to seek clarification of the law which states that any building in excess of 7,500 square feet must be equipped with a sprinkler system.

A question exists as to whether or not the garage's impenetrable fire walls which effectively divide the building into two, could eliminate the need for sprinklers in the event that neither half exceeds the size limit. Although the law states that sprinklers are required irrespective of interior fire walls, Building Inspector Bob Egan pointed out that there is a difference between "fire-resistive walls" and the type of fire walls to be in place at the garage. While fire-resistive walls merely stave off fire for a time, fire walls are impenetrable to fire, in essence making two separate buildings out of one should a fire break out.

This creates a possibility that the garage's fire walls may allow the building to meet town standard even without sprinklers.

But Selectman Peter Pratt cautioned the board of the dangers of setting a precedent for future builders, pointing out that the modern building codes have resulted in less damage and fewer deaths as a result of fire, and expressing pride in the town's record of strict fire safety code enforcement.

"This is not a precedent, we want to set," Pratt said.

Due to the law's unclear working, however, Egan noted that builders would at some point have to grapple with this issue.

"This question was going to come up eventually. However this is answered will become standard. Unfortunately, we're the ones who are breaking ground."

Currently, the fire wall division results in a 8,400 square foot section, which exceeds the size limit. Depending on the state board's decision, the wall may be relocated, or a new one added, in order to accommodate the 7,500 square foot limit.

Vague wording aside, Robert Therrien of Gaffney Architects feels that the addition of sprinklers could be hazardous because spraying water on a fuel fire would only make matters worse.

"The bottom line is that sprinklers do not belong in this building," he said in a letter to chairman Atherton.

Adding sprinklers would raise the project's cost by $50,000.

The DPW garage was originally set at $700,000, but is now likely to exceed $1 million. Voters approved an additional $290,000 at the October special town meting due the unexpected additional cost to blast ledge to connect the garage to the town's water system.

Planning Board

and 112 in favor of a village station.

At Monday's meeting village station opponents, residents Gail Whitehouse, 17 Ash St. and Linda Keller, 2 Cushing Rd., brought up the planning board's letter which they had read about in a story that appeared in The Patriot Ledger.

"It seems to go over your vote and the vote of the people," Whitehouse told selectmen.

In its letter, the planning board wrote: "The planning board trusts you will not be swayed by a vocal minority (that includes those opposed to any train service) and will make a decision that is in the best interest of providing needed public transportation to Cohasset and our neighboring towns on the South Shore."

Selectman Peter Pratt, who feels the MBTA favors the village site, said he was troubled that the letter shows publicly there is dissent in town and that he is tired of the constant refrain of a "silent majority" out there in favor of a village station.

"The last one who used that (term) was Richard Nixon and look where it got him," Pratt said.

Jeff Thayer, an architect at 115 Ripley Rd. in the village, said he was disappointed by the selectmen's vote to kill the village station.

He said the station is worth considering.

"Please remember that area merchants and non-resident business property owners were never given a chance to vote even though we are directly impacted by this decision," Thayer said.

Brown dismissed the notion that the 311 people who voted for the Rte. 3A station at October's special town meeting aren't enough to make that kind of decision.

"Two hundred people vote on a $16 million town budget (at town meeting), so 311 voted that they don't want a train downtown. We can't make everyone vote," he said.

Keller said she was concerned that the village "charrette" to be held this weekend will be another vehicle to press the downtown train station. The charrette, which is sponsored by the chamber and rotary, is a two-day design workshop at the community center that will look at ways to improve and enhance the village, a process which could help the village get grant money for improvement projects.

Chamber of Commerce vice president Dean Rizzo disputed the fact he backs a village station. Rizzo said he is only advocating the town make an "educated decision."

Brown harshly criticized Rizzo for writing a letter to the Mariner in which he identified himself as chairman of the mitigation committee and asked that people write selectmen to implore them to make a decision based on fact not fears.

"I have a problem with that letter, it's not the right thing to do," Brown said.

The mitigation committee has been working with the MBTA to find ways of lessening the train's impact on the town.

Rizzo said that the progress of the mitigation committee was cut short by the selectmen's decision. He said the village station should have been "seriously looked into."

"I just wanted the process to go forward," Rizzo said about his letter.

Village Site

Sturdy said when selectmen endorsed the "straw poll" vote three weeks ago advising the station be on Route 3A, they did so over the objections of the planning board, which unanimously supports the village site.

He explained that the Route 3A site makes "no sense" from a planning standpoint.

"The idea is to get public transportation to the public and not a remote location where the only access is by automobile."

He said the increase in traffic on downtown streets with a village station would be minimal while the impact on Route 3A, which is already overburdened, would be horrendous if the station is there.

Sturdy said the downtown area is dying and dismisses the argument that commuters don't bring business downtown.

"They are not aliens from another planet, they are people who live here. Business thrives on the volume of people who pass through an area."

He said the downtown area is feeling tremendous pressure from Route 3A businesses and he stressed that survival of the village is vital.

"The character of the town is embodied in the village," Sturdy said.

He compared selectmen to those in the White House where people listen to the morning polls and change opinions depending on "which way the wind blows."

"They (selectmen) ought to sit down and do what is best for the town," he said.

Sturdy said the train parking lot downtown would be "buried from sight" and the town parking lot would be upgraded and improved by the MBTA.

He pointed out that legally the MBTA can put the station wherever it decides.

"We (planning board) will continue to press for the village station. We consider it our elected responsibility for our quality of life."

Sturdy said he hopes the MBTA will agree.

"I hope the T will see the light and follow its guidelines that public transportation belongs downtown where the people are.

"How many bus stops are on Route 3A? Why put a train stop there?" he asked.

Compost Bins Available

Due to efforts of the Cohasset Recycling Committee, composting containers are available for purchase by townspeople at a very good price due to a grant from the state Department of Environmental Protection, said Jack Hubbard of the recycling committee.

There are two styles of containers, the Earth Machine and the Brave New World Composter. Prices range from $20 to $30.

The new containers are on sale at from 9:30 a.m. to 5 p.m., Monday and Wednesday through Saturday at Aquarius Sunrooms on Depot Court. Payment must be by check made out to the town of Cohasset.

GOING PLACES

GRAND CAYMAN: ALL THE COMFORTS OF HOME
Sometimes when you want to get away, you are looking for a place that is exotic relaxing, exciting, and different - but not too different. There is something soothing, after all, about the familiar. If that describes your dream vacation, consider Grand Cayman, the largest of the Caribbean's Cayman Islands, northwest of Jamaica. Grand Cayman is a laidback kind of place, renowned for its beautiful beaches, spectacular diving, snorkeling, and all manner of other water sports. American visitors often feel instantly at home, as four of the major hotels are operated by Holiday Inn, Hyatt, Ramada, and Radisson. If anyone gets a pang of homesickness, a visit to Pizza Hut or Wendy's may do the trick!
The Caymans have something for everyone - beautiful beaches, interesting places, and fun things to do. What more could you ask for? Ask us at SCITUATE HARBOR TRAVEL for good ideas for travel anywhere, home or abroad. We make it easy for you to finally take that trip you've been wishing for. Traffic Study for Village and Route 3A Needed

The closing of Ceres Market, 17 South Main St., which opened only a month ago, prompted selectmen this week to ask for a traffic study of the village.

The board had previously requested that Town Administrator Gregory Doyon get quotes for a traffic study only on the impact of a Route 3A train station proposed for the old skating rink site where Barry Recycling is located.

But this week Selectman Michael Sullivan noted that a village traffic study is needed in any case, so parking and traffic problems can be resolved.

Sullivan pointed out that cars inhibited drop-in traffic by parking in front of Ceres for the entire day even though there's a two hour parking limit.

"They would look out the window and see a car parked in front of the store for the day," Sullivan said about the new produce market owners (see related story, page 27).

The town parking lot behind South Main Street is inadequate, selectmen said.

Selectmen said traffic also needs to be studied along North Main Street where the MBTA plans a drop off area if the Route 3A station site is approved.

The effects of possible back ups along North Main and feeder streets need to be studied, Selectman Nan Roth said.

Selectmen directed Doyon to get quotes on how much a comprehensive traffic study of the village area and Route 3A will cost.

Upcoming Meetings are Noted

The following meetings have been posted outside the town clerk's office at town hall:

- Board of Health, 7 p.m., Dec. 10 & 17.
- Conservation Commission, 7:30 p.m., Dec. 19.
- Historical Commission, 7:30 p.m., Dec. 9.
- MBTA open house on Greenbush, 7-9 p.m., Dec. 12.
- Selectmen, 7:30 p.m., Dec. 9.
- Sewer Commission, 7:30 p.m., Dec. 16.
- School Committee, 7:30 p.m., Dec. 5, AV room at the high school.
- Water Resources Protection Committee, 8 p.m., Dec. 8 & 18.
- Zoning Board of Appeals, 8 p.m., Dec. 11.

All meetings are at town hall unless otherwise noted. Room locations are posted on the bulletin board in the vestibule at town hall on the day of the meeting. Check with the town clerk or the particular board's office at town hall (383-9900) for any cancellations.

Village Design Workshop is Saturday

The Chamber of Commerce and Cohasset Rotary Club are sponsoring a "Village Design Charrette" all day Saturday at the Community Center.

The charrette will help the village revitalization committee, formed last spring, to develop design concepts to improve areas of concern in the village such as sidewalks, lighting, parking, traffic flow, plantings, benches and more.

From 9 to 11 a.m., organizers will conduct an open design forum and comment period and from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m., round table design groups will discuss the plans.

A session to review drawings for a master plan is tentatively scheduled for noon to 5 p.m. on Sunday but may be postponed, Chamber vice president Dean Rizzo said.

Rizzo said he encourages all interested citizens and town boards to attend.

"The more we have, the more it becomes a public plan and that looks better when we apply for any grants out there," he said.

Planning board member Robert Sturdy said he was "delighted" with the efforts to improve the village.

Sturdy said he hoped that a matching program with the town could be worked out in which businesses take care of refurbishing and enhancing the privately owned areas and the town takes care of the public places.

The chamber and rotary have each donated $2,500 to pay for the charrette and the MBTA has also donated $2,500, Rizzo said.

The MBTA plans to reconstruct the Greenbush line of the Old Colony Railroad which will run along the old right-of-way through the village.

Rizzo said he hopes those who attend the Village Fair on Saturday will stop in during the design session.

The village revitalization committee organized the weekly farmer's markets held on Thursdays all summer and in the fall held a village festival complete with pony rides.

"Advise Me, Mr. Grillo, How Often Should My Orientals Be Cleaned?"

CANCER TALK WITH TANIA LINGOS, M.D.

PROSTATE CANCER: THE IMPORTANCE OF DETECTION

Prostate cancer strikes over 200,000 American men every year. The key to addressing the disease, which tends to grow slowly, is early detection.

Therefore, even though prostate cancer primarily affects men over 65 years of age, we recommend that men over 40 have a yearly digital rectal exam and that men over 50 have a yearly prostate-specific antigen blood test. The earlier the disease is detected, the greater the chances of defeating it.

The difficulty with detection is that prostate cancer can be deceptive. Frequently, the disease exhibits no symptoms. Author Michael Korda describes this in Man to Man, a recent book about how he survived prostate cancer.

According to Korda, "in most cases there are no warning symptoms — no pain, no discomfort, nothing that would sound an alarm to even the most careful of hypochondriacs. Prostate cancer creeps up on its victims silently, often striking men who appear to be 100 percent fit and healthy, like me."

Conversely, sometimes the disease does exhibit specific symptoms. Any of the following could indicate prostate cancer:

- blood in the urine;
- an inability to urinate or difficulty in starting to urinate;
- painful or burning urination;
- need to urinate frequently, especially at night;
- weak or interrupted urine flow;
- back or hip pain.

The difficulty once again, however, is that in some instances these symptoms can also indicate other medical problems such as an enlarged prostate or urinary complications. Therefore, given the deceptive nature of prostate cancer, digital rectal exams (DRE) for men over 40 and prostate-specific antigen (PSA) blood test for men over 50 are crucial.

With a DRE, your general physician or urologist inserts a lubricated, gloved finger into the rectum, checking for hard or lumpy areas that might indicate a cancerous tumor on the prostate gland. A PSA blood test measures substances, produced by the prostate, called prostate-specific antigen. An elevated PSA level is often a telltale sign of prostate cancer.

If the DRE indicates something suspicious on the prostate or if the PSA is elevated, your general physician or urologist will recommend a biopsy. With a biopsy, a tiny portion of prostate tissue is removed for microscopic examination to check for cancer cells. If cancer is diagnosed, more tests will be conducted to see if the disease has spread and to determine the treatment options. More about those options next week.

CHS Class of '62 Reunion is This Summer!

It's yearbook time once again! Buy your 1997 Tessahoc Yearbook, on sale now until Dec. 9. All the students in grades 7-12 are highlighted. Checks for $45 may be made payable to Cohasset High School and sent to Mrs. F. Cronin, Cohasset High School, 143 Pond St., Cohasset 02025.

Also, if you are interested in purchasing a business or personal ad, please send the following information to the address previously reported — full page, $160; 1/2 page, $85; 1/4 page, $50; and 1/8 page, $25. Enclose your ad copy with your name, address and phone number. As always, the yearbook staff thanks you!

On the subject of yearbooks, the CHS Class of 1962 has been going through theirs to beat the band! A huge reunion is in the works for this summer, and names are flying around. If you know anyone who was in the class who hasn't been contacted, let me know!

Example: A fine lady who has a daughter that was in my class wrote from Florida to give me an address of a classmate's mother in the hope we could get him that way! How thoughtful, and nice! Thank you, Mrs. Quigley!

If you attended the Thanksgiving football game, you heard Ray Jones singing the National Anthem with Karen Niessink and Emily Henderson — the general consensus was that they could "go pro" if they wanted to, they were that great! Just add one more talent to Ray's list — the week he was named Offensive Player of the Year in the Boston Globe! Guess now as he goes on to wrestling (he's a senior this year) we are sure to hear more!

Before we forget, let us remind one and all of the all-night parking ban now in effect until April 1. That is, no car can be on the street for more than an hour between 2 and 6 a.m.

This Saturday is the Village Fair, the true harbinger of the Christmas season. It takes place from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m., and it is located all around the common. At Second Congregational Church there will be baked goods, many wonderful crafts that the ladies have spent literally months making and yummy chowder.

There will be a grand book sale, held in St. Stephen's Walton Rodgers Hall, and there will also be a silent auction. Blanche Thompson will be playing the piano for you to listen to while you find the perfect book.

The Unitarian Parish House will feature a Swedish coffee shop, with Chef Sine Pounder of The Bread Shop at the helm. They also house white elephant tables. It's such fun poking through the great "junk" that once belonged to others and can be yours to love next. Anyway, we have given you a taste of what fun you can have, and what goodies you can purchase. Now it's up to you to take the time to go! You'll be glad you did!

Last week we told you about the Social Service League and all the good that it does for so many. Well, here is another thing to add to the list. The league has compiled a list of Cohasset Jr./Sr. High School students who are waiting for you to call so they can do jobs for you around your home. If you are in need of this service, please call 383-0771 for students' names and phone numbers.

The reviews are in and it's unanimous — Sarah deLima gets a standing ovation as Mme. Dindon in the production of "La Cage aux Folles" which appeared at North Shore Music Theatre recently. What a treat to have such a fine actress in our little town!

We hope Elinor Kennedy is feeling better as she reads this. We know you cannot keep a good woman down for long!

Winter sports begin their practices this week. It seems as though we were just saying that about fall sports! Anyway, there is a new coach in our midst, Erin Sutherland, who will be coaching gymnastics. We wish her the best! She was a member of CHS gymnastic team not too long ago, and now she will be the one in charge!

Staff photo/Alan Chapman

Everyone had so much fun at the Jingle Bell Walk, especially Santa! Everywhere we went this weekend, there were little ones wearing their bells and telling all who would listen where they got them! Nifty idea to kick off the season for kids of all ages!

That's the news for this week. Hopefully you'll have some tales to tell after the long holiday weekend! Please give me a call!

Robinson of Bradenton, Fla., and Ruth E. Adams of Weymouth; five grandchildren; three great-grandchildren; and a great-great-grandson.

'Citizen' Nominations Open

Nominations are now being accepted for the Cohasset Mariner's annual Citizen of the Year Award. This is a continuation of the award begun in 1993 to recognize an individual for outstanding service to the community or for a special achievement.

Once again, the Cohasset Mariner invites our readers to take this opportunity to nominate a person who has made a significant contribution to our community. This is a community award: The Mariner is the means by which we are able to recognize, thank and honor those around us who make the quiet, generous contributions that make Cohasset a wonderful place to call our home.

The deadline for nominations for the 1996 Citizen of the Year is 5 p.m., Dec. 31. Please see nomination form on page 9.

Following the close of nominations, a selection panel will review the names submitted and select the 1996 Citizen of the Year, who will be named in January, 1997.

Nominees may be someone in elected office, a member of an appointed town committee, teacher or school administrator, clergy member, fire-fighter, police officer, or other municipal worker, a person in the business community, sports figure or an "unsung" neighbor or friend who has given freely of his or her time and energy to a worthy Cohasset project or cause.

A Single Candle Will Shine

Tonight, a single candle will shine in millions of Jewish homes across the earth and the world will become a brighter place.

For each of the next seven nights, another candle will be lit, until finally all eight candles will burn in unison.

People of the Jewish faith throughout the world will come together to celebrate as each candle on the sacred menorah is lit during the Hanukkah season.

Also called the Feast of Dedication or the Feast of Lights, this eight day festival is celebrated in recognition of the victory of the Maccabees over Antiochus IV (c. 215-164 B.C.) and the rededication of the Temple at Jerusalem.

Known as Antiochus Epiphanes, son of Antiochus, II, he became King in 175 B.C. and is remembered for his infamous attempt to impose Hellenic culture on Judea.

This attempt instigated the Maccabean Revolt of 167 B.C.

After their triumph, the Maccabees cleansed the Great Temple by destroying the idols that had been erected and restored the monotheistic religion of Judaism.

The Maccabees found only enough oil in the temple to keep a light burning for one day, but through a miracle, the oil lasted for eight days.

During this eight day period, the Jewish people celebrated their independence, in what is known as the first revolution for religious freedom in the history of the world.

Hanukkah is one of the most celebrated holidays of the Jewish community and the simplicity of this religious tradition makes it all the more beautiful.

In December, the coldest, darkest month of the year, the warm lights of Hanukkah remind us of all that we share in common in our rich Judeo-Christian heritage.

Hanukkah offers us the wonderful opportunity to learn about and reflect upon other religions and cultures.

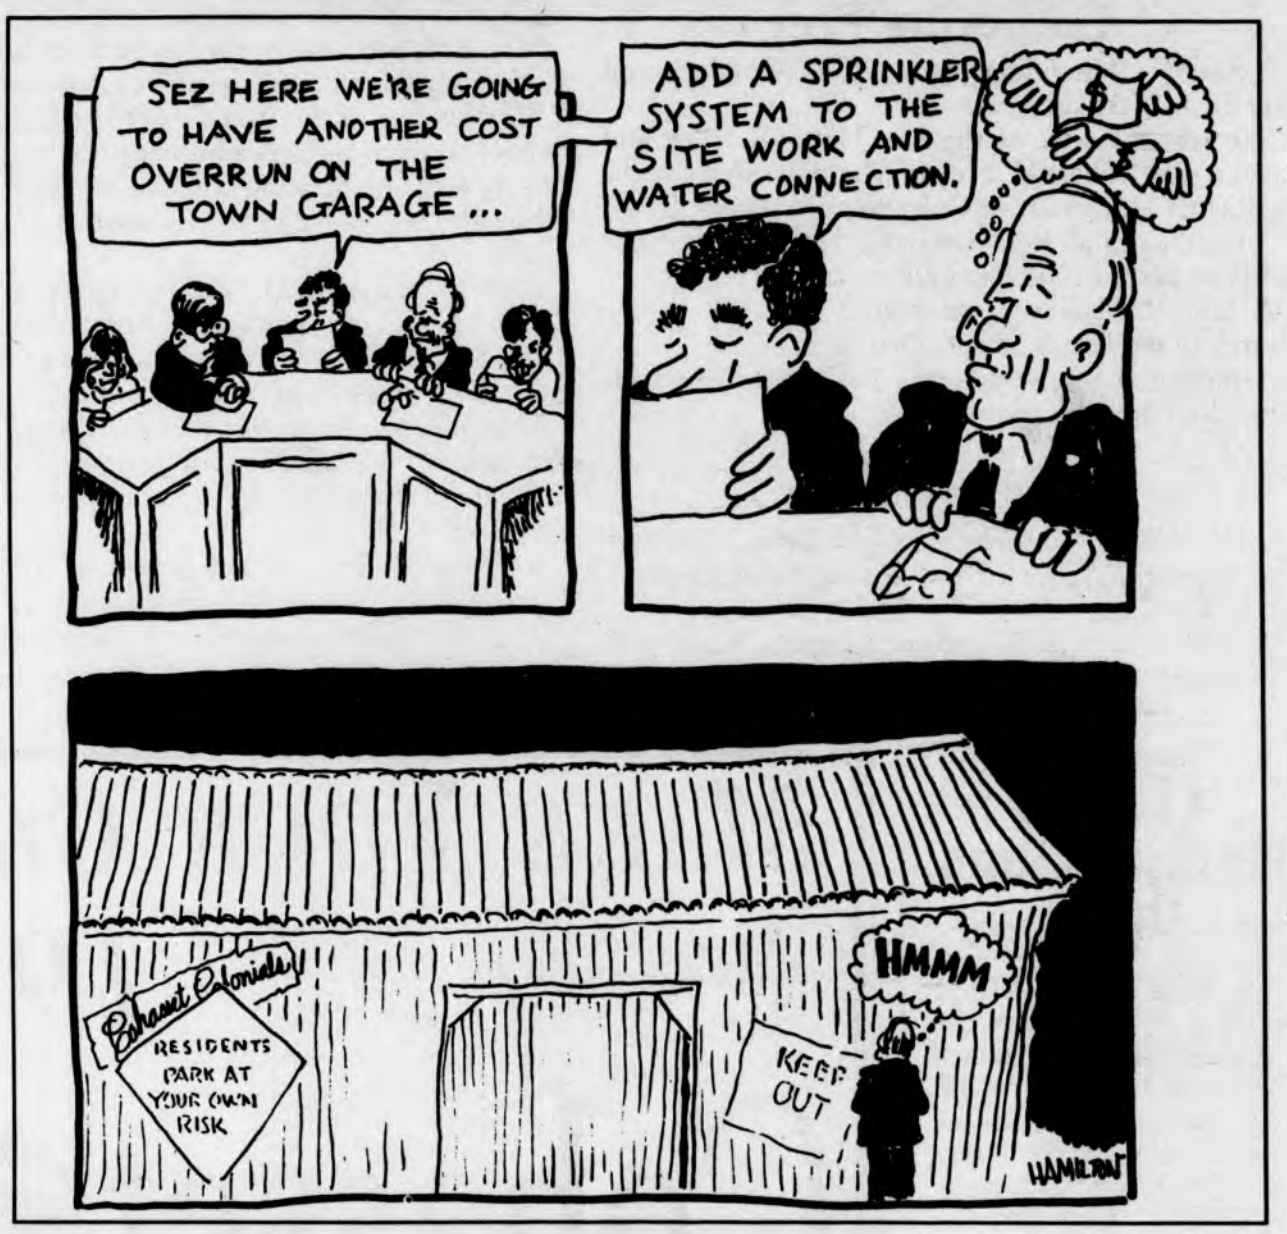
Happy Hanukkah!

Pure Norman Rockwell

The annual Village Fair provides us in Cohasset with our very own "Norman Rockwell experience." A 300-year-old town green surrounded by clapboard colonials and churches provide the perfect setting to get into the holiday spirit.

This year's fair from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. on Saturday has something for everyone. For details on what to do and where to shop, see page 32.

And while you're at the fair, we suggest you wander over the the South Shore Community Center and stop by the village design "charrette." Participants in the charrette will try to come up with a plan to revitalize Cohasset's downtown, an area so crucial to the quality of life in our lovely town. Organizers have asked for residents' input, so please take them up on their offer and drop in.



LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Put Village Station to Bed

To the Editor:

The Planning Board recently decided to go over the heads of our Board of Selectmen and the overwhelming vote of Town meeting to tell Trudy Coxe, our Secretary of Environmental Affairs, that Cohasset still wants a village train station. In their letter they described the town as having "split sentiments...". Is a 3-1 vote of Town Meeting against the village station a split sentiment? Did they believe that a 5-0 vote on behalf of the selectmen was somehow split?

If the Planning Board had done any research into this issue, they would have found out that in towns with downtown stops along the MBTA, businesses have not prospered, parking has become a worse problem, and many are in the process of developing out of town parking lots. The decision has been made on this issue and it is the ultimate arrogance for the planning board to undermine the process which was set up.

As Merle Brown stated at Monday's meeting, it is time for all of us to drop this issue and focus on the serious task of mitigating the impacts of this entire project.

Village Station Still Worth Considering

Mr. Thayer presented selectmen with this letter at their meeting Monday:

Dear Members of the Board of Selectmen,

I was very disappointed when I heard of the vote against the village train stop prior to people having adequate time to properly consider all ramifications. Things which might be possible with a village train stop are worth considering in more detail before decisions are made. I.e.:

1. Reinforcing the village as the town center, as the original train stop once did.

2. Revitalizing and beautifying an existing parking area which is far overdue for Cohasset Village.

3. Providing needed infrastructure to a village which continues to see businesses struggle in a difficult environment.

4. The opportunity to build train station parking out of view and with very little impact upon this sensitive village environment.

5. The possibility of providing public restrooms and an information kiosk so that visitors will not have to sheepishly search for same as they presently do. One very nice woman from out of town recently entered the Silver Spoon saying that she had just been turned away from the community center's rest room and was continuing to look for another. People have entered my building looking for rest rooms also.

I cannot help but think the town should engage independent consultants to determine the following prior to voting for or against:

- Would a village stop cause any greater health or safety hazard than trains traveling through town without stopping?
- Can MBTA build a commuter lot or structure which is essentially out of view and is of such a limited capacity that it will not be used as a spill over lot for Scituate and Hull? Is the expected traffic impact really as insignificant as the MBTA study indicates?
- Can the existing town parking area be enlarged in order to accommodate the cars which currently can't fit, while isolating said lot from long-term commuting?
- Can the parking/waiting area be designed to resemble a landscaped park more than a paved parking lot?

Please also remember that area merchants and non-resident business property owners were never given a chance to vote even though we are directly impacted by this decision.

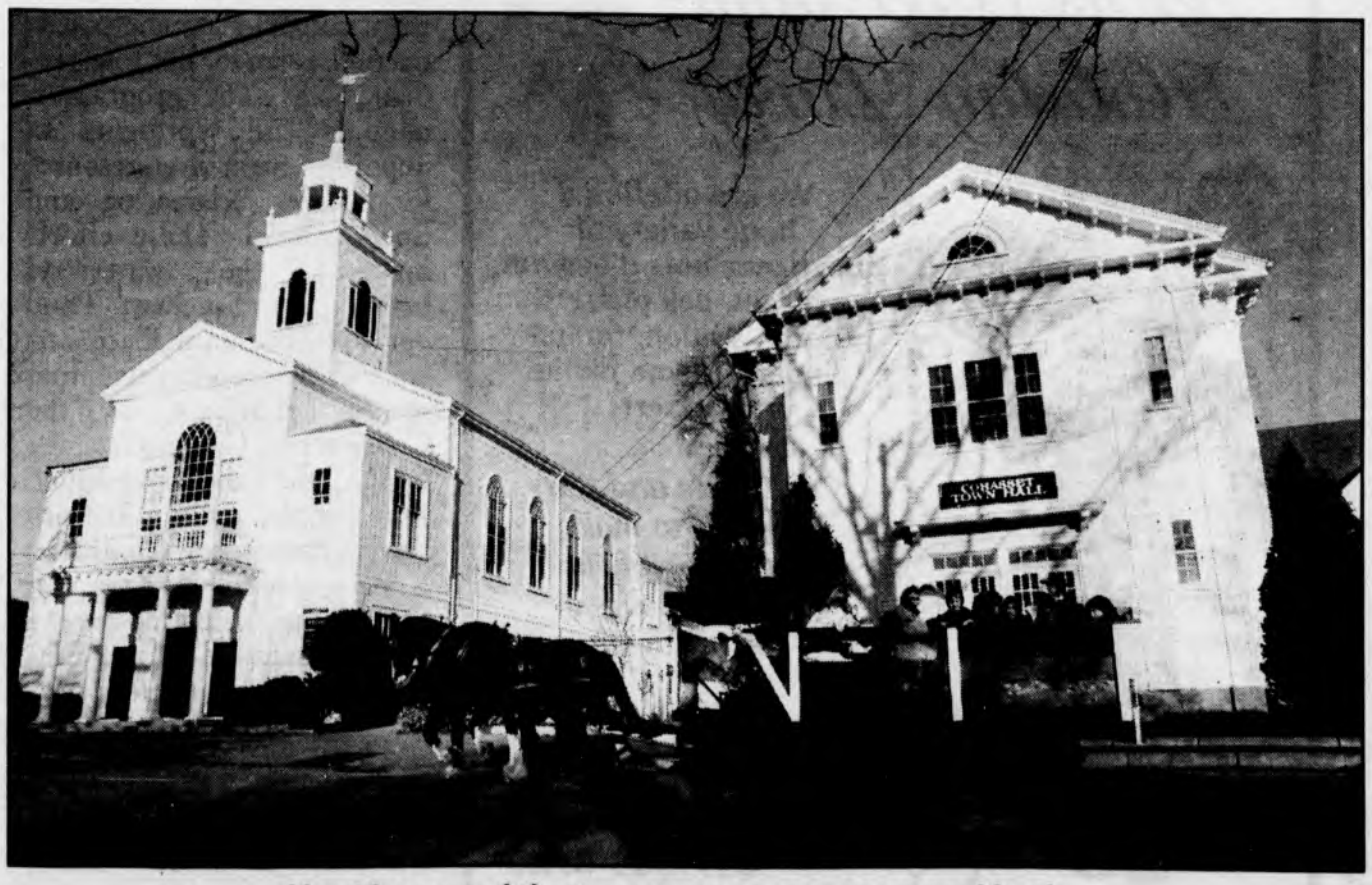
Jingle Bell Walk Delights All

Santa and Mrs. Claus, elves and even Frosty the Snowman arrive at the dock last Friday for the Jingle Bell Walk.

Garrett Canny meets Santa for a photo and to make a request or two at the South Shore Community Center.

Abigail Barrett anticipates Santa's arrival. The walk took Santa and his entourage from the harbor to the Community Center.

Elf Nicki Barnes helped Santa hand out jingle bells to everyone at Friday's family-oriented event.



Hayrides around the town common were sponsored by the Chamber of Commerce merchant members.

The Hagerty Building and the Learning Lab, a Good Mix

To the Editor:

Your excellent article on this subject prompts me to offer some supplementary information about The Learning Laboratory for Marine Biology and Genetic Research aka The Lobster Lab.

Expanding use of genetics in disease prevention, medical treatment, improvements in food resources, etc. will create new companies, new products, new medical and scientific heroes and fortunes, and is one of the gateways to the future. Careers in research, or even experience with the discipline of research, are some of the beneficial potential of the facility.

Although the Cohasset Lightkeepers Corporation (CLC) was established to rescue the decrepit lightkeeper's house before it would be too late, our charter authorizes the corporation, in effect, to do good works of any kind as long as no profit accrues to individual members. Observing that Kevin Ulmer's visionary plan was about to expire, from lack of the building essential to its viability, is a little like observing a child whose potential promise is in jeopardy from lack of support. Good people can't help wanting to help rectify the situation (perhaps while guiltily wishing they could have been spared knowing about it). The full explanation is a little more complicated, but that's essentially how the board of directors of the lightkeepers came to agree overwhelmingly to adopt the lab project. That, and the ability to see that the difficulties are of far less significance than the future benefits of implementing Dr. Ulmer's far-sighted concept. (I hope my fellow Lightkeepers aren't embarrassed by the implications of their nobility).

Dr. Ulmer has offered to use his unique and relevant expertise to benefit the future students and faculties of the region, by developing a Learning Laboratory for Marine Biology and Genetic Research and by being its initial (and unpaid) part-time director. A waterfront site is needed, for small amounts of circulating sea water, and the financial viability of the project is much improved if the Hagerty building can be leased for $1 per year, rather than purchasing or erecting a building. There is no other suitable site available, except perhaps at exorbitant cost. Absent adoption of the project by CLC, the building would be irrevocably lost to the town, and the magnificent idea allowed to wither away. Fortunately, CLC provides an existing organization with legal non-profit status already established, and with a track record of accomplishment.

We recognized that the lab project would have to be funded separately from the original house project, so as not to prejudice the financial stability of the original project. Up to $10,000 may be "borrowed" from the original project. Why not? Other organizations and individuals were generous in getting the lightkeeper's house project off the ground, and it seems appropriate that CLC benefit the town by at least risking a small amount to boost another worthy project. We recognized also it will require the great energy which that comes from understanding and sharing Ulmer's inspiring objective, and that the new project would benefit from CLC being supplemented with some people with that energy.

The project is envisioned as having four phases: development of detail plans and initial fund-raising; renovation of second and third floors and installation of an elevator; establishment of marine biology lab on first floor; and finally establishment of genetics lab on remainder of first floor. The third floor would be rented at market rates to Dr. Ulmer for his private use (this serves the lab better than if his office was in some other building, as well as providing some income to defray operating cost). The second floor would be a scientific library and computer center linked to other institutions and other amenities.

In addition to soliciting donations of valuable equipment and some pro bono services, we will have to raise about $400,000. It won't be easy, but the energy that is generated by an inspiring goal can make amazing things happen!

Unless and until the lab facility is spun off to some new non-profit organization, CLC would complete the renovations and equipment procurement, and would operate the facility with Dr. Ulmer as its volunteer Scientific Director. Financial accounting, fundraising, and expenditure of funds would be completely independent of the original lightkeeper's house operation.

Although of no relevance to the lab project, the fees charged for use of Bancroft Hall have been brought into question, without introducing the realities of operating cost. When renovation of the lightkeeper's house was first proposed, there were unrealistic expectations that community facilities could be available at nominal cost. But innocence has had to yield to the realities of renovation and operating cost, and sizable fees must be charged for private functions to enable CLC to accommodate all the worthy groups that use the hall at no cost. We also must build up a reserve fund for major capital repairs such as roof replacement. However, our ability to project expenses and revenues has improved with two years of experience, and in early 1997 we will be reviewing, and probably revising downward, our fee structure.

Some feel that the land now occupied by the Hagerty building should be used for park land or parking spaces. But is the value of a few more parking spaces comparable to the long term impact of the Learning Lab? The building will produce small return if sold to be moved away, or will cost a few dollars if demolished and carted off in a dumpster. Surely small potatoes compared with the expansion of student horizons. As Kevin Ulmer has pointed out, we do a lot for the athletically inclined, but too little for "the nerds." Intellectual stimulation and growth is important.

Which wins, vision or tunnel vision?

R. M. Campbell, President
Cohasset Lightkeepers Corp.

Volunteer Manpower Source Offered

To the Editor:

We were pleased to note that very serious efforts are presently underway at solving the James Brook flooding problem (Cohasset Mariner, 11/21). The combined continuous participation of the town engineer, conservation commission, department of public works, and the selectmen should be encouraged and applauded.

In April of 1995 and 1996, approximately 50 Cohasset High School students, along with the Cohasset Mosquito Control Committee (CMCC), initiated a program of cleaning James Brook to help in reducing the mosquito population and concurrently enhancing the beauty and learning potential of the area for our total student body. The program is ongoing and represents an important manpower resource for future reclamation and flood control. These efforts involved the waterways between the Sanctuary Pond outlet and the Smith Place wetland. Active support came from several members of the Conservation Commission, the CMCC, the Council on Aging, townspeople, and the Rosano-Davis Construction Company.

We respectfully suggest that the groups listed above be included in future deliberations concerning reclamation projects on James Brook.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Let's Hope Cohasset Never Has To Do It Again

To the Editor:

I would like to thank the many, many people who worked to make the Memorial Dedication Day a powerful tribute to our brave friends who gave their lives in Korea and Vietnam.

It was a wonderful undertaking and it took the hard work and dedication of many to make it happen. I would like to thank some of the many: our parade commander Ralph Perroncello and our military protocol experts, Bob Jackson and Wayne Harrington, the military facts gathering by Joe Hamilton. The Veterans organizations, especially the Sons of the Legion, Scott Arnold and Tom Wigmore, for the color guard, the members of the fire squad.

The behind the scenes hustle of Vin Nardo, Craig Mur, Jarrod Batts, Brad Potolicchio, Chris Pratt, Sean Conte and Elizabeth Nardo for keeping the locations set up ahead of the parade. The Legion's women's auxiliary for getting invitations out and hosting at the early part of the reception, and to Mary Brennock for baking the Dedication day cake.

Chief Brian Noonan for his participation, and command and control of all the police details that kept the roads closed as we moved during the afternoon.

Our thanks to the selectmen for giving us full access to the town departments and for ordering town flags at half-staff. The bus drivers, Hugh Morgan and Kevin Soule. Ham Tewksbury for bringing the senior shuttle along to give a lift.

Jack Whorley and the recreation department for the early financial support for the band.

The clergy, Reverend Bert White, Reverend Gary Ritts, and Father John Mulvehill, for their benedictions.

Special thanks to our friends at the senior center, Kathy Bryanton, and the community center, Stephanie Church, for use of their facilities for the reception.

The men who made the dedication speeches after many rewrites and long rehearsals were superb: Cliff Jones, John Morgan, Joe Hamilton, Merle Brown, Bruce Butman, Bob Jackson, Joe McElroy and Wayne Harrington.

The wonderful folks at the DPW who were out until the last minute trimming and raking, and their superintendent Harold Litchfield, whose methodical guidance got us through the construction phase of the project.

Our heartfelt thanks and appreciation to Mr. and Mrs. John Covell of 77 Jerusalem Road for giving the town a license to name a portion of their land Peter J. Albiani Jr. Square.

We are grateful to the many, many contributors who helped, and last but not least, the citizens of Cohasset who allowed the locations to be renamed.

We should never forget the efforts of everyone who helped in this tribute to our sons, brothers, friends, and heroes.

Dedicated Staff Is Appreciated

Dr. Mr. Hart:

I am writing to inform you of how pleased I was with the recent sixth grade trip to Camp Bourndale. I was lucky enough to chaperone the second night of the camp and was able to witness first hand part of the wonderful experience the kids went through. There was a lot of enthusiasm and excitement during the time I was there. At night, the boys in my cabin talked extensively about the day's activities and what would happen the next day.

All of this would not have happened were it not for an extraordinary effort put forth by the sixth grade teachers. In this day and age, it is rare to find such extra effort. This group of teachers put in extra time and energy, starting with three fund-raisers and culminating in a well-planned three day outdoor camp experience that most children never get to experience. My wife and I consider ourselves fortunate that our child is a sixth grader in the Cohasset school system and is being taught by such a dedicated staff.

School Technology Aide Thanked

To the Editor:

Thursday, Nov. 21, the Cohasset Public Schools televised its first school committee meeting on channel 52. This program was made possible by the conscientious and committed efforts of Ms. Cori Hughes, technology aide at the junior/senior high school. Ms. Hughes set up the television studio with all the necessary audio and visual equipment needed to produce such a program. Ms. Hughes is to be highly commended for her commitment to the Cohasset schools, and we look forward to seeing future efforts on channel 52.

Septic System Causes Nightmare, Neighbors say

Health Board Workshop is Dec. 10

By Mary Ford
COHASSET MARINER

As the board of health develops a plan to deal with failing septic systems in town — one local couple warned selectmen this week that the new systems can cause a different set of problems.

Paul and Robin Lualdi, 56 Deep Run, said the alternative septic system, called a "FAST system" being constructed next door to their house, has created drainage, noise and odor problems.

Selectmen will ask the health board to look into the matter and report back to them Monday.

The system incorporates its own mini-treatment plant that includes a green machine that forces air into the tank. The machine looks and sounds a lot like an air conditioner.

The Lualdis said the "jolly green pump house" has been placed on the lot line where they can easily see and hear it.

They also said the roots to trees on their property where cut during construction and the new berm created by the system has created a dam that doesn't allow the water from their property to drain to a nearby brook the way it used to.

The Lualdis said the health board, which has jurisdiction over septic system approvals, has dismissed their complaints and said it was a civil matter.

"There has been no thought to the environmental impact," Mr. Lualdi said. "We are quite frustrated by the whole thing."

Selectman Nan Roth pointed out that while alternative systems are a "boon to our rocky coastline", all affects on neighbors must be considered.

Health board member Kevin Ulmer, who attended Monday's meeting to participate in an executive session on another matter, said alternative systems, which are more expensive, are used only when traditional systems won't work due to geographic limitations.

Lualdi said he was concerned that if the town goes forward with its septic system plan then it would pit "neighbor against neighbor" unless these problems are resolved.

The health board is conducting workshops dealing with a master plan for "on-site wastewater management" in town.

The next workshop is at 8 p.m., Dec. 10 at town hall.

COUNCIL CORNER/Pat Baird

The junior/senior high school council met Nov. 13. There is an opening for a community representative on the council. Any person, not a parent of a school age child, who would like to volunteer, please call the high school office at 383-6100.

Girls' lacrosse has been added to next year's budget. Previously girls lacrosse has been considered a club team.

The middle school concept discussions are moving ahead. Scheduling is now being considered. Principal Curtis Collins complimented the faculty for its enthusiasm and hard work.

Junior high protocol issues were presented. Parents are advised that the chain of communications starts with the teachers.

Block scheduling is also being discussed in committees.

The next junior/senior high council meeting will be held Dec. 11 at 7 p.m. in the AV Studio.

The Deer Hill School Council met Nov. 12. The council discussed the success of the "Make-a-Difference Day," which involved parents, teachers and students participating in work projects around the school. Future plans include a "Net Day" to get the school connected to the Internet.

The need for an informative meeting for parents to learn about their role in the student's homework and projects was discussed. Principal Paul Callahan suggested a parents' coffee to deal with this issue.

Further discussion regarding the school climate emphasized the success with the homeroom seating plan in the cafeteria and the marked improvement in school conduct. The council was unanimous in supporting future school traditions to help involve the students in the community and facilitate positive social events, such as the sixth grade Bournedale trip and supporting activities.

The Osgood School Council met Nov. 12. Members created an agenda for the "Meet Your Principal and Council Coffee." The coffee was held the evening of Nov. 18 and refreshments were provided by the PSO. Council members discussed the Osgood School core values and worked to make the core values into a language that children will understand. Members decided that the core values could be made into posters with illustrations that represent the values. These posters will be used in classes to focus discussions on core values. The next meeting will be held Dec. 10.

• • •

Council meetings are open to the public and everyone is invited to attend.

Hedlund Hosts Holiday Open House

State Sen. Robert L. Hedlund and his family will host a holiday open house Saturday, Dec. 7, from 7 p.m. to midnight at Hingham Community Center, 70 South Street, Downtown Hingham. The event is open to all who wish to attend.

Admission is free; however, guests are encouraged to bring non-perishable food items to be donated to Weymouth Food Pantry.

Hart Responds to GED Exam Requirement

By Charlene Vandini
COHASSET MARINER

Cohasset School Supt. Stephen Hart is joining his counterparts in other communities in the state, urging the Massachusetts Board of Education not to require high school seniors to take the General Educational Development (GED) test.

Hart said a letter is being sent this week from the Massachusetts Association of School Superintendents to John Silber, chairman of the board of education, regarding Silber's recent proposal that all high school seniors take the exam as a requirement for graduation.

Last week, the board of education voted to require the exam, drawing sharp criticism from educators and students across the state.

In the Nov. 26 letter, Peter Finn, executive director of the superintendents' association, said the organization "urges you not to administer [emphasis theirs] the GED examination to high school seniors in the spring of 1997."

Hart said he agrees with the superintendents' position that graduating students should be able to pass the GED, but "it's not the right thing to do now."

New curriculum guidelines adopted under the state's education reform program are being phased in, Hart said. Schools are incorporating these guidelines and the test that will be given in 1997 to tenth graders is a main component of education reform.

That examination "will be based on curricula that schools are clearly responsible for teaching and students are clearly responsible for learning, an appropriate and defensible position from which to impose sanctions," Finn wrote of the new test.

Hart said the "curriculum framework" is a "basic level of knowledge" in math, science, history and social studies, and English. The new test will directly relate to these subjects.

While Silber has been highly critical of school systems where students are regularly passed from grade to grade, and graduated without a minimal proficiency in basic subjects, Hart feels this is not the case in Cohasset.

One state legislator, Harold Lane (D-Holden) estimated it would cost the Commonwealth $4 million to administer the GED exam to high school seniors this year, and promised to fight to withhold the money.

Paul Reville, chairman of Massachusetts Education Reform Review Commission called the GED exam requirement "ill-considered, unfair, illegal, impractical, and inefficient." The board of education cannot legally withhold a diploma unless students are given clear advance notice of changes in graduation requirements, he said.

Forum on Recycling is Dec. 5

An informative meeting on how South Shore towns will handle their recyclable paper in the future will be held at the Hingham Public Library Thursday, Dec. 5, at 7:30 p.m. in the Whiton Room. The forum is sponsored by The Hingham League of Women Voters.

Several towns are part of the South Shore Regional Refuse Disposal Planning Board (SSRRDP), which seeks solutions to regional refuse management issues they are all facing.

With the recent closing of the North Shore Fibers facility in Libbey Park, Weymouth, which had handled 80 percent of the South Shore's waste paper, the SSRRDP is seeking an interim lease for this purpose at Hanger Two in the South Weymouth Naval Air Base.

Waste paper prices in the last two years have seen dramatic fluctuations—from $40 to $200 per ton. If a transfer station were created at the air station, waste materials could be stored there until prices were more realistic, according to Carol Swete, Solid Waste Planner at the Metropolitan Area Planning Council, which is co-sponsoring the forum.

It's no longer a question of what to give, but which.

Activities Offered at Community Center

South Shore Community Center is offering classes during the winter months.

Computer Kids begins Dec. 12 and is held on Thursdays ($90/member, $95/non-member) and runs for 10 weeks.

Computer for the Novice Re-Entering the Workforce will be offered starting Jan. 8 on Wednesdays from noon to 2 p.m. ($190M/ $199/NM for 10 weeks).

A class in Excel 4.0 is scheduled for Wednesdays beginning Jan. 8 from 6 to 8 p.m. ($95/M, $98/NM for four weeks).

Free Play for children ages 14 months to three years and older is set for Friday, Dec. 13, from 10:35 to noon. The cost is $5 at the door ($1 for second sibling).

Cooking, Science & Nature with Mary Brennock for ages 3-5 and older will start Friday, Jan. 10, running from 9 to 11 a.m. ($88/M, $98/NM for eight weeks).

Joan Reid will teach a Sculpey Clay Holiday Workshop for ages 6 and up Friday, Dec. 13, from 3 to 5:30 p.m. The $20 fee includes materials. Students will make holiday jewelry.

Fitness First Plus (Health & Fitness Center) and South Shore Community Center offer a variety of aerobic and fitness training classes to SSCC members for $69 per month. The fee includes unlimited use of the aerobic program and use of FFP Health & Fitness Center, including personal training. A $50 fee includes admittance to 10 aerobic classes ($5 drop-in rate). Babysitting is available at St. Stephen's Church Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays.

Baby-sitting for Last Minute Shoppers will be offered Dec. 23 from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. in SSCC's nursery school. The cost is $20. Reservations must be made by Dec. 13.

For class details or to register, call the community center at 383-0088.

Fair Will Benefit Food Pantries

Jack Conway's Cohasset sales office will hold its third annual Harvest Fair Sunday, Dec. 8, to benefit Cohasset and Scituate food pantries. The event will take place from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. at Conway's Cohasset office on Route 3A.

Featured will be a bake sale, silent auction of goods and services donated by local businesses and refreshments.

Conway Realtor and Harvest Fair organizer Marge Gorman said, "We hope to surpass the more than $3,000 raised in 1995."

For additional information or to make a donation of a baked good or silent auction item, call Marge Gorman at 383-1800.

Democrats Sponsor Holiday Food Drive

The Cohasset Democratic Town Committee is sponsoring a food drive to benefit the Cohasset Food Pantry and the increasing number of local families who depend on this resource during the holiday season.

"We want to do our part to help out those in need in our community," said Chairwoman Ronnie McMorris. "This will be the ninth year in a row that the Democratic Town Committee has collected canned goods for the food pantry."

The committee will also be collecting canned goods at the Stop & Shop Sunday, Dec. 8, between noon and 2 p.m.

Canned goods will also be accepted at the Committee's Annual Family Christmas Party, Wednesday, Dec. 11, 7 p.m., at the Lighthouse Keeper's Lodge at Government Island. All Cohasset Democrats and Independents are invited to attend.

The Cohasset Food Pantry currently serves about 30 Cohasset families.

Please call the food drive coordinators, Pat Laugelle, 383-1737, or Virginia Najmi, 383-0214, for more information.

Holiday Concert to Benefit Wellspring

First Parish in Cohasset will hold its 18th annual holiday concert Sunday, Dec. 15, at 4 p.m. in the Meeting House on Cohasset Common.

This year the Unicorn Singers will present "A French Christmas," featuring Charpentier's "Midnight Mass for Christmas" for chorus, soloists and organ. The mass is unique among Baroque works for its use of ancient French Christmas tunes as themes for the mass movements. A suite by Cohasset arranger Rich Jensen sets in more contemporary harmonies the same noels. Several familiar French carols for audience participation will complete the program.

Individuals may become patrons for a gift of $40, which includes two tickets. Advance tickets are $5 and may be purchased at the church office. Tickets at the door are $8. For more information, call 383-1100.

This year's concert will benefit Wellspring Multi Services, Inc. in Hull. Wellspring's mission is to help people in need so they may live with dignity and a sense of self-worth. Wellspring provides programs and services which enable people to develop skills and confidence necessary for improving the quality of their lives. Programs include adult education, crisis counseling, battered women's support group and an emergency food pantry.

The organization, which is operated by volunteers, provided services for 270 South Shore families in 1995. It is expected that more families will need assistance this year.

Skippers Fall to Bowl-Bound Pirates

Thanksgiving Day Mutiny

By Jim O'Sullivan
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

On a cold and raw Thanksgiving Day, the Cohasset Skippers were overwhelmed by the powerful and speedy Hull Pirates in a 46-8 loss. This edition of the annual Cohasset-Hull Turkey Day match-up, the first played on Cohasset's Alumni Field, was played in freezing weather on a frosted field before a crowd of 1,500 shivering fans. The Skippers, maligned by injuries, were missing three of their four captains and seven starters. By the end of the game, only 23 of the opening game's roster of 39 stood ready to play. With depleted ranks like these, the Skippers had to work doubly hard to compete.

On the opening drive, Hull marched slowly but steadily down field. Chad Whitman and Matt Belson, who would later leave the game due to injuries, made tackles, along with defensive end Jamie Buick. Linebackers Justin Golden and Adam Sasso made several hits, and Jamie DeMichele, Mike Kearney and Mike Rossi all came up from the secondary to assist on tackles. But the Skipper defense was unable to hold off the fired-up Pirates and Hull struck through the air with an 18-yard TD pass. Matt Littlefield carried in the conversion.

The Skipper offense couldn't get moving, despite good run blocking by the offensive line, including Jarred Batts and Luke Caldwell. The CHS punt team came on and kicked away. On the next play, Hull's Joe Caparotta scampered 77 yards for the touchdown. The two-point conversion increased Hull's lead to 16-0.

The game continued with the Skipper offense stalling and punting away to the Pirates. By the end of the first half, it was 32-0, but the home team was still fighting. With starting quarterback Pat Hurley sidelined with a nasty flu, Ben Ketchum stepped in over center to call the signals for the Skippers. Ketchum, a sophomore, played admirably, facing an intimidating Hull squad.

Kearney played especially well for the Skippers, coming from his defensive back position to make some nice tackles, including one bone-crunching hit which brought a roar from the Skipper faithful. Buick also performed nicely, providing some pressure from his end position. He, too, made a nice tackle, smothering Littlefield from behind on a punt return. Batts, normally an offensive lineman, was called upon to serve as a defender, and delivered, helping to solidify the Cohasset defense towards the end of the game.

Doug Cameron played admirably on special teams, returning a kickoff and downing a punt for the Skippers. Cameron also blocked well from his end spot. Another Skipper who upped his game was Grant Emde, a senior captain who ran the ball well and also played tough defense. Even the icy field couldn't slow down Emde, who sped all over the field.

The Skippers' lone score of the afternoon came in exciting fashion. In the closing minutes, Ketchum reared back and fired a rope to Buick who hauled it in and broke down field. Dodging and breaking through tackles, he cruised into the endzone, completing the 46-yard pass play. On the conversion, Ketchum lateraled to Emde, who tossed a strike to Cameron in the end zone. Despite heavy defensive coverage, Cameron squeezed it and gave Cohasset the extra two points.

After the game, head coach Bob Knurek reflected on the team's loss. "We had three captains – all starters – out with the flu. Ketchum came in on one hour's notice to start at quarterback. He'd had one game's experience and he came in to do a heck of a job."

The Hull game marked the Skippers' last of the season, which they finished at 1-9. The squad looks to be on the rise, however, after a tough first season back in the South Shore League.

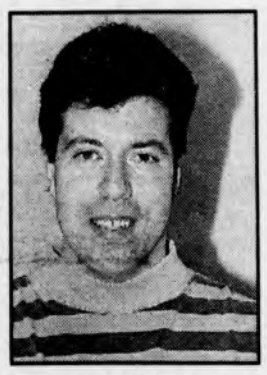
EXTRA POINTS/Joe Reardon

Skippers Are Better Than Thanksgiving Showing

Cohasset had just dropped its annual Thanksgiving Day game to Hull High, its long-time rival, 46-8. The game was the first Turkey day contest on the Skippers' gorgeous new Alumni Field and the first since Cohasset rejoined the South Shore League after six successful seasons playing an Independent schedule.

On this day, the field had patches of ice and mud. The temperature was cold, but tropical compared to a late November football game on Hull High's home field. The rough conditions slowed Hull, but they made life even more difficult for the young, undermanned Cohasset team.

Head coach Bob Knurek knew the Skippers would be in for a taxing campaign against the likes of Super Bowl-bound Hull, much the same way Cohasset had its work cut out for it against Hanover, Abington, Carver and every other team in the SSL. Life is rough when you're the new guy in school. It's that much tougher when you're small, too.



Reardon

So Knurek decided to set realistic goals for the Skippers, a team that was obviously in over its head the first year back.

Instead of judging the squad on its overall record, he broke down the season in such a way where several smaller goals served as building blocks for the future.

First off, he figured the Skippers could come away with three victories. Knurek hoped that Cohasset would win both its non-league games then catch a team on its heals and pull off an upset within the league. The Skippers wound up defeating non-league opponent Holbrook, but wasn't able to pull off the other two goals.

Oh yes, there was one other goal Knurek had for his squad. This was the one that will be written down and posted on the team room wall. The one teams swear by, no matter what the sport. Knurek didn't want any team walking off the field feeling as though they hadn't played a football game. If Cohasset was going to go down, its opponents would have to work for the W. Parcells lives by it and Knurek wants to see more of it.

"Our goal was to make the other team play four quarters," Knurek said. "We did that a couple of times."

The only reason Cohasset wasn't able to do it more was its size in relation to its competition. The Skippers belong more in a Division 5 or 6 league than Division 4. This year they were way over their heads and they knew it.

But there's absolutely no question the football program is headed in the right direction. Just ask Hull head coach John Anderson. He's probably relieved the Pirates are playing Bishop Fenwick in the Division 4B Super Bowl on Saturday instead of going against Cohasset. Anderson's a football guy and he absolutely didn't want to take on Knurek's squad last Thursday.

Anderson knows the game better than any of us think we do. He saw something about the Cohasset team to worry about. Doesn't that tell you something right there? The Skippers may not be there now, but their destination is a good one.

EXTRA POINTS

You can ask around the league, too. Abington and Carver both had to battle their way back from first-quarter defecits and solid second quarters to gain leads over Cohasset. Depth, size and experience won out in the end, but all three are aspects of a good team that can be improved.

"There were games we played a solid half," Knurek said.

The changes are already in place. The Skippers didn't have a seventh- and eighth-grade team. They have one now, with Torin Sweeney at the helm. Players are going to be developing and learning the fundamentals at a younger age and then move up to the freshman squad.

"With the three teams together we can have 40 kids playing every week," Knurek said.

Knurek admitted there were some real low times during the season. Losing is tough and after the fifth or sixth week he could sense it was wearing on the team. But that feeling was inevitable. The kids have to take a look at the overall picture to appreciate what's in store for the future.

However, they could take one particular play from last Thursday's game and use it as a motivational tool.

Cohasset was forced to punt on its first possession in the fourth quarter. As the ball came down it took a hop, forcing Hull's Matt Littlefield to give chase.

The Skippers' Jamie Buick saw what was happening and cut across the field, never giving up on the play. Just as Littlefield picked up the ball, Buick paved him so hard, Littlefield didn't have so much as have a chance to turn upfield.

That was Cohasset's play of the game, bar none. You'll be seeing more like that in the future.

COLLEGE FINANCING 101

Each year thousands of college students are forced to drop out.

The problem is not with their academic standing, it is their financial status. The Massachusetts Army National Guard has over $21,000 available to each student who qualifies. With the Montgomery G.I. Bill and 100% Tuition Waiver, students can concentrate on grades, not bills. The Tuition Waiver is good at 28 participating state colleges, community colleges and universities.

All it takes is about two days a month and two weeks a year. Serving your country and community today can help build a better tomorrow.

Kick-A-Thon to Benefit New Foundation

A kung fu Kick-A-Thon event will be held Friday, Dec. 13, at Jade Forest Kung Fu/Tai Chi in Cohasset. Students and staff member participants will range in age from 6 to – well, quite a bit older. Proceeds from the Kick-A-Thon will be donated to Project Action Foundation, Inc., a non-profit corporation which provides scholarships in dance, gymnastics and martial arts to underprivileged children and youngsters "at risk." As a Project Action sponsor studio, Jade Forest supports the foundation's goal of providing such youngsters the opportunity to benefit from positive role models, peer support, and self esteem in a healthy, secure and supportive environment.

During the Kick-A-Thon, students of all ages and levels of skill will execute basic martial arts kicks as well as some of the more difficult and advanced kicking techniques of kung fu. Scott Jeffery, assistant head instructor at Jade Forest and a nationally rated competitor on the tournament circuit, will kick off the event, beginning at 5:30 p.m. All students participating will have collected donations from sponsors for 100 kicks they will perform. Additional donations can also be made by members of the public wishing to lend their support at this exciting event.

For further information about this event, or to learn more about the programs at Jade Forest, call John Loupos at 617-383-6822.

Ford's Hoop Clinic On Tap

The Cohasset Recreation Department, in conjunction with the Cohasset Basketball Boosters Club will offer Cohasset High basketball coach Ron Ford's Holiday Vacation Basketball Shooting Clinic for girls and boys, grades 4-8. The 1996 clinic will be held at Cohasset High School's Sullivan Gym, starting Thursday, Dec. 26 to Saturday, Dec. 28, from 9 a.m. to noon each day.

The three-day clinic, directed by Ford, will focus on the development of fundamental offensive skills, designed specifically for grade 4-8 players. Students will receive instruction in ball handling, shooting, balancing, positioning skills, etc., helping make participants better offensive players.

To register, complete registration forms that were handed out at basketball registration, or pick up a registration form at the recreation office, first floor, town hall, and return it to the recreation department as soon as possible as space is limited.

The fee for this unique opportunity is $60 per participant, which includes a clinic T-shirt. Checks should be made payable to Cohasset Basketball Boosters Club. This is the fifth year the Winter Shooting Clinic has been offered through the sponsorships of the Good Sport Sporting Goods Store, Route 3A, Cohasset, the Basketball Boosters Club and the recreation department.

Ski Lessons Set

The Cohasset Recreation Department has a limited number of openings for ski lessons, which begin Thursday, Jan. 2, at Blue Hills. Lessons consist of five 1-3/4 hour classes, available to youngsters age 7 to 18 for all levels of instruction, from novice to advanced.

The fee for bus transportation for five weeks and five lessons is $100 per participant. Rental of equipment is available and costs $45 for the five weeks.

Should you be interested in registering please call the Cohasset Recreation Office at 383-6791, right away.

Cranwell To Host 1997 Bay State Winter Games

The Bay State Games announced today that Cranwell Resort in Lenox will host the Bay State Winter Games cross-country skiing competition Jan. 26.

Cross country competition features a 5K and 10K freestyle race for all ages with divisions grouped by age. A 1K Lollipop race is also available for skiers 5 to 9 years old. Bay State Winter Games cross-country skiing registration material will be available Dec. 2.

The 12th annual event will feature competition in figure skating at Williams College (Williamstown), alpine skiing at Jiminy Peak (Hancock), masters ice hockey at North Adam State College's Vietnam Veterans Memorial Skating Rink (North Adams) and cross country skiing at Cranwell (Lenox).

The games' highly acclaimed figure skating exhibition, The Bay State Skate, will take place Saturday night, Jan. 25. The show features national and regional figure skating champions from Massachusetts.

Registration is now open for figure skating. Alpine and cross-country skiing registration material will be available Dec. 2.

The Bay State Winter Games are sponsored by the Massachusetts State Legislature, NYNEX Yellow Pages, Massachusetts Department of Public Health, Princeton Review and the Northern Berkshire Chamber of Commerce.

The Bay State Winter Games are a project of the Massachusetts Amateur Sports Foundation. The Massachusetts Amateur Sports Foundation also organizes the Bay State Summer Games, special educational programs and other competitions throughout the year. What Christmas And Hanukkah Mean To Me

From Kindergartners in Mrs. Price's Classes

I like listening to Christmas songs. Jingle Bells is my favorite.

— Alicia Asnault

Christmas is special and fun and I like to play with my friends.

— Emma Astley

Christmas means putting decorations on the tree.

— Adam Berger

I like to eat at Christmas dinner.

— Samuel Bilbo

We do our Christmas cards. The Christmas tree, the decorations, the snow and going under the Christmas tree. My dog goes out in the snow with my Daddy. Santa Claus comes down the chimney and I hear him.

— Kelsey Coughlin

I get a lot of toys and get to eat junk food on Hanukkah.

— Glen Friedman

I love Santa, I love the snow and I love sledding.

— Joseph Giardina

I like smelling the sweet smells of cakes and cookies and candies on Christmas.

— Margarte Goodwin

Christmas means trying to be good for Santa.

— Rudy Helbock

I feel happy, because I like the snow, and Santa and his elves. I also like the Christmas wrapping paper. I feel happy waking up in the morning.

— Alexander Livingstone

Christmas means I celebrate my birthday and my grandmother's birthday.

— Rachel McMorris

Christmas is special because I like to sled.

— Conor Ofsthun

I like the Christmas dinner because I get to light the candles with Mom's help.

— Katelyn Ryan

I went out and played in the snow with my Momma and Bridget on Christmas.

— Alyssa Schlager

I paint on my Dad's trailer because we are going to a farm. We are going to play in the snow. My Dad has pictures of last Christmas. I sat on a chair with my cat (not a real one). My Mom took a picture. I like the presents. I visit my Nana.

— Stephanie Sestito

Christmas means that we wear Santa Claus hats. I moved to a new house at my Nana's.

— Nicholas Silvia

Christmas is fun because it is a good holiday. We are going to Toronto to celebrate because they don't have Thanksgiving. Very fun.

— John Sturino

I like to go in the snow and build snowmen. I like to pick out our Christmas tree and decorate it.

— Jennifer Cahill

At Christmas I like to bake gingerbread men, and play in the snow and eat it. Sometimes I make angels.

— Sarah Coggins

At Christmas we have dinner with my grandparents. My Mom's sister got married and they will come.. I like waiting in bed for an hour until we can go down... Sometimes we play games... Last year there was frozen ice on the driveway and we played hockey. It was fun.

— Ryan Daly

I sing Jingle Bells all the time at Christmas. I go singing at people's doors and sometimes they let us in and give us hot cocoa.

— Jessica Dupre

Sometimes I like to go to my grandparents house for Christmas. Their little dog's name is Angie.

— John Emanuello

I like the snow. I like to go sledding with my mother, sister and brother. I like to put decorations on the Christmas tree with my family.

— Krystin Fiore

I like to see nice people and be with them on Christmas.

— Michael Froio

I like having snowfights and going on a sled at Christmas time.

— Kevin Jacobs

My grandmother comes from Ireland for Christmas. My mother makes all the food. I give candy to Santa. I like to go skiing with my aunts, uncles and my Mom and Dad. I get hot cocoa afterwards.

— Aisling Kearns

I like to go to people's houses at Christmas. I like to go to my aunt's and play tag. I like when it snows.

— Owen Landon

I like to get my Christmas tree with my Dad. I like to play with the ornaments on the tree. I made a special star at nursery school.

— Lauren Mack

I like to go with my cousins to my Gramma's house. We have to drive there. After my birthday, we go get the Christmas tree. The whole family gets the tree.

— Margaret McGoldrick

I like to pick out the Christmas tree with Peter and Daddy. I like when my Pa, aunts, uncles and friends come for Christmas. I like to light the candles in the windows at night and decorate the tree.

— John McKenna

I like the Christmas tree. I help to decorate it. Do you come with flying snow deers? I have brothers named Rob, Jonathan and Craig.

— Wesley Medwid

I like to run downstairs and wake my parents up on Christmas morning, but they like to sleep later. I like it when it snows and Christina buries me in the snow. My Noona and NoNo come over and bring my giblets, they are my favorite food.

— Alessandra Sadler

My favorite thing about Christmas is the dinner... chicken and lasagna. I like picking out my Christmas tree in the field. I like to have snowfights on Christmas day.

— Ivan Sceery

I like the Christmas tree. It was so beautiful. Mom bought candy canes. I pick them off the tree. I love when my Mom says Happy Birthday to Daniel.

— John Smoot

I like to go sledding with my family. I like my Mom's cranberry pie. Sometimes very special people come for dinner like my grandmother and grandfather. It is fun when my whole family goes to get the Christma tree. We play tag while the tree gets put on the roof of our car.

— Wesley Ulmer

I sing Jingle Bells all the time at Christmas. I go singing at people's doors and sometimes they let us in and give us hot cocoa.

— Jessica Dupre

I like when my Dad's father comes for Christmas. He was a pilot in World War II. I like to go sledding and I hope to build an igloo with my Dad when it snows. I like to wake my mother, father and sister up on Christmas morning.

— Jonathan Wade

Buy Wreaths to Support METCO

The Cohasset METCO Committee has embarked on a fund raiser this year. The group will be selling 22-inch double-faced balsam Christmas wreaths, supplied by growers who furnish fashionable nurseries. The cost is $8.

A limited number of "kissing balls" will also be sold, and both items will be available for pick-up at Cohasset High School Saturday, Dec. 7. Decorative handmade bows will also be available.

Watch for order forms in the school menus or call METCO coordinators Connie Afshar (383-6006) or Jean Hajjar (383-9917) to place an order.

Holiday Dance for Teens

The Teen Center will sponsor a holiday dance at the Community Center Friday, Dec. 13, from 7:30 to 10 p.m. for seventh- and eighth-graders. Admission is $5.

There will be music, dance contests and karaoke.

Multicultural Cookbooks for Sale

The Cohasset PSO Diversity Committee is selling multicultural cookbook this holiday season. The cookbook, which costs $8.95, contains recipes for cooking up an international feast and makes a good gift for family members and friends.

The cookbooks will be available at Cohasset Village Fair Dec. 7 or may be special ordered by calling Catherine Davis at 383-2570.

PSO Teams Up with Learning Express

Learning Express in Hingham is assisting Cohasset PSO with its holiday fund raiser.

On Monday, Dec. 9, from 6 to 8 p.m., Learning Express will donate 20 percent of purchases made to Cohasset PSO. The shop offers an interesting variety of quality toys. All are welcome to participate in helping raise funds for Cohasset schools.

Poker Night at Teen Center

Poker Night at the Teen Center is Friday, Dec. 6. There will be craps, 5-card stud and 21. No money is needed, and students play for fun and prizes.

Poker begins at 7 p.m. and end at 10 p.m. Pizza, soda and snacks will be provided.

The center will be open Saturday, Dec. 7, from 7 to 10 p.m.

DRUG FACTS

"The passage of Proposition 215 in California Nov. 5, 1996, was in direct violation of federal law. What we are not clear on is whether we are going to enforce the federal law . . . . If you think that the problem of drug use is its illegality, you are missing the point that the real problem of drugs is that they destroy you physically, mentally and morally. . . . Forty-seven percent of American families have a member who is involved in drug addictive behavior. . . . 20,000 youngsters have died from illegal drugs during the last year. . . ."

— The Clinton Administration's National Drug Policy Director Barry McCaffrey speaking at the Kennedy Political Union at American University in Washington, D.C. Nov. 13.

PERSONAL FINANCE

Booting up your financial adviser

By the editors of
WORTH MAGAZINE

Until now, personal financial software has offered little more than bookkeeping. For example, Intuit's Quicken, with 8 million users the most popular application software ever sold at retail, keeps records on mutual funds and balances your checkbook. The product has an extremely loyal following, but there has always been some question whether such programs are really worth the data-entry work they entail.

YOUR MONEY'S WORTH

"People who use checkbook programs like Quicken for household expenses are detail freaks — they'll write a check at the grocery store and then go home and rebalance their checkbooks again on a computer," says Dave McClure, who advises CPAs on accounting software.

Among programs that take on more-complex tasks, Andrew Tobias's Managing Your Money (from MECA Software) has long been a top-rated best-seller. It too can balance a checkbook, but it also assists in financial planning, helping to calculate how much must be saved monthly to pay for a child's college education, or how large a mortgage a home buyer can handle. What Managing Your Money can't do is generate an overall financial plan from the answers it provides to various personal finance questions put to it by the user.

Intuit recently jumped into that gap with Quicken Financial Planner, a major advance in personal-finance software. While this program won't replace the judgment and flexibility of a skilled financial adviser, it is a true financial-planning tool.

It's also extremely easy to operate. Users enter data about income and expenses, loans and assets, and projected retirement savings in 10 stages, each involving a series of questions. Assistance can be called up by clicking on the help icon, and the well-known financial journalist Jane Bryant Quinn offers still more detail on topics such as investing, borrowing, and credit card debt.

The program uses your answers to create reports on your income, expenses, cash flow, investment portfolio, and net worth. QFP demonstrates in detail where you will be spending your money, how your investment portfolio will grow, and what your estate will be worth.

QFP also lets you, in a sense, enter your future into the projections. If your spouse plans to quit working from 2001 to 2005, you can see how it will affect cash flows and retirement savings year by year. Similarly, if you expect your children to attend college from 2008 to 2014, you can assess the impact on your budget. Using the program's "special expense" calculator, you can also plan to buy, say, a new bedroom set in 2000 or pay for a bar mitzvah in 2006.

The program does have some limitations. "If you could love and hate something at the same time, this is it," says David Drucker, a financial planner at Malgoire Drucker in Bethesda, Md., who examined the program at our request.

"It's about as smart as a bad financial planner," says Drucker. Someone who didn't know a 401(k) from a profit-sharing plan and who relied on QFP to run his or her financial life could be in for trouble.

"My clients often put the wrong numbers in the wrong boxes when filling out a questionnaire for me," says Drucker. "And if they do it with these software packages, they'll get wrong answers." The program can occasionally become confusing, as in the section requesting data on employer contributions to 401(k) and other tax-deferred retirement plans. Quicken says the software will be updated annually to keep up with tax-law changes and in response to user comments.

Another problem is that the program doesn't address every possible financial situation. For instance, federal laws give retirees a choice about how to take distributions from an IRA or pension plan, which can affect tax liability and cash flow. QFP uses what's known as the "term-certain method" of distributing those assets, but many retirees are better off using a "recalculation method" to take retirement distributions. The program, however, doesn't offer this option.

"A 65-year-old who uses this package could do himself a disservice," says Drucker. Intuit concedes that the program doesn't focus on retirees and was developed with an eye toward providing easy financial planning for baby boomers.

One last criticism is that the software can't be creative on your behalf. In my case, the program withdrew $56,000 from my wife's tax-deferred retirement fund in 2011 and another $31,000 in 2012 to pay for our kids' college tuition. But by then I'll be just three years away from retirement, and instead of paying a 20 percent penalty on withdrawals from the retirement fund, we'd be much better off borrowing money from my 401(k) plan, paying the interest on the loan (which is much lower than the penalty), and repaying the loan when I hit 59-1/2 and can make withdrawals penalty-free.

These are relatively minor criticisms. QFP brings us a long step closer to the day when we'll all be our own best financial planners. At a suggested retail price of $39.95, this program is a great investment. QFP requires Windows 3.1, 4 MB of RAM, and 16 MB of available hard-disk space. The CD-ROM version requires at least a 486-based PC with a sound card and speakers, running Windows 3.1 with 8 MB of RAM and 16 MB of available hard-disk space.

With the release of QFP, Quicken has simultaneously published the Parents' Guide to Money CD-ROM (requires Windows 3.1, 4 MB of RAM, 3 MB of available hard-disk space, and a 16-byte sound card and speakers; retail price, $29.95), a "fast and easy" way for parents and those expecting to become parents to "take control of the financial challenges of parenting."

Guide is a much less ambitious tool than QFP. It isn't powerful enough to generate budget projections of special expenses — summer camp, the cost of a new bedroom set — or the changes in college savings schedules required by, say, one spouse quitting work to remain home with the kids for five years.

Basically a talking book, Guide features video clips of parents and financial advisers talking about child care, life and health insurance, and college costs. The financial-planning portion of the product consists of 10 worksheets on which users inscribe their monthly budgets, insurance policies, and child care costs.

Some limitations notwithstanding (it lacks a serious retirement planning aid, for example), Guide can be of real help to people who want to identify and quantify the fundamental fiscal impact of having children. It will be particularly useful for young couples just starting out.

Correction

Due to incorrect information supplied to Community Newspaper Company, a story that ran the week of Nov. 17-23 concerning protection of Social Security benefits contained last year's earnings figures. The correct figures: if you retire between ages 62 and 64 and earn more than $8,280 a year, the government will start taking money from your check. Your Social Security checks will vanish if you earn more than $24,840. For ages 65-69, the figures are $12,500 and $50,009.

FIDELITY IS GROWTH FUNDS

The number of funds within the equity fund rating universe tracked by Morningstar as of 9/30/96 was 1,708, 1,018, and 557 on a 3-, 5-, and 10-year basis, respectively. Morningstar equity fund universe included domestic stock funds (which included, but were not limited to, growth, growth and income, and equity-income objectives), international stock funds, and specialty funds. There is a minimum 3-year performance requirement before a fund is rated.

But here are the real reasons we're the leading mutual fund company.

With over $450 billion in assets under management, no other investment management company can match our knowledge, expertise, and resources. Our simple, but powerful, philosophy is to manage your investments:

Stock by stock.
Visiting over 6,000 companies, talking to CEOs, kicking tires, testing firsthand projections and product development plans are what we do best.

Analyst by analyst.
Over 300 analysts cover industries and companies with a depth that no other firm can offer.

Year by year.
For over 50 years we have played a leading role in bringing the benefits of professional money management to investors.

No one can promise that tomorrow's performance will be as good as yesterday's and you may have a gain or loss when you sell your shares. But at Fidelity, we are always investing in your future–stock by stock, analyst by analyst, year by year. Because we believe our knowledge can be your wealth.

Brian D. Bixby

Bixby Joins Burns & Levinson

Boston attorney Brian D. Bixby, a resident of Cohasset, along with several other lawyers from Cuddy Bixby, moved their practice to the Boston law firm of Burns & Levinson LLP. Bixby, one of Boston's well-known attorneys in estate planning and probate court litigation, joined the firm as a partner.

Bixby is a fellow of the American College of Trust and Estate Counsel and holds a J.D. degree from Northeastern University School of Law and an AB from Brown University.

Burns & Levinson will maintain the Wellesley office formerly occupied by Cuddy Bixby and continue to operate its office on the South Shore.

Bixby and his wife, Christine, reside in Cohasset with their two children, Benjamin and Meredith.

Village Produce Market to Close

After only a month, Ceres Market in the village is going out of business.

Co-owner Barbara St. Onge said she and her husband David "misjudged the village" and were losing thousands of dollars each week.

Ceres specialized in produce and specialty food items.

"Morally it was really difficult to throw out the produce — there was not market for it," St. Onge said.

She explained that she and her husband didn't have the deep pockets to wait it out and see if business picked up.

"We think it was a bad location. The Fruit Center in Hingham does well. The location was a mistake."

St. Onge, a Cohasset resident, said parking was a concern.

"The lack of parking is bad for our type of business," she said.

St. Onge said she hoped that people visiting the health club or community center would come in and buy their vegetables but "that didn't happen."

She speculated that a catering business or professional office can succeed because they don't rely on foot traffic.

Former owners of Brewed Awakenings, a popular Hingham Square coffee and snack restaurant, the St. Onges will sell the building and the equipment in their Cohasset store.

"It was our lifelong dream but we misjudged the village," St. Onge said.

On their future plans, she said: "We're probably going to go back to working for other people for a while."

Robert P. Magner, Jr.

Magner Appointed VP of Insurance Agency

Robert P. Magner Jr. has been appointed vice president of William J. Cleary Insurance Inc.'s property and casualty insurance agency. He will open a Cohasset office for the firm and manage their agency acquisition program.

Magner previously served as vice president of Mahoney & Wright Insurance Agency, running their Cohasset office and providing in-house training for the firm.

Magner is an active member of the Children's Hospital volunteer staff, where he has donated more than 1,600 hours of his time. He is a 1991 graduate of Providence College and holds a bachelor of science degree in business administration.

Bernstein Appointed Bankruptcy Judge

Stan Bernstein of Cohasset, a partner of Foley, Hoag & Eliot LLP, Boston, has been appointed by the Curt of Appeals for the Second Circuit to serve a 14-year term as a United States bankruptcy judge for the eastern district of New York. His initial assignment will be to the court in Westbury, Long Island.

While at Foley, Hoag & Eliot, Bernstein chaired the firm's insolvency practice and served as a member of the Clients' Security Board by appointment from the Supreme Judicial Court.

NOTICE

A petition has been presented in the above-captioned matter praying that the last will and codicil of said decedent be proved and allowed and that MARTHA J. E. SMITH of COHASSET in the County of NORFOLK and JAMES R. NICHOLS of WESTON in the County of MIDDLESEX be appointed executors named in the will without surety on the bond.

If you desire to object to the allowance of said petition, you or your attorney should file a written appearance in said Court at Dedham on or before 10:00 in the forenoon on January 8, 1997.

In addition you should file a written statement of objections to the petition, giving the specific grounds therefore, within thirty (30) days after the return day (or such other time as the Court, on motion with notice to the petitioner, may allow) in accordance with Probate Rule 16A.

Witness, David H. Kopelman, Esquire, First Justice of said Court at Dedham, this twenty-sixth day of November, one thousand nine hundred and ninety-six.

Village Fair on Saturday is Ecumenical Event

By Fr. John Maheras
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Once again this year, as they have done for more than 55 years, the Religious Community of Cohasset is sponsoring the Cohasset Village Fair from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m., Saturday, Dec. 7, on the Common. The religious community is comprised of: Beechwood Congregational Church, First Parish Unitarian-Universalist, Nativity of the Virgin Mary Greek Orthodox Church, St. Anthony Church, St. Stephen's Episcopal Church and Second Congregational Church and the Vedanta Centre.

Those on the Common, along with the Greek Orthodox Church of West Corner have united their efforts in a gesture of ecumenical respect and regard in co-sponsoring the Cohasset Village Fair.

It is one of the few areas of ecumenical relations where esteem and affection for each other contributes to close working relationship for the Village Fair. This working together points out the cohesiveness of the religious community but also highlights the efforts to promote and project Cohasset as a place where religious diversity is to be found without obstructing one another.

First Parish will be offering a Swedish Coffee House, Christmas Trees (Preorders only at 383-9845), and a Jumble Sale in their Parish House. The Christmas Trees are freshly cut Balsam Vermont Trees. Your choice of any size, 5-9 feet and width of thin, fat or full. Any size tree is $35. They are taking only preorders so people can order what they want. Tree pick-up is on the day of the Fair at the Parish House.

Nativity of the Virgin Mary Greek Orthodox Church will be offering along with Greek Pastries, a Christmas Boutique for that special gift, Christmas Wreaths for office and home, as well as other items all in the Cohasset Town Hall.

St. Stephen's Episcopal Church will present books some of which you never did buy, Baked Goods for Christmas, Greens for the home for the season, and Coffee in Roger's Hall of their Church on the hill.

Second Congregational Church w[illegible] have along with their Bake Table, t[illegible] well known Chowder and a Boutiq[illegible] Appalachia will have Santa Claus arriving at 11 a.m. for the children. Face painting and ornaments the children can make will go along with the hot chocolate they are offering.

All are cordially invited to join in the fun and celebrations as the Town of Cohasset, through its religious community, ushers in the Christmas Season.

VILLAGE FAIR HAPPENINGS

Santa Claus is Coming to Town

The Cohasset/Appalachia Service Project has invited Santa Claus to Cohasset's Village Fair Saturday, Dec. 7. He's due to arrive at the Common by Fire Engine escort around 11 a.m. Drop by and visit with Santa until 2 p.m. To raise funds for their summer work project, C/ASP will offer to take a picture with Santa and put it in a folder ($3) or in a button or tree ornament ($4). While you're waiting in line, there will be coffee, hot chocolate and donuts for sale on the Common. The group is also sponsoring Face Painting and a Children's Ornament Making Workshop up at St. Stephen's Church.

All proceeds will benefit the Cohasset/Appalachia Service Project. Under the direction of the Rev. Gary Ritts, 84 volunteers made up of high school and college students and adults will travel to Appalachia for a week this summer to repair and upgrade housing for needy families. The students work all year to raise nearly $40,000 for their materials, transportation and room and board.

Don't Miss the Fair Fun

Unique Christmas gifts and holiday decorations, sweets, baked goods and chowder by the bowl or the quart will be offered at the Second Congregational Church, 43 Highland Ave., at Saturday's Cohasset Village Fair.

On Saturday, Dec. 7, festivities begin at 10 a.m. and continue until 2 p.m. There will be something for everyone.

Look for Santa's arrival at 11 a.m., and visit him as he sits in his sleigh on the Common (sponsored by Cohasset/Appalachia Service Project).

Book Sale at Village Fair

One of the features of the Village Fair, coming on Saturday, Dec. 7, is the Book Sale held in Walton Rodgers Hall at St. Stephen's Church, beginning at 10 a.m. and continuing until 3 p.m. Book bargains in great variety are available, including craft and cook books, children's books, sheet music, songs books, as well as CDs and tapes.

There will be a silent auction of several choice books, the bids to be opened at the close of the sale. Browsers can enjoy a cup of coffee while listening to Blanche Thompson, pianist, play show tunes in the festively decorated hall.

This book sale in the church's centennial year will benefit its Outreach Program, including Habitat for Humanity, Quincy Crisis Center, and Wellspring, among many other good causes.

Buy Christmas Trees at First Parish

First Parish in Cohasset is selling Christmas trees. On sale will be fresh-cut Vermont balsam trees, ranging from five to nine feet tall, with widths of thin, wide or full. Any size tree is $35.

Extra trees are being ordered to enable individuals to choose their own trees. Preorders are being accepted, and trees will be available for pick-up Saturday, Dec. 7, the day of the Village fair, at the church, located at 23 North Main St.

To order a tree, call Jodee Doyle at 383-9845.

Septic Program has Critics

Some Want to Opt Out

By Charlene Vandini
COHASSET MARINER

While the board of health was trying to discuss a management plan to identify and upgrade problem septic systems, residents who attended Tuesday's hearing said they don't want the plan.

Local cable television personality Wigmore Pierson led the crusade against the program, engaging in a sometimes heated exchange with the health board members. Pierson disputed the need to develop this management plan in time for the spring town meeting, and charged that the health board and its consultants are not incorporating public comments into the plan.

The chairmen of the health board

Doyon gets Abington Post

By David Wolcott
COHASSET MARINER

Cohasset Town Administrator Greg Doyon was unanimously chosen Monday by Abington selectmen as that town's new executive secretary.

Doyon, who has been with Cohasset for eight years, has worked in town government for 20 years. He started as administrative assistant to the town manager in Brunswick, Maine before moving on to various municipal positions in Hopkington, Hanover and finally Cohasset.

Doyon's salary is under negotiation, but will be in the 49,000 to $55,000 range, Doyon said Tuesday.

His Cohasset salary is $56,000.

He takes over from Richard LaFond, who left for a similar position in Carver this fall when he would not meet a controversial Abington town charter bylaw that mandates the executive secretary move to the town within one year of being hired.

Doyon, who lives in Hingham, said he would not have a problem meeting the bylaw and moving his wife Diane and their 1 1/2-year-old son Christopher to Abington.

"Abington is a fine community," said Doyon. "I think that my experience can be an asset in many ways to the town and I welcome the opportunity to serve."

Board members were in agreement that Doyon established himself as the top candidate for the position.

Chairman Roger Woods said Doyon has obvious experience "in areas that are pertinent to the town" including a "thorough financial background."

Selectman Kevin Donovan said he was impressed with Doyan's financial background also, pointing out that he had served as the town accountant and town administrator for a stretch of more than six years in Hanover.

Pay as Throw Program to Start in Spring

Will Save Money, Officials Say

By Mary Ford
COHASSET MARINER

To encourage more recycling, selectmen decided to start a "Pay as You Throw" household rubbish program in town.

In the spring, residents will be asked to buy special see-through plastic bags marked with the town seal for trash disposal. The new program will take the place of the dump stickers, selectmen said.

So instead of paying $65 for a sticker for the Recycling Transfer Facility (RTF), residents will pay $1 per bag for a 33 gallon size or 70 cents for a 20 gallon size, Selectmen Chairman Merle Brown said.

The bags will be available at the RTF, DPW garage, town hall and some stores around town.

Brown, who sits on the recycling committee, said the town could save nearly $15,000 by reducing the tonnage of trash sent to SEMASS in Rochester, Mass. by 10 percent, not including the savings in reduction of hauling fees.

The recycling committee estimates that with increased recycling, an average household would use one, 33-gallon size bag a week for trash. With 2,216 households that would bring in $115,232. Subtracting the cost of the bags, the total income would be $109,470.

In 1995, the health board sold 2,216 RTF permits for $65 each (or $35 for a single person) for a total income of $109,316.

Brown said Monday to ensure that use of the RTF is limited to residents or local businesses, a sticker would still

Cohasset's Week

Open House to Review Greenbush Plans Tonight

The MBTA will hold an open house for review of Greenbush Line plans at Cohasset, Dec. 12, Town Hall, from 7 to 9 p.m.

The open houses will give residents an opportunity to review plans regarding the restoration of passenger service on the Greenbush Line.

Project staff will be in attendance to answer questions about the environmental components of the project. The staff will be seeking comments and input on the basic layout and design of the project, in order for the MBTA to be aware of community concerns when designing the mitigation plan, which will be presented to town mitigation officials in January.

Anyone with questions about any of the public meetings may contact Andrew Brennan, MBTA manager of environmental affairs, at (617) 222-3126.

Town Election is May 3

Selectmen have set the town election for 8 a.m. to 6 p.m., Saturday, May 3. Under a town by-law passed in 1995, selectmen have the right to schedule the election within 35 days following town meeting. In the spring, selectmen expect a debt exclusion override for the sewer project and an operating budget override to be on the ballot.

Extending the time between the election and town meeting will allow more time to prepare the overrides, Town Clerk Marion Douglas said, and eliminate the need for separate override elections. Town meeting is March 29. Under the old by-law, the town election was held on the Saturday following town meeting.

Street Light for Crosswalk

The crosswalk by the Paul Pratt Memorial Library will soon be illuminated by a street light, selectmen said. They approved the request at their meeting Monday and will ask Eastern Edison to install the light. The town pays for the electricity costs, selectmen said. There is a street light by the entrance to the library's circular driveway but none near the crosswalk.

Skating on Duck Pond

At the request of Selectman Nan Roth, the fire chief will flood the duck pond on the common as needed this winter to add a smooth layer to ice to facilitate outdoor skating there.

Fire Chief Roger Lincoln said he would use low water pressure so the ice won't be bumpy.

Roth noted that skating on the pond adds to the ambiance of the common in winter.

"It couldn't be more picturesque," she said.

Selectmen to Meet Dec. 17

Selectmen will meet at 7:30 p.m., Tuesday, Dec. 17 rather than on Monday. Selectman Peter Pratt asked that the meeting be moved to allow selectmen to attend the public meeting on the central Cohasset sewer project at 7:30 p.m., Dec. 16.

Policy on Priority Sanding

Selectmen plan to look into a policy for prioritizing tricky road areas that need sanding. They said Monday that a citizen wrote them and said a sheet of ice caused a Nov. 27 accident on the lower end of Pond Street. The citizen complained that sanding was not done quickly enough.

Selectmen will listen to a tape of the citizen's call that came into the dispatch center at the police department reporting the icy area. They will also examine ways to ensure that sanders get out before rush hour. Selectman Michael Sullivan suggested they ask police officers on the night shift to check out slippery areas and then notify DPW Supt. Harold Litchfield.

Pratt Attends School Aid Meeting

Selectman Peter Pratt reported he went to a Dec. 5 meeting in Sandwich on changing the way state Education Aid (Chapter 70) is allocated among Massachusetts cities and towns. The forum was sponsored by the Massachusetts League of Women Voters.

Pratt said along with Cohasset, 155 other cities and towns would benefit from the MLWV project.

"It would be a better formula for towns like ours," he said.

Under the MLWV formula no town would get less than it currently does however some would not get as much of an increase.

The MLWV estimates Cohasset would receive $220,000 more in FY'98 under the new formula.

Pratt said he came from the second furthest distance to the meeting. There was a representative there from Carlisle, he said.

Used Dump Truck is Sought

Cohasset will try to take a 1988 Ford dump truck off the Massachusetts Highway Department's hands, Selectmen Chairman Merle Brown said this week.

"We are always in need of another truck for difference jobs," Brown said in a letter to the MHD.

The truck, which has 44,000 miles, needs a new engine, Brown said. He noted the town could get the truck for $1.

Replacing the engine and repairs could cost about $5,000.

Selectman Michael Sullivan was particularly enthusiastic about the prospect.

"We can get a truck with 44,000 miles for nothing?" he asked.

Selectmen noted that if repairs are too expensive, the truck can be used for parts.

Ambulance Billing Update

In November the fire department billed for 20 ambulance transports for a total of $6,751.96. So far this fiscal year, the town has collected $51,379.69 out of a possible $58,372.75. Payments collected are applied to invoices from all previous years as well as the current year.

Concrete Apron Approved

Selectmen approved spending $3,500 for a grooved, concrete pad for the new refueling tanks at the D.P.W. garage site. The pad will contain small gasoline spills of up to 10 gallons, selectmen said.

Fire Chief Roger Lincoln said the concrete spill pad is not required by law but is a good thing to have because asphalt will deteriorate when gas is spilled on it.

Ten Minutes for Walk-ins

Selectmen set aside 10 minutes at 8 p.m. on their meeting nights to address any concerns from members of the public who have issues that are not on the agenda.

If the matter cannot be handled briefly, it will be placed on a future agenda, selectmen said.

Corrections are Noted

A business item in last week's Cohasset Mariner should have said that Robert P. Magner Jr., vice president of William J. Cleary Insurance Inc.'s property and casualty insurance agency, is a 1981 graduate of Providence College. Due to a typesetting error, the Mariner reported that Mr. Magner graduated in 1991.

In the photo spread on page 11 in last week's Cohasset Mariner, one of the photo captions should have said Nicki Berens. Due to a photographer's error, Miss Berens was identified as Nicki Barnes.

MBTA Won't Pursue Village Station

While Cohasset selectmen and the planning board continue to clash over where the Greenbush railroad station will be and which board has the authority to decide, MBTA officials say they are moving ahead with their original station site plan.

MBTA Manager of Environmental Affairs Andrew Brennan said this week that based on the selectmen's vote supporting a rail station located on Route 3A near the former Winter Gardens Skating Rink, the T will no longer pursue building a Cohasset Village Station.

"The only station site the T will pursue is the Route 3A site," Brennan said.

Brennan said the MBTA took a look at the village site when interest was raised within the town to relocate the station and boost business in the down town area.

But recent opposition tallied in a non-binding "straw vot"e followed by the selectmen's unanimous vote in support of the Route 3A option has convinced Brennan that a village station, which he said has some serious logistical problems to begin with, is not worth pursuing "Given we have the alternative site (Route 3A), it's not worthwhile at this time to pursue it," he said.

be required. He suggested an "all facilities sticker" in lieu of the beach stickers which sell for $7 ($3 for those 60 years of age and older).

Selectman Nan Roth is concerned that residents may start burning their trash in their fireplaces to beat the system.

"If they want to goo their chimney up, then that's their problem," Brown replied.

Selectmen Michael Sullivan and Peter Pratt said more oversight at the RTF will be needed for the program to be successful.

Brown said the recycling committee would conduct meetings in January and will produce a pamphlet explaining the program.

"We will go through a learning curve," Brown said.

To dispose of larger items that don't fit in a bag, such as toys, residents will be asked to buy tags for 50 cents each. For larger items such as applicancies, box springs and sofas, there will be a cost per item, Brown explained.

In a recent article, Brown told the Mariner that the pay-per-bag program is a fairer system than the present one, when everyone pays the same amount regardless of the amount of trash they generate.

Cohasset now recycles 38 percent of its trash, which is above the state average of 32 percent.

The state Department of Environmental (DEP) has grant money available to towns that start pay-as-you-throw programs, Brown said.

"Advise Me, Mr. Grillo, How Often Should My Orientals Be Cleaned?"

The Simple answer is, you need to vacuum your rugs at least once a week and have them professionally cleaned every three to five years.
Cleaning not only brightens your rugs' colors but removes abrasive grit and the spilled foods that attract textile insects!
So it really protects the investment you've made in your rugs.
You'll find all this and more in my booklet on the care of Oriental rugs.
It's filled with important information you can use and it's yours for the asking.

Village Design Charrette Attracts Interested Group

The day-long village design "charrette" at the South Shore Community Center on Saturday attracted about 40 enthusiastic participants, said Dean Rizzo, vice president of the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce.

Rizzo said several topics of concern in the village were discussed including parking, lack of restrooms, and sidewalks.

The morning was devoted to brainstorming and in the afternoon, participants broke up into groups of about eight to target their discussion more on specifics.

Now architects, Carr, Lynch and Sandell, Inc., will gather the suggestions and "synthesize" them into a report format which will include some conceptual drawings, Rizzo said.

"We were in agreement that the time is right to make improvements with the sewer and water mains and the train coming," Rizzo said. "Things will be disrupted and after disruption, there's a great opportunity to put things back together the way we'd like to see it."

A popular idea is to improve the town parking lot and add store fronts along the back of the shops which "expands the village," Rizzo said.

He explained that some existing shops have rear entrances that could be developed while new shops could also be added.

"We were really pleased," Rizzo said about the charrette. "We had a good quality group with a real interest in the village. We talked about solutions."

Rizzo said members of the board of selectmen, planning board, design review board and advisory board participated.

The chamber, Cohasset Rotary, and MBTA each donated $2,500 to pay for the charrette.

"His background seems to be impeccable," added Donovan. "Everyone that I have talked to speaks very highly of him."

"I have no doubt that he is going to do a good job for the town of Abington," said Selectman Joe Shea.

A graduate of the University of Rhode Island with a master's degree in public administration, Doyon described himself as a "fair person who treats people with respect."

"I believe in working with people and keeping the lines of communication open, both up and down," said Doyon. "I try to serve people with fairness and effectiveness."

A couple of areas that seemed to pique the interest of board members were Doyan's experience in opening a new Town Hall addition in Cohasset eight years ago, something Abington will be doing in 1998, as well as his grant writing proficiency, which included getting funding for a part-time town planner when he was in Hanover.

While in Cohasset, Doyon has also had a hand in the harbor dredging project, building a new DPW garage, rehabilitating the police/fire station complex, constructing a new athletic field for the town, as well as consolidating a number of town departments into a DPW.

He also said he was proud of he work he did in consolidating the E-911 project through the use of civilian dispatchers instead if using regular police officers and fire-fighters. E-911 in Abington just went on line last month and the town is also looking into using civilian dispatchers.

Doyon also pointed out that in three of the towns where he has worked, there have been bond rating upgrades. "I guess good luck follows me," said Doyon.

Doyon said he hopes to meet with the various town committees and boards as soon as possible "to find out what their goals and issues are."

On leaving Cohasset, Doyon said any move comes with mixed feelings.

"It's been a good eight years for me, both personally and professionally," he said.

Doyon said he would not be submitting his resignation until his contract has been worked out with Abington selectmen, a process that could take about six weeks.

Mary Ford also contributed to this report.

and sewer commission spent almost an hour trying to explain to the nearly 40 residents that the plan is required by a town meeting vote, and is an attempt to achieve parity for homeowners with septic systems and those whose homes will be connected to the sewer system.

Sewer commission chairman Ted Guild said there is no requirement by the state that Cohasset have a plan in place by the spring town meeting. However, it is advisable to do so since residents will also be voting on sewers in North Cohasset, tied to the Hull sewer system, and an extension of the sewer in the central part of town.

Tom Cook, chairman of the health board, urged the residents who oppose the plan to attend the town meeting in March and vote against it, if that is how they feel, but he asked them to also consider the purpose of the plan.

Cook told residents that the health board does not intend "to go out looking for problems." The purpose of this management plan is to develop a program that is more active than the present procedure that requires a septic system inspection at the time a house is sold.

Under the plan suggested by consultant John Struzziery, the health board will identify all septic systems in Cohasset, and them classify them based on criteria that takes into consideration the systems' ages, proximity to the water supply, the type of system, and the frequency of pumping.

For example, the cesspools that are oldest and closest to wells and drinking water sources could be classified in Category 1.

Cook said there would be no inspections of septic systems or cesspools unless state funds are available for low- or no-interest loans to repair these on-site disposal systems.

Cohasset has applied for $3.2 million, or approximately $500,000 for each of six years, from the state. In order to access the money, Cohasset needs a plan, he said.

Beach Street resident Roger Lowe asked if there is any evidence that septic systems and cesspools are now polluting the water supply, saying, "We may be addressing an environmental problem that we don't have."

In response, health agent Dr. Joseph Godzik said that the only way that can be determined is by inspections. In addition to human waste, septic systems and cesspools also receive hazardous materials from such sources as household cleaning chemicals. It takes a number of years for these chemicals to move through the soil, to migrate to the water supply.

"We may be sitting on a time bomb," Godzik said.

However, Godzik added, that the inspections will actually prolong the life of septic systems. He noted that several residents mentioned that a septic system has a life of 30 years. The systems can actually last indefinitely, with proper maintenance, which could be one component of the program the board is now trying to develop.

Frequent pumping of septic systems can actually undermine the proper operation of the system, he said, by removing organisms in the ecosystem of the tank that break down waste materials.

Pierson argued that the board of health and its consultant are not incorporating public comments into developing the management plan, and are holding these meetings as a formality. The health board is not being honest with the public, by not disclosing that homeowners whose septic systems fail will face costly repairs, and even the possibility of liens placed against their property if they do not make the repairs, he said.

He offered to publicly apologize if he is wrong, "but I don't think I'll have to," Pierson said.

"Just deal the cards face up and say, 'We're about to screw you and we don't care,'" Pierson said.

"I don't like your tone. I don't like your insinuations," health board member Kevin Ulmer said. "I look forward to your apology."

Several residents asked if it wouldn't be more economical and feasible to extend the sewer system throughout town.

Thomas Jerome of Beechwood Street said that sewer systems actually increase property values.

"That's a tremendous asset," he said.

He explained that, as a retired person whose home is paid for, he does not at this point in his life want to incur debt to pay for repairs to his cesspool that is more than 25 years old but in good working order. He said replacing his cesspool with a new septic system is likely to cost $20,000 to $40,000.

Guild said there are no plans at this time to do extend the sewer system throughout town, and noted that Cohasset voters have said "time and time again" that they do not want to do so.

He said that the cost to include the whole town in the sewer system would be approximately $40-$50 million, adding that septic systems are more economical. Households connected to the new sewer system in North Cohasset can expect to pay $16,000 over 20 years plus $400 per year for maintenance and operation. Households with septic systems can expect to pay $170 per year to have those systems pumped.

Board of health records show that 30 per cent of the present septic systems and cesspools will now fail to meet the criteria of Title V. The new sewers in North Cohasset and the central part of town will remove 35 to 40 per cent of the worst systems, Guild said.

Christmas Meal Program for Elders

South Shore Elder Services, Inc., will be coordinating a Christmas meal program for homebound elders in South Shore towns, including Hingham and Cohasset.

The organization will coordinate families who would like to share part of their holiday meal with an elder in their town. Local hospitals and nursing homes will help with the preparation of the meals, which will be delivered by volunteers.

Anyone willing to share a meal from their home or deliver meals provided by SSEE's nutrition program is asked to call the Susan Lambropoulos at the agency's main office at 848-3910.

Residents Want Safety Improvements to Their Road

By Mary Ford
COHASSET MARINER

A group of concerned Lamberts Lane residents were back before selectmen this week to push for safety improvements to their street.

After a long, drawn-out discussion, selectmen agreed to ask the town engineer to look at the road to see if it could be straightened out and will ask town counsel for his opinion on how to go about cutting down trees which are on private property. They will also talk to Eastern Edison about moving utility poles back from the road and will ask the DPW and conservation commission to look into solving drainage problems.

Fifteen miles-per-hour traffic signs installed after the residents appealed to the board for action in September are not enough, several frustrated Lamberts Lane residents told selectmen Monday.

Mary Foley said safety improvements are critical.

"Someone's going to get hurt, we're all holding our breath down there," she said.

Construction of new homes on the narrow street has added to traffic, the residents said. They were also concerned that an expanded parking lot at the golf club will mean more events there and more traffic on their street.

The residents will be on the selectmen's Jan. 13 meeting agenda to follow-up on the requested safety improvements.

Health Board Office is Under-Staffed

Dealing with Title V issues has pushed the board of health and its staff to the limit, selectmen learned Monday.

"All of us, elected officials and paid administrator and secretary are all overworked primarily because of Title V," Health board member Alix White said.

White made an urgent request for additional staff on Wednesday mornings to answer the telephone so the health board secretary can type the minutes from Tuesday night meetings without constant interruptions.

"We are 13 (meeting) minutes behind," she said.

Selectman Michael Sullivan, a former health board member, said he would meet with White, health agent Joseph Godzik and Town Administrator Gregory Doyon to discuss additional staffing on Wednesdays.

Doyon is in charge of deployment of town hall staff, selectmen said.

White explained that home buyers, sellers and real estate agents are flooding the office with calls about Title V, which is the state environmental code on septic systems. She said the secretary is spending about 25 hours a week on the telephone.

She explained that Godzik is out of the office much of the time while he performs perk tests related to Title V repairs and upgrades.

"The board of health is the only office in town which only has one full-time secretary. All other full-time offices have at least one part-time employee," White wrote in a letter to Doyon. "The board of health office provides quality service for citizens. Only with additional help can that standard be maintained. Without assistance, the board of health will be forced to close the office to the public for some hours during the week. Such a decision would be a disservice to the taxpayers of Cohasset."

AROUND TOWN/Sallyann Chatterton

Sign Up for Sidewalk of the Stars!

Northfield Mount Hermon School senior Brett MacQuarrie, son of Jane and Chris Kyricos, has competed in the 1996 New England Prep Schools A Division Soccer Tournament. The school went as far as the Nov. 13 quarterfinals, ending the game NMH 1, Belmont Hill 2. MacQuarrie has served as co-captain of the varsity soccer team and has been a member of the varsity lacrosse team. He was co-captain of the Southeast Team in the 1995 Bay State Games.

Brett is a student leader, a position of honor and responsibility at the school, and has been a member of the NMH "As Schools Match Wits" academic quiz show team. He has also studied advanced placement economics. Sounds as though whichever college Brett chooses to attend will be lucky to get such a fine, talented young man. We want to hear all about it!

Sports hero or not, you can be a part of Cohasset's "Sidewalk of the Stars." The Track and Field Study Committee is embarking on a fund-raising campaign for the finishing touches of Alumni Field. Engraved bricks with names or messages will be installed in the sidewalk leading up to the new bleachers for donations starting at $75.

A townwide mailing is in the works, with details on the bricks and ordering information. As they say, "This is your opportunity to become part of history — a living time capsule from 1997 into the Cohasset 21st century — but this time capsule will be different — open, alive, always used, for all to see as the years roll by." Watch for your "Sidewalk of the Stars" mailing for all the details, and for the order forms needed to become a star.

Speaking of the Track and Field Study Committee and their attempts to fund the finishing touches of the new Alumni Field, here's a little story with a big idea in it.

Ron Massa recently had a birthday (we won't say which one), and all his family and friends got together and made a contribution to the committee in his name to do something that was needed for the field! Great idea, isn't it?! Hey, Santa. . . .!

Getting a Jump

▶ According to the American Automobile Association, 27.5 million motorists called for assistance in jump-starting their cars last year. For this reason, the AAA recommends that motorists carry jumper cables in their trunks. When jump-starting a car: Make sure that the car providing assistance has at least as much voltage as the car in need of the jump. Turn off the ignitions in both cars and shut down all electrical accessories. Connect one end of the positive (red) cable to the dead battery's positive terminal, and the other end of the cable to the live car's positive terminal. Next, attach one of the clips on the negative (black) cable to the negative terminal on the live car's battery, and securely attach the remaining negative clip to an unpainted metal part of the dead car's engine chassis. Start the live car, then start the dead car.

▶ Carrying jumper cables in your car is an excellent idea, especially if you have already had problems. But it still is best if you have your car checked to prevent unexpected stalling. At SOUTH SHORE CHEVROLET - GEO, we treat our customers like family, which means we care about you as well as your car. Our primary purpose is to get you back on the road quickly at the least cost and aggravation to you. We welcome your questions--we're here to answer them. You can find us at 828 C.J. Cushing Highway, Route 3A, and we are open Thursday evenings. Phone: 383-9090. Satisfaction with your car's performance is what we deliver.

P.S.
After jump-starting your car, have the battery professionally recharged - unless you are planning to drive continually for several hours.

Engagements

Ellen F. Hartshorne and Timothy W. Whitney

Hartshorne/Whitney

Mr. and Mrs. John F. Hartshorne of Cohasset announce the engagement of their daughter, Ellen Fritz Hartshorne, to Timothy W. Whitney of Watertown.

Miss Hartshorne, who also resides in Watertown, is a senior designer with the Boston office of Fitch, Inc., a communication design firm. She is a graduate of Smith College and Art Center College of Design in Pasadena, Calif.

Her fiancé, an architect, is associate director of the sports facilities design department of Sasaki Associates, Inc. of Watertown. He is a graduate of Dartmouth College and Harvard University's Graduate School of Design.

The bride-to-be attended elementary and high schools in Bronxville, N.Y., where her family lived for 22 years before moving to Cohasset in 1989. Her father, now retired, was the executive director of the Institute of Management Consultants in New York City.

Mr. Whitney prepared for college at Middlesex School in Concord. His boyhood home was Franconia, N.H., where his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Whitney, reside. Mr. Whitney's father is founder and president of Whitneys, Inc., a construction company in Franconia.

A June wedding in Cohasset is planned.

Keep the Village Momentum Going

Villages can work.

A trip down the road to Hingham Square proves that. For the most part, shops there thrive.

The Square has its problems. The parking isn't great, the traffic there is horrendous and some of the buildings could use a face lift.

But despite its draw backs, Hingham Square prospers, primarily because it's a busy place and some thought has gone into the way the Square looks. Merchants, businesses and the town of Hingham obviously take great pride in their "downtown." There's also a strong association with a vested interest, the Hingham Square Business Association, which promotes the Square through monthly meetings and is responsible for the popular Christmas in the Square event and Summerfest.

Cohasset Village is at a turning point. After limping along for several years as some "anchor" shops left, such as Cohasset Market and Colonial Pharmacy — there are signs of life there now.

Hingham Institution for Savings has transformed the former Cohasset Savings Bank building into a showplace; Fitness Plus has opened a popular workout center; The Silver Spoon is a delicious spot to stop for a bite; and the parking lot at Cohasset News has been re-paved and looks great — just to name a few.

Dean Rizzo, vice chairman of the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce and owner of Aquarius Sunrooms, has shown real leadership in spearheading the village movement in town.

Last spring a handful of concerned citizens and merchants brainstormed at French Memories. The ideas that were tossed around turned into a weekly farmer's market, village fair, and the design "charrette" held on Saturday.

At the charrette, groups of town officials, citizens and business people worked to come up with a plan for the future of the village.

Mr. Rizzo said those who participated agreed that it's the right time to tackle projects such as improving sidewalks once the sewer and water mains go in.

"After the disruption, it's a great time to put things back together the way we'd like to see it," he said.

He said after the old DPW garage is torn down, there will be an opportunity to improve the town parking lot. Adding store fronts that face the parking lot is a possibility.

The charrette focused on the "big picture" and big changes in the village will take time.

But in the interim, it's important that all of us support the village by making it a busy place.

We agree with planning board member Robert Sturdy who told the Mariner last week that the survival of Cohasset Village is critical to the quality of life in town.

We shouldn't let the debate over a village train station cloud the clear point that we can all agree on: the village must succeed.

So catch the village fever by making it a point to do some of your business and shopping there.

More Thoughts on Learning Lab

To the Editor:

Herewith some additional thoughts about the Learning Laboratory for Marine Biology and Genetic Research, which the Cohasset Lightkeepers Corporation proposes to establish under the scientific direction of Kevin Ulmer, Ph.D.

To ensure continuity, an Operating Advisory Board of regional teachers and others with relevant scientific credentials will be established. In addition, there will be a Scientific Advisory Board comprised of senior scientists from other institutions, particularly those that are related to marine biology or genetics.

The purpose of the Learning Laboratory is to provide students with research experience and motivation, and introduce them to the new scientific frontier and promising future of genetics. The facility and equipment to support these activities has been pretty well defined. The considerable interest by local science teachers and parents interested in encouraging intellectual growth (and future employability) indicates that the facility will become popular. We are, of course, developing tentative projections of usage in order to make reasonable plans for financial and other needs.

We should be grateful that Dr. Ulmer is willing to divert so much of his time and talent to benefit the future students of the region. I'm amused at naive concerns that somehow he would profit financially; surely it is obvious that his unique talents, experience and energy could generate profit far more easily in the private ventures in which he is already experienced, than trying to do so via the difficult, inefficient, time-consuming and contentious route of a volunteer operation. In any case, the proposal clearly states that any intellectual property generated by the lab would be its property, and any financial benefits used to defray operating expense. And he certainly is doing the lab, not himself, a favor if he relocates his private office to the lab in order to be readily available, and pays rent at market rates to the lab instead of to someone else.

Let the pros and cons of the lab proposal (for the Learning Laboratory for Marine Biology and Genetic Research) be discussed on substantive issues, and with some intelligent faith in the integrity of our fellows.

Support for the Learning Lab

To the Editor:

I would like to present some thoughts in favor of the proposed educational research laboratory, hopefully to be located in the building on the former Hagerty property.

It's too easy to dismiss the idea at first thought as involving only a small group of students. But our town has many small groups of students, for example the football team, the baseball team, the tennis team, the hockey team, the swimming team, the soccer team, the rowing team and the sailing team.

I think Cohasset needs to foster the creation of a future genius team, to encourage young people with potential to acquire great knowledge and be well prepared for successful careers.

Computers have vastly increased our ability to access knowledge developed by others, and to store learning in an orderly and permanent way, before it is forgotten. It is unfortunate that computers weren't available before Einstein passed on; it would have been great to have captured for future use the many thoughts that crammed his brain. Computers are essential to genetic studies, and genetic studies are planned for the lab.

I hope the townspeople will go forward with this worthy endeavor.

I will assist where I can, as I have in creating the Cohasset Sailing Club and Lightkeepers building.

Let us go forward with helpful assistance to our children and to our lobster industry.

Some Good News on Teens

To the Editor:

As reported recently in the press, Cohasset has not been exempt from teenage problems of drug and alcohol abuse as well as disrespect for our local police officers. For those of us looking for that elusive balance of good news about Cohasset's teenagers, I have a recommendation.

As Ed Sullivan would say "Right here on our stage," the Cohasset Junior/Senior High School is mounting a lustrous production of Gilbert and Sullivan's "The Mikado" this weekend (Friday, Saturday and Sunday matinee). The cast of 60 teenagers has risen to the significant challenge of Gilbert and Sullivan's hallmark precision staccato lyrics, thrilling harmonies and witty satirical dialogue — a real feat when as adults we might think that our students speak as if they had sponges in their mouths!

Thanks to CHS teachers Bryan Marks, music director, and Jody Wood, artistic director, CHS has provided our students with a focus for their musicianship, humor and style.

Yes, it's a glimpse of that elusive balance we want so much to hear about. I know I'm going to sit back in my seat and enjoy every glorious minute of it!

Disagrees with Planners' Train Position

Mr. Wood provided a copy of this letter to Planning Board Chairman Al Moore to the Mariner.

To the Editor:

The purpose of this letter is to let you know of my disagreement with the position of the Planning Board relative to the train station location. Although the board certainly can make decisions as they seem fit, they also owe a responsibility to the townspeople who elected them. The townspeople spoke when they voted prior to Town Meeting. You may not have liked their vote, but that was the vote. To go against a three-to-one majority seems to me to be at odds with the majority, not the "vocal minority" as you stated in your letter to Trudy Coxe. Who are you (Board) to decide that what is in the best interest of Cohasset and surrounding towns is a station in the village? The MBTA asked for direction by Dec. 1, 1996. Our elected Board of Selectmen are our chief executive officers, not the Planning Board.

To believe a station in the village will "bring new life to the village and enable the maximum number of passengers to walk, not ride to the station" is laughable at best. Imagine 300 cars traveling to the village between 6 and 8 a.m., then leaving between 5 and 7 p.m. How many will stay to shop in the village? Please! And how many people will walk to the station? Not that many. Only those within walking distance. How many people will walk two miles to the train station? Have you considered the size of the streets in question? Smith Place, Depot Court, Brook Street. Have any members of the Planning Board gone to North Quincy to see the size of a normal MBTA station? If you have, can you still believe that is in the best interest of the town?

Jingle Bell Walk Help Appreciated

To the Editor:

On behalf of South Shore Community Center, we would like to express our appreciation to the many merchants who lent a helping hand on our third Jingle Bell Walk.

We had a beautiful day; downtown was decorated with red and green balloons; and the bells were ringing from St. Stephen's Church. Mr. and Mrs. Claus and helpers arrived at Government Island by lobster boat, and everyone got into the holiday spirit.

We would like to thank the students from the community service group at Cohasset High School; Cohasset Chamber of Commerce for sponsoring the ride; Council of Elder Affairs; Glenn Pratt; and our many volunteers who gave so much of their time to make this event a huge success. Thank you.

'Citizen of Year' Nominations Open

Nominations are now being accepted for the Cohasset Mariner's annual Citizen of the Year Award. This is a continuation of the award begun in 1993 to recognize an individual for outstanding service to the community or for a special achievement.

Once again, the Cohasset Mariner invites our readers to take this opportunity to nominate a person who has made a significant contribution to our community. This is a community award: The Mariner is the means by which we are able to recognize, thank and honor those around us who make the quiet, generous contributions that make Cohasset a wonderful place to call our home.

The deadline for nominations for the 1996 Citizen of the Year is 5 p.m., Dec. 31. Please see nomination form on page 7.

Following the close of nominations, a selection panel will review the names submitted and select the 1996 Citizen of the Year, who will be named in January, 1997.

Nominees may be someone in elected office, a member of an appointed town committee, teacher or school administrator, clergy member, fire-fighter, police officer, or other municipal worker, a person in the business community, sports figure or an "unsung"neighbor or friend who has given freely of his or her time and energy to a worthy Cohasset project or cause.

Station Case Hung on a Straw

To the Editor:

The Cohasset Planning Board has written a letter without first clearing it with the Selectmen. Pretty cheeky.

The Selectmen, having virtually ignored the Planning Board's comments, have cried "Foul!" when the latter undertook to state to the Secretary of Environmental Affairs its unanimous view of the best location for a train station. Admittedly, the Planning Board is an elected body that is not required to answer to the Selectmen. It is also by statute the planning agency for the town.No matter, it ignored togetherness; it just didn't play the game.

Dean Rizzo, head of the Railroad Mitigation Committee, had the temerity to publicly observe that the Selectmen had ignored his committee's timely pleas for further information and proceeded to make their decision forthwith — nearly three weeks ahead of schedule. So much for town hall etiquette.

All of this has taken place in apparent disregard of a straw vote to which more than 90 percent of the voters paid no attention. Of those who did vote, almost half failed to stay for the Town Meeting that made the vote possible. This straw vote is the straw upon which the Selectmen have hung their case.

To most people, "straw" as in "straw vote" refers to a thing of little consequence. The Selectmen seem to define it differently, but as Humpty-Dumpty said, "When I use a word, it means just what I choose it to mean — neither more nor less."

Daniel C. Cotton
27 King St.

Volunteers Needed for Town Boards

Selectmen said this week volunteers are needed to serve on the mosquito control committee, the sidewalk study committee and the drug & alcohol committee. Interested citizens should call the selectmen's office at 383-9900.

Epi-pen No Problem in Cohasset

By Charlene Vandini
COHASSET MARINER

The Cohasset schools have managed so far to dodge the controversies that surfaced in other towns where school personnel administer epinephrine to children with severe allergies.

According to School Nurse Karen Murphy, allergies among children are increasing, putting schools in a position to address conditions they never faced before.

There are two children in the elementary schools and one high school student who are highly allergic to bee stings, she said. Teachers and school bus drivers have been trained to use the "epi-pen" in the event these children are stung by bees.

The epi-pen is a single-dose injection of epinephrine in a cartridge that resembles a retractable pen.

Other communities have recently had to take steps to accommodate children with life-threatening allergies to peanuts. In Hingham, four kindergartners have such allergies, and the school department has designated one classroom "peanut-free." In two cases, the children are so highly sensitized to peanut, even peanut butter residue on a computer keyboard can trigger a reaction.

The reactions range from hives and eczema, to vomiting, to anaphylaxis, a total body reaction with plummeting blood pressure and difficulty breathing, which can be fatal.

Last month, a school bus driver in Hingham balked at carrying the epi-pen, saying he had not been properly trained in its use, and that he feared assuming that liability. He was suspended for one day, and the school department is now reviewing the directive that bus drivers who transport children with the allergies carry the epi-pen.

Supt. Stephen Hart said none of the teachers nor bus drivers has objected to carrying the epi-pen.

"It hasn't been a problem here," he said.

Murphy said the epi-pen is very easy to use, and automatically injects the drug when pushed against the upper, outer thigh. It can even be used by children on themselves. She has trained the bus drivers and teachers, conducting review classes three times a year.

It is important to have the epi-pen available at all times, she said. Cohasset emergency medical technicians respond very promptly, but when the children are out of town on field trips, emergency response might be delayed.

Last fall, she said, a class from the elementary schools visited a cranberry bog which has an active bee population. The teacher who accompanied the class carried an epi-pen in case one of the allergic children was stung.

Murphy also noted that sometimes children outgrow these allergies, and the severity of the reaction varies by the place on the body where the allergic person is stung. There might be no reaction to a sting on one of the extremities, she said, but a sting on the face or neck could produce a dangerous reaction.

Bus drivers and teachers have had no problem learning to use the epi-pen, and have been pleased to know that there is something they can do to help if necessary, she said.

New Busses Recommended

Last week, the school board discussed the school budget for FY"98. Several increases were talked about in categories that included the salary reserve for non-union personnel, funds for administrative computer software, special needs transportation and pupil services.

The committee also approved the purchase of two new transit style or "flat-front" busses for $102,000. The seat belt ready buses have a 77-passenger capacity, slightly more than traditional school buses. Although mechanics might have to adjust to the new location of the motors, it is believed that repair costs should fall as a result of the purchase.

The school committee will continue to discuss the FY'98 budget at its next meeting on Dec. 19. A Feb. 1 goal has been set for the completion of budget talks.

Reader Survey Question for December 12, 1996

Selectmen are angry that the planning board sent a letter to state officials, pressing for a commuter rail station in Cohasset Village, after the selectmen voted for a station site on Route 3A.

Which of the following statements most closely reflects your position on this subject?

Press 1 The planning board has statutory authority and therefore should make the final decision on the train station location.

Press 2 The selectmen speak for the town, and the planning board was wrong to usurp that authority.

Press 3 Selectmen and the planning board are both independently elected boards and are well within their rights to notify state officials of their recommendations on this subject.

All responses to this week's question must be received by 12 o'clock on Tuesday, Dec. 17.

Our readers are invited to record a brief comment after registering their responses to this week's question. Please speak clearly. We will print as many responses as space permits, but we reserve the right to edit any lengthy comments.

Should Hingham High School seniors be required to pass the General Educational Development (GED) test in order to graduate this year?

Yes	2
No	4

Your comments:

If the basic skills competency tests are still administered in the three grade-levels schools, spending $4 million statewide to administer these GED exams is outrageous. The money could be better spent for other educational uses. If the basic skills tests are still being administered, that's where our focus should be: if a child is having problems early on, that's where the problems can be solved. I don't the GED administered this late isn't going to benefit the seniors. They should be prepared by graduation. I think they are.

There's no mention of Chapter 766, special needs students. Would special needs students also be required to take the GED tests? I imagine there would be a waiver. The way all the surveys are set up now, they're saying all high school seniors are required to pass this test.

Clarification of Sprinkler Law Sought

By Mary Ford
COHASSET MARINER

It is still not clear if the town's proposed new DPW garage will need a $50,000 sprinkler system.

Under a state law, which the town adopted in 1983, buildings over 7,500 square feet are required to have automatic sprinkler systems installed.

But the new garage, while in excess of 7,500 square feet, is divided into two sections by an impenetrable fire wall, making it in essence two buildings, selectmen said Monday.

They decided to ask the state Automatic Sprinkler Appeals Board whether the design of the DPW garage is sufficient to make it two separate buildings.

The 3-1 decision to appeal was made over strong objections from Selectman Peter Pratt who said the town is in essence appealing its own by-law and setting a dangerous precedent. Selectmen Merle Brown, Michael Sullivan and Nan Roth voted to go ahead with the appeal. Selectman Ronnie McMorris was not present at Monday's meeting.

"There are no halfway measures here, either we uphold the by-laws or not," Pratt said, noting that as sworn officers of town meeting selectmen should uphold the will of town meeting.

Robert Davenport of Sohier Street, a regular at selectmen's meetings, agreed with Pratt.

"I can't believe that our selectmen would even consider after spending $900,000 of our money to try to save $50,000.

"If this were a private person or business, there would be no hassle, you'd shut them down," he said.

But Gary Gardner of the DPW garage committee pointed out that what's at issue here is whether or not the DPW garage with its fire wall "meets the intent of the law" as accepted by the town of Cohasset.

Selectmen said there has been a verbal response from the Automatic Sprinklers Appeals Board that the DPW fire wall does make the garage two buildings but they must have that in writing. They will submit the architectural plans to a hearing before the board for review.

Pending the outcome of the appeal, the building inspector and fire chief have interpreted the law rigorously and at this point have ruled that the plans, which do not include automatic sprinklers, do not comply with the law.

Voters approved an additional $290,000 for construction of the DPW garage at the Oct. 28 special town meeting, that did not include money for a sprinkler system. The entire project, originally set at about $700,000, is now expected to cost $1 million.

Column, Coffee Chats Possible

Improved Communication with Parents is Goal

By Jason Bouffard
COHASSET MARINER

Parents of Cohasset school kids can plan on being better informed about the state of their child's education, according to the school committee.

The school board stood behind a commitment to increasing communication with the public at its meeting last Thursday. Committee members are exploring various ways to keep parents abreast of school-related issues when attendance at school committee meetings is not possible.

Committee vice-chairman Maureen Jerz supported the idea of informal gatherings of parents, along with school committee and selectmen representatives. The committee agreed that such face-to-face meetings would provide a useful forum for discussion, but the setting of these meetings is as yet undetermined. While Jerz suggested a monthly "coffee meeting," committee member Rick Shea suggested that the group could convene over breakfast.

"The format could change based on who's running it," Jerz said.

While lending her support to the idea, committee member JoAnne Chittick reminded the committee that the meetings should be informal in nature, used as a means to open up communication, not to make formal decisions.

"This is more of a way to bring things back to the committee," Jerz said.

Committee Chairman Ralph Kidder expressed an interest in running a monthly column in the Cohasset Mariner to update parents on the latest school issues. He pointed out that by releasing a column at the same time each month, parents would consistently know where and when to look for school committee information.

Other ideas included a "State of the Schools" report, covering such issues as financial planning, education reform, technological advancements, as well as success stories and areas in need of improvement.

Currently, committee meetings are being aired on local cable television in an effort to increase public awareness.

Although he felt that significant change cannot occur overnight, Kidder is optimistic about the committee's planned efforts.

"This is an extremely high priority for the school committee," Kidder said.

School Board Debates GED Test

At their meeting last week,school committee members discussed a program meant to bring about the statewide improvement of the school system, mandatory General Educational Development (GED) testing for all high school seniors. Committee members weighed the benefits and costs of the proposal, which requires all high school seniors to take the GED test before graduating. Failure to pass the test will be noted on the student's diploma and school transcript.

The program is part of the seven-year Education Reform program enacted by the state in 1993. Some 30 percent of seniors who have taken the 7-1/2 hour test fail, officials say.

While admitting that the idea has to be thought through, Supt. Stephen Hart said he is not opposed to GED testing. However, the decision to implement the program will in the end be determined by the state.

Committee member Rick Shea expressed reservations about the proposal, pointing out a series of factors that could limit a student's proficiency on the test, for example, an illness or family crisis.

Committee members discussed logistical problems, such as how and when to administer the test. Concerns were brought forth about preparation and actual testing time preempting the normal curriculum.

Party with a Purpose

Cohasset Chamber of Commerce will hold its annual holiday Party with a Purpose Tuesday, Dec. 17, from 5:30 to 9 p.m. in South Shore Art Center's Bancroft and Dillon Galleries.

There will be cocktails, hors d'oeuvres, desserts and holiday music. Guests will be able to view art exhibits, and members are encouraged to bring a friend, family member or business associates to the gathering. Admission is $12 per person, with proceeds benefitting Cohasset Food Pantry.

For more details, call the Chamber hotline at 383-1010 or Domenic at 383-1841.

Holiday Concert to Benefit Wellspring

First Parish in Cohasset will hold its 18th annual holiday concert Sunday, Dec. 15, at 4 p.m. in the Meeting House on Cohasset Common.

This year the Unicorn Singers will present "A French Christmas," featuring Charpentier's "Midnight Mass for Christmas" for chorus, soloists and organ. The mass is unique among Baroque works for its use of ancient French Christmas tunes as themes for the mass movements. A suite by Cohasset arranger Rich Jensen sets in more contemporary harmonies the same noels. Several familiar French carols for audience participation will complete the program.

Individuals may become patrons for a gift of $40, which includes two tickets. Advance tickets are $5 and may be purchased at the church office. Tickets at the door are $8. For more information, call 383-1100.

This year's concert will benefit Wellspring Multi Services, Inc. in Hull. Wellspring's mission is to help people in need so they may live with dignity and a sense of self-worth. Wellspring provides programs and services which enable people to develop skills and confidence necessary for improving the quality of their lives. Programs include adult education, crisis counseling, battered women's support group and an emergency food pantry.

The organization, which is operated by volunteers, provided services for 270 South Shore families in 1995. It is expected that more families will need assistance this year.

Toys for Tots Drop Off

The foyer of the Cohasset Police Department, 62 Elm St., is the official drop off site in town for the Toys for Tots program, sponsored by the Marine Corps Reserve. Donations of new toys and cash are welcome. Call 383-1055 for more information. Toys for Tots brings the magic of Christmas to many needy families.

Treasures at Consignment Shop

Avoid the traffic and overwhelming crowds and come to Cohasset Consignment Shop off Route 3A in Cushing Plaza. The shop is open Monday through Saturday from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Come view the designer black cape embroidered dramatically in the back with yellow flowers, an Oscar de la Renta ball gown and numerous mink Andazurene fur coats and jackets. There are also handmade sweaters for Tiny Tim, scarves and bells for the Seven Dwarfs and handknit mittens for the Three Little Kittens.

Also featured are William Adams plates copied from a 1780 Chinese pattern and one of the first of its style produced in English pottery, along with an array of music boxes, stuffed toys, eclectic cookbooks, designer jewelry, beaded evening and leather bags, tuxedos and tweed jackets.

Shoppers will help support a variety of programs offered by the Social Service League, which serves Hingham, Hull, Norwell, Scituate and Cohasset.

Wrestlers Building a Juggernaut

The Skippers Have a Tough, Gritty Squad That's Only Getting Better

By Joe Reardon
COHASSET MARINER

Torin Sweeney headed into last winter's Cohasset High wrestling season believing it would be a rebuilding campaign for the grapplers. Instead, the Skippers finished with a solid 10-6 record, followed by an impressive third-place finish in the South Sectionals.

Sweeney has tightened the grip on this year's squad with a bear of a non-league schedule, but the team is better and more experienced as well.

"This team's going to be stronger," said Sweeney. "We're doing real well, so far."

Along with the South Shore League competition, Cohasset has meets against Braintree, Marshfield, Foxboro and B.C. High. Sweeney feels the meets against the bigger teams can only help the Skippers' chances of achieving their late-season goals.

Cohasset is solid from top to bottom with an eight-man sophomore lineup that is only going to keep getting better with every meet. All eight are guaranteed starting positions in their respective weight classes, while six of them qualified for the state finals a year ago.

Sweeney has a trio of captains who will set the lead for this year's team. All three are savvy grapplers who have had success on the mats in past seasons.

Kevin Duffy, who will be wrestling in the tough 135-pound class, placed in the state tourney the past two seasons. Doug Sherrin (140) competed in last year's state tourney and Justin Buckley (171) was a sectional finalist and

Football Season Sets Foundation For Future

By Jim O'Sullivan
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Despite a losing season and an abundance of injuries, the Cohasset High varsity football team showed great improvement as the season wore on. After an opening-game rout at the hands of East Bridgewater, the Skippers banded together and did their best to remain competitive in this, Cohasset football's first year back in the South Shore League. A 1-9 record in the books does not tell the full tale of the 1996 campaign.

Racked by injuries since the very first week, Cohasset was never able to put a healthy squad on the field. A spotty offense never truly found its rhythm during the season, though the defense played well. At season's end, only 23 of the roster's 39 players were able to play in the Thanksgiving Day loss to eventual Division 4B Super Bowl winner Hull.

Sophomore linebacker Sean Parkinson (82) moves in on the Hull Pirates' Kevin Currivan during the annual Thanksgiving Day game at Cohasset. The Skippers finished with a 1-9 record, but are looking at better days ahead on the gridiron.
John Liddington/Special to the Mariner

Senior captains Kevin Duffy and Grant Emde both did outstanding jobs in leadership roles during the season. Both players saw action in the offensive and defensive backfields and were involved in some key plays throughout the season. Jarred Batts, an offensive lineman for the Skippers, did not appear to be a guard, but made up for it this year with great hustle, clearing the way for the Skippers' backfield. Matt Belson, a first-year player and SSL All-Star, played with a nearly unmatched intensity and abandon. As the team's most effective running back, Belson also played excellent defense on the front line of the Skippers' solid wall. Doug Cameron, Cohasset's starting end and a sparkplug on special teams, was one of the fastest players on the team, and snagged an Emde pass in the end zone of the Thanksgiving game, giving the Skippers a two-point conversion. Winter Promises Dynamic Sports Action

REARDON

For the first time since mid-August, the fall sports athletes had a break from lacing up the cleats every afternoon and hitting the fields of their respective high schools. Those soccer players who advanced deep into the tournament had a little less of a "vacation" until winter practices got underway, while football players had a grand total of three days, following the Thanksgiving Day game.

It's safe to say most athletes who compete in a sport during the fall are also integral parts of their winter teams. And many of the autumns best soccer players juggle a winter sport with indoor soccer in Hingham and Bridgewater. The same holds true come spring when they play a high school sport and head back outdoors for soccer competition that generally lasts right through the summer.

So, you can imagine the high school athletes savor what little time they have to rest up for another season. Many are still sore and can feel the aches and pains from the fall sports season during the first few days of winter practice. Several players are on emotional highs from the fall and are not totally into their winter routine yet.

Then you get the athletes who bypass a fall sport, and instead, concentrate on getting in shape for the winter. Basketball players work on their various shots and conditioning. Wrestlers may workout at different clinics and get a headstart at reaching their competitive weight. Of course, the conditioning is key to preparing for any sport.

But no matter what the athletes' background, the winter promises to bring as many thrills as the fall sports qualified for the tourney.

Sweeney is also pleased with the bumper crop of junior-high wrestlers out for the team. Of the 30 grapplers on the roster, 20 of them are in junior high. Sweeney believes it is imperative to have a deep number of young wrestlers.

"It's great we have so many younger guys," he said. "That's our future right there."

Even if the Skippers don't match their 10-6 record of last season, they'll undoubtedly be more prepared for the South Sectional tourney. Sweeney is looking at a finish somewhere in the top three, and then "a legitimate shot" at top five in the states.

As good as the team is, with so many youngsters the Skippers are still buildin[illegible] But further strengthening a... already tough, young squad can only pay off with positive results down the line.

anchor the Skipper defense with tenacity. Cogill fought his way into the backfield repeatedly and made several tackles this season. Matt Conley also played end for the Skippers. At 6-foot-1, Conley used his size to intimidate opposing quarterbacks and help contain running backs on the outside. Mike Kearney, another first-year player, really blossomed over the course of the second half of the year. Kearney repeatedly came up from his cornerback position to make tackles for the Blue. Eric Snow was bitten by the injury bug early in the season and missed playing time. Snow was one of many Skipper players who did time on the disabled list.

Burly Chad Whitman was another player felled by injuries. Whitman's shoulder allowed him only limited action, but he made a gutsy appearance in the Thanksgiving game.

All these seniors filled leadership roles this year, and their performances will be sorely missed next year. However, the Skippers should have a returning crop of four juniors, 17 sophomores, six freshmen and a host of talented underclassmen.

Head coach Bob Knurek viewed the season with a realistic eye. "We're proud of the kids who hung in until the end. We were playing teams two and three times our size, but our guys just kept coming back. I have nothing but respect for those kids. They played against the odds, but never laid down."

With this type of attitude, a prospectively strong crop and the legacy of effort left by the departing seniors, next year's squad should move up in the standings.

Ron Ford's Basketball Clinic On Tap

The Cohasset Recreation Department, in conjunction with the Cohasset Basketball Boosters Club will offer Cohasset High basketball coach Ron Ford's Holiday Vacation Basketball Shooting Clinic for girls and boys, grades 4-8. The 1996 clinic will be held at Cohasset High School's Sullivan Gym, starting Thursday, Dec. 26 to Saturday, Dec. 28, from 9 a.m. to noon each day.

The three-day clinic, directed by Ford, will focus on the development of fundamental offensive skills, designed specifically for grade 4-8 players. Students will receive instruction in ball handling, shooting, balancing, positioning skills, etc., helping make participants better offensive players.

To register, complete registration forms that were handed out at basketball registration, or pick up a registration form at the recreation office, first floor, town hall, and return it to the recreation department as soon as possible as space is limited.

The fee for this unique opportunity is $60 per participant, which includes a clinic T-shirt. Checks should be made payable to Cohasset Basketball Boosters Club. This is the fifth year the Winter Shooting Clinic has been offered through the sponsorships of the Good Sport Sporting Goods Store, Route 3A, Cohasset, the Basketball Boosters Club and the recreation department.

Kick-A-Thon Benefit

A kung fu Kick-A-Thon event will be held Friday, Dec. 13, at Jade Forest Kung Fu/Tai Chi in Cohasset. Students and staff member participants will range in age from 6 to – well, quite a bit older. Proceeds from the Kick-A-Thon will be donated to Project Action Foundation, Inc., a non-profit corporation which provides scholarships in dance, gymnastics and martial arts to underprivileged children and youngsters "at risk." As a Project Action sponsor studio, Jade Forest supports the foundation's goal of providing such youngsters the opportunity to benefit from positive role models, peer support, and self esteem in a healthy, secure and supportive environment.

During the Kick-A-Thon, students of all ages and levels of skill will execute basic martial arts kicks as well as some of the more difficult and advanced kicking techniques of kung fu. Scott Jeffery, assistant head instructor at Jade Forest and a nationally rated competitor on the tournament circuit, will kick off the event, beginning at 5:30 p.m. All students participating will have collected donations from sponsors for 100 kicks they will perform. Additional donations can also be made by members of the public wishing to lend their support at this exciting event.

For further information about this event, or to learn more about the programs at Jade Forest, call John Loupos at 617-383-6822.

GOING PLACES

SYDNEY: SIMPLY SENSATIONAL

If you've never been "down under" before, to the golden continent of Australia, planning a trip there may seem a little intimidating. It's a long way to travel if you're not sure where to go or what to see. One great place to start is Sydney. A port city perched on the country's southeastern coast, Sydney has been heralded by travel magazines and enthusiastic fans alike as one of the world's most rewarding destinations. Its most famous landmark is probably the stunning Sydney Opera House, which has been described as looking like a giant bird about to take flight. The Taronga Park Zoo offers an engaging setting for viewing some of Australia's unusual wildlife, such as koalas, kangaroos, and duckbilled platypuses. Must-see attractions include The Rocks, site of the first European settlement 200 years ago, and the 74-acre Royal Botanical Gardens. Public transportation is excellent.

A trip to Australia is a once-in-a-lifetime vacation. Make the most of it by careful planning and attention to detail. That's what we do best at Scituate Harbor Travel. We'll take care of all the arrangements, tell you about experiences not to be missed, help you with necessary documents, even advise what clothes will be best. We do it all here at 53 Cole Parkway, Scituate Harbor, including providing our services at no charge to you. PH: 545-4281 or 800-354-2720. Happy holidays from Linda & Nancy. We will be on vacation until January 2. Look for us then.

season. It always does. Every school generally has at least one team that captures the interest of the faculty and student body. Droves of spectators turn out for the games and the fervor lasts the entire season.

And with the winter season comes basketball. Hoop is probably the one sport where spectators are practically on the court with the athletes. The noise from cheering fans reaches a fever pitch as games wind down and the score is still close. The South Shore and Atlantic Coast Leagues were treated with dozens of quality games and several squads from both leagues went on to compete admirably in the South Sectional finals — some further.

The fall season is history and it has left us with a number of memories: The Hanover High soccer squads' SSL titles and furious postseason battles. Melissa Henderson's sensational cross country season within the league and in the invitational meets, where she established herself as one of the best female harriers in Massachusetts. The Rockland High football team's bid for a berth in the Division 3A Super Bowl after playing eventual winner Marshfield to a tie, earlier in the season and defeating the always-tough Whitman-Hanson squad.

The Hanover High football team proved to be the only SSL squad to defeat eventual Division 4B Super Bowl champion Hull. The Indians beat the Pirates handily, 29-6. It was a strange season in the SSL as several teams were in the title race through the halfway point of the schedule. The ACL was even closer with Marshfield, Rockland and Randolph still in position to pull off a league championship in the final two weeks.

Cohasset did have a disappointing fall sports campaign, but the winter season is shaping up to be much brighter. The gymnastics team is solid as a rock and the boys basketball squad will be looking for another Division 3 South Sectional title. Torin Sweeney's wrestling squad is just one of the proven grappling powers on the South Shore and the hockey team should be able to improve on last year's record with a crop of returning varsity players.

What the fall and winter sports both have in common is the desire of the athletes to continue to improve and work towards a winning season. Thankfully, we the fans are lucky enough to enjoy the fruits of their labors by viewing some terrific sports action.

Rising risks in foreign funds depend on dollar's value

By the editors of
WORTH MAGAZINE

In 1985, when the dollar was hitting a historic high against the world's major currencies, investors in the United States decided to venture out into the world's equity markets. Their timing was impeccable.

YOUR MONEY'S WORTH

Since then, the dollar has lost about 50 percent of its value against the European currencies and the yen, giving international investors a double bang for their buck. Yet few international-fund owners realize how much of their overseas portfolio's returns are the result of a falling dollar. Now is a good time to remember that investing in foreign equity and bond mutual funds is really a two-part investment: a bet on the underlying asset and another bet on the currency in which the investment is domiciled. Will the dollar continue to juice returns? Probably not for some time.

The currency portion can be substantial. Consider the performance of Morgan Stanley's Europe, Australia, and Far East (EAFE) index, the foreign benchmark for most U.S. investors. According to research conducted by Virginia Parker of Ferrell Capital Management in Greenwich, Conn., close to 65 percent of the return of the EAFE index since 1986 has been attributable to currency fluctuations. Parker says it is not unusual to find that in any given year, half or more of EAFE returns are due to currency alone, and not to the returns of the underlying assets.

This doesn't mean investors should abandon international funds. Economic and business cycles peak and trough at different times in different countries, and the only way to capitalize on these cycles is to be invested in the countries in which they occur when they occur. Several studies have shown that, over time, a portfolio with a good mix of international holdings will outperform a portfolio invested solely in domestic holdings.

But now more than ever, it's crucial for investors to know just how big a role gyrating currencies can have on a fund's return. That's because it's unlikely that investors in foreign markets will continue to reap currency gains at a level anything like the last five years. And if the dollar stabilizes or begins to rise in value, investors will face the possibility of currency losses.

Consider this result of the declining dollar: During the period from 1970 to 1990, $1 invested in Japanese equities returned more than $39. But about $24 (61 percent) of that return was due to the yen's appreciation against the dollar. Similarly, an investor who bought a German equity portfolio worth 100,000 deutsche marks at the dollar's high against the mark in Feb. 1985 would have paid $28,965. At today's exchange rates, without any appreciation or depreciation of the underlying assets, that portfolio would be worth $60,500, a return of more than 100 percent. Smoke and mirrors? Derivatives with hidden losses? None of the above: simply a dollar in steep decline against the deutsche mark.

The dollar has fallen since 1985 partly because of the drop in U.S. interest rates, and partly because of the large supply of dollars held abroad.

The dollar was also grossly overvalued in 1985, which prompted massive dollar selling by the world's central banks as they sought to defend their own currencies. Now the greenback is at historic lows against the yen. Against European currencies, the dollar has been in so steep a tailspin that the Federal Reserve Board and other central banks recently bought dollars to prop up the currency. The administration's efforts to prop up the dollar may not fuel much of a rally in the currency. And it's quite possible the dollar will slide even further. But it is highly unlikely that the greenback will fall as far as it did in the 1980s.

A stagnant or rising dollar can very easily mean diminished returns for investors in overseas portfolios. Since U.S. fund managers did not venture into the world of global investing until the mid-'80s, the beginning of the dollar bear market, they have little or no experience managing portfolios in dollar bull moves.

Ezra Zask, president of Ezra Zask Associates, a fund-management and consulting firm in Norfolk, Conn., says that about two-thirds of U.S. international fund managers do not hedge their currency risk. While this passive approach may have been a boon to returns in this period of dollar weakness, it will have the opposite effect if the dollar turns around. "Look for managers who take a more active role in hedging their portfolios," recommends Zask. "Avoid the more passive, no-hedge policy managers."

Keep in mind, too, that emerging-market funds are usually at full currency risk, particularly because of the danger of currency devaluation.

How the value of the dollar impacts your investments

By Bradd L. Cuppels

The dollar: it's up, down, steady, weak, or strong compared with foreign currencies. Simple, easy terms, but what do they really mean where your investments are concerned?

To begin with, the use of these terms indicates just how "small" the world has become, especially in economic terms. Twenty years ago, our national economy essentially performed as though it was relatively untouched by economic developments throughout the world. Today, the performance of the U.S. economy is directly linked to those of other nations, as well as to developments in their governments and financial markets.

While there are many factors influencing whether the dollar is "strong" or "weak" vs. the Japanese yen, British pound, German mark or French franc, three are key:

•The strength of our economy vs. those of other nations;

•The political stability of the respective governments; and •Comparative interest-rate levels here and abroad.

For example, during the early and mid-'80s, our economy was much stronger than those of our trading partners, while interest rates soared as a result of an influx of foreign purchases of American products and investments in U.S. assets. As a result, our currency was often called the "super dollar" during this period.

However, the dollar began to weaken steadily in mid-1985 as the sales of "costly" American products dwindled abroad, while the demand for relatively inexpensive imported items rose. The stock market crash of 1987 forced the dollar to sink even further, causing the Federal Reserve Bank, the nation's central bank, to reduce interest rates and provide liquidity.

After a period of relative stability, volatility is now rampant, and it's not uncommon to see the dollar move up or down against foreign currencies as much as 10 percent in a single week. In fact, many sophisticated investors with a high risk tolerance have profited by trading on the fast-changing foreign currency market but, experts agree, this is not the place for beginners.

Clearly, the greater the export activity of an American "multinational" company, the more it will benefit from a weak dollar. This is why many financial advisers recommend multinationals as a good investment opportunity.

RANKED BY 5-YEAR RETURNS.
*LIFE OF FUND RETURN AS OF FUND INCEPTION DATE.

With over $10 billion in sector fund assets, only Fidelity offers such a range of choice—with 35 different sector funds.[2] In fact, we've become synonymous with sector investing, providing investors with more industries, analysts, and convenience.

More industries

Only Fidelity has so many strong-performing sector funds. As you can see, we provide many choices that have beaten the S&P 500 on a 5-year basis.

More analysts

To breed success like this, you need to find the right opportunities. Fidelity's 300 analysts visit companies, talk to CEOs, and kick tires with a depth that only Fidelity can offer.

More convenience

Only Fidelity gives you the ability to trade the Fidelity Select Portfolios hourly from 10 a.m.–4 p.m. ET.

No one can promise that tomorrow's performance will be as good as yesterday's, and you may have a gain or loss when you sell your shares. But at Fidelity, we're always investing in your future: industry by industry, stock by stock, hour by hour.

Because we believe our knowledge can be your wealth.

'Average annual total returns for the period ending 9/30/96 are historical and include changes in share price, reinvestment of dividends and capital gains, and the effect of the funds' 3% sales charge. Share prices and returns will vary. If Fidelity had not reimbursed certain expenses for some of the funds during the periods shown, those funds' returns would have been lower. Foreign investments involve greater risks than U.S. investments. Because stocks in a sector fund tend to move the same way, sector funds typically exhibit higher volatility than broadly diversified mutual funds and the stock market as a whole. Paper Prayers on Exhibit

Several students of Cohasset High School art teacher Tom Sippel have contributed work to an exhibit of "Paper Prayers," at the Howard Yezerski Gallery, to benefit the Boston Pediatric and Family AIDS Project.

Each anonymously donated prayer is a 4x12" strip of paper on which the numerous artists (some budding, some very famous) have created a painting, drawing, or calligraphy. For only a few dollars, visitors to the gallery exhibit can buy a "prayer" and thus contribute to the project, which provides care to hundreds of children, women and families who are affected by H.I.V.

Everyone is encouraged to view this dramatic, touching exhibit and to participate in this worthwhile effort.

The prayers will be on display at the Howard Yezerski Gallery, 11 Newbury St., until Dec. 21 (Tues.-Sat., 10 a.m. to 5:30 p.m.).

Holiday Dance at Community Center

The Teen Center is holding a holiday dance for seventh- and eighth-graders Friday, Dec. 13, from 7:30 to 10 p.m. at Cohasset Community.

There will be giveaways, dance concerts and karaoke. Admission is $5. Soda and candy will be available for purchase.

The Teen Center will be open Saturday, Dec. 14, from 7 to 10 p.m.

DRUG FACT

An infant girl is born with her lifetime supply of eggs. If these are damaged, there's no replacement. Cannabinoids collect in the ovaries, a fact proved by radioactively tagged THC (the active agent in marijuana). Dr. Akira Morishima of the Columbia University College of Physicians and Surgeons, has done research with marijuana at 2 percent THC and reported that in the THC-exposed female mice, about half the eggs had died in the mice who were injected with the human equivalency of a woman smoking two joints a day. Of the eggs that survived, 30 percent looked unhealthy.

CANCER TALK WITH TANIA LINGOS, M.D.

PROSTATE CANCER: BREAKING THE SILENCE

Prostate cancer affects a male sex gland that is essential for sexual function and fertility. Potentially life-threatening, like all cancers, the disease also strikes at the core of masculine identity. For men, prostate cancer brings with it fears of impotence and incontinence.

Embarrassed, if not ashamed, by the disease and its consequences, many men have found prostate cancer difficult to accept, never mind discuss. Denial and silence are common reactions. Slowly, however, this reticent attitude is giving way to greater openness.

Leading public figures are speaking out about their battles with prostate cancer which, primarily, affects men 65 years and older. For example, General Norman Schwarzkopf is among those who have gone public with their prostate cancer stories.

This willingness to be candid about something so intimate is needed because, in the fight against prostate cancer, the stakes are high. This year, prostate cancer will strike about 200,000 American men. Of that number, one in five or over 40,000 men will die from the disease.

Many of those deaths could have been avoided if the disease had been detected earlier. As frightening as prostate cancer appears to men, the disease is not automatically fatal. On the contrary, early detection significantly increases a patient's chances of survival and the promise of a better quality of life.

Precisely because early detection is so helpful, the American Cancer Society recommends that men over 40 have a digital rectal exam every year. Furthermore, they recommend that men over 50 have a prostate-specific antigen (PSA) blood test every year. This is sound advice. Early detection is an effective weapon in the battle against prostate cancer. Therefore, if you experience any of the following symptoms, report them to your physician:

- blood in the urine;
- an inability to urintate or difficulty in starting to urinate;
- painful or burning urination;
- need to urinate frequently, especially at night;
- weak or interrupted urine flow;
- back or hip pain.

Reporting these symptoms to your doctor may be uncomfortable, even traumatic. Nevertheless, having them checked is the first step in giving yourself a fighting chance against prostate cancer. Don't suffer in silence.

Next week, we will discuss symptoms in greater detail. For example, the symptoms listed above are not unique to prostate cancer, which is often asymptomatic, and they could indicate other, non-cancerous, medical problems.

More about that in our next column.

Cohasset High to Present 'The Mikado'

Cohasset High School will present "The Mikado," a tale of love, loss and reconciliation, Dec. 13 and 14 at 7:30 p.m. and Dec. 15 at 2 p.m.

During the performance, the gentlemen of Japan, chorus of schoolgirls, nobles and guards will help Nanki-Poo avoid the executioner's axe and find his beloved Yum-Yum.

The event will provide a lively, colorful evening of song and dance.

Staff photos/Alan Chapman

Mikado stars Mark Whitman and Ali Kinchla as Nanki-Poo and Yum-Yum perform a scene from the musical for Deer Hill School pupils last week.

Ron Nicynski is Ko-Ko, the Royal Executioner.

Rachel Begley, Karyn Gray and Leah Kisiel perform a scene from Mikado at Deer Hill.

Override Planned for Spring

Sewer Coming to Central Cohasset

By Mary Ford
COHASSET MARINER

The sewer is coming for sure to about 440 homes in the central part of town, officials said this week.

But what is not certain is how much new and existing users will have to pay for it.

About two dozen Cohasset residents learned at a sewer commission meeting Monday that new users will have to pay about $950 a year in betterment charges for 20 years, based on a home assessed at $280,000. Existing users will pay an additional $220 a year.

But officials will recommend that all taxpayers pick up half the cost through a Proposition 2-1/2 override following an anticipated March town meeting vote to approve the

Cable TV Rates on the Rise

By Charlene Vandini
COHASSET MARINER

Cable television rates in Cohasset and Hingham will be increasing after the first of the new year, and the chairmen of the local cable committees say there isn't anything that can be done about it.

Continental Cablevision notified Hingham and Cohasset subscribers that standard cable service will increase from $26.36 to $28.53 for Basic Broadcast, Cable I and Cable II. Hingham Selectman chairman Iris Daigle said this represents a 8.2 per cent hike.

Lou Russo Continental Cablevision's manager of public and government relations attributed the increase to inflation, and the higher prices the company pays for programming, which it is allowed to pass on to the subscribers. But, she said, some bills may actually go down.

Russo said Cable II will now also include Sports Channel, which had been a separate charge of $9.95 per month. Subscribers of Cable II who also paid for Sports Channel will actually see their bills decrease by almost $8.00.

Basic Broadcast service will increase by 39 cents per month. The monthly cost for Cable I service (CNN, TBS, Court TV, TNT, Headline News, Home & Garden TV and Fx) will increase by 13 cents. The price of Cable II service will be $1.65 higher for those channels that include the channels in Cable I, plus USA, ESPN, MTV, A&E, The Weather Channel, AMC, CNBC, Nashville Network, and others.

As of Jan. 2, cable customers will be able to subscribe to The History Channel for 95

Years Haven't Dimmed Love for Job

Recreation Director Likes His Field

By Mary Ford
COHASSET MARINER

Twenty years ago, a young Marshfield man came to town to head the recreation department, a fledgling new town office.

Now a little older and wiser, Jack Worley, who is still at the helm, hasn't lost any of his enthusiasm for offering fun to Cohasset citizens of all ages.

"You have to like what you do," says the 53-year-old married father of three. "It's a way of life not a job."

Worley says he's been around long enough now to see former youth program participants coming back with their children.

But between the 80-to-90 programs offered today and the emerging department back in 1976 — are years of turning the department from one paid for entirely through taxes to one that is self-supporting.

Although the recreation department still offers the free summer concert series, which is sponsored by the American Federation of Musicians and the South Shore Playhouse Associates, and doesn't charge for the annual egg hunt — Cohasset citizens today participate in everything from youth sports camps to dog obedience classes for a fee.

Worley recalls that complaints came early on when the department found it had to charge or be eliminated under the constraints Prop. 2-1/2 placed on town budgets.

The tax-cap law, passed in 1980, limits the amount a

Lobster Lab Proposal Backed

In a Dec. 5 letter to selectmen, Jim Kinch, 77 Forest Ave., said the supported the lobster lab proposal presented to selectmen by Kevin Ulmer.

"The concept of the 'Lobster Lab' is an exciting and revolutionary alternative for the Hagerty property, one that offers significant upside possibilities for turning a potential blighted property into a treasured asset," he wrote.

Kinch praised the Lightkeepers as a "local grassroots group with a proven track record in the successful resurrection and development of the now financially stable Lightkeeper's House."

"I see little at risk to the town. At least, give this proposal a full opportunity to bloom," he wrote.

DPU Policy Statement Sought

In a Dec. 9 letter to the consumer division of the state Department of Public Utilities (DPW), Hull Town Manager Philip E. Lemnios asked the DPW develop a policy statement on what citizens can dispute in their water bills. Hull, Hingham and north Cohasset are on Hingham water, provided by Mass.-American Water Company, a private entity. Mass-American is charging users about 154 percent more on their bills to help pay for a new water treatment plant in Hingham. The rates were approved by the DPU.

"If reasons for disputing a bill are not articulated, citizens may dispute bills and ultimately lose water service because they are unaware of the proper reasons to dispute a bill," Lemnios said.

He said the policy statement should address the following:

- What types of items are disputable;
- What is the process to dispute a bill;
- Who should be contacted with questions, complaints or concerns.

Lemnios said plans are to publish the statement in local newspapers in the three communities and make copies available at the town halls for general distribution.

DPW Status Report Issued

In his status report to selectmen, DPW Supt. Harold Litchfield listed his accomplishments for November:

Cleaned basins, pipes and tidal gates during heavy rainstorm; dug trenches on Sohier Street and at the lower end of the common area to relieve excess water buildup; repaired tidal gates at James Brook; excavated, graveled and "loamed" area opposite the front entrance at the Deer Hill School;

Did infra-red patching on North Main Street, Summer Street, and Cedar Street; repaired body on DPW #3 truck; did hot asphalt patching at various locations throughout town; repaired and mounted sanders;

Welded areas on snow plows that were then sandblasted and painted; cut trees on King and Pond Streets in conjunction with Eastern Utilities; fertilized the common area and all schools; raked and disposed of leaves; and prepared for five funerals.

Litchfield said department goals for December (weather permitting) are as follows:

To install tanks, pipes, and the leaching field at the DPW garage site; cut and cleanup in front of St. Stephen's Church on South Main Street; cut and stump area at Beechwood cemetery; and trim back roads for the plows and sanders to go through.

DPW Issues Snow Reminder

Residents are reminded that the Department of Public Works does not have the funding or manpower to open up any driveways that have been plowed in by snow coming off the plows while snow removal crews are clearing the roads.

The department suggests that residents wait until the roads are cleared whenever possible before shoveling the ends of their driveways.

The DPW apologizes for any inconvenience this may cause, but stated that the situation is unavoidable.

Town Meeting Articles Needed

Selectmen noted this week that articles for the March 29 annual town meeting must be submitted by Jan. 13. Citizens petition articles for the annual town meeting require signatures of ten registered voters while those on the special town meeting warrant require 100 signatures.

Don't Move Handicapped Spot

Katherine Stanton of Clay Spring Road wrote to selectmen this week asking that the handicapped space at the corner of Depot Street and North Main Street not be moved.

She was responding to a request from Dr. Ronald H. Goldenson that this pace be moved nearer Stage Coach Way so handicapped patients can easily walk to the office.

"Do you realize that space is the only one accessible to the senior center? It is needed where it is," Stanton wrote.

Hagerty Committee Likes Lobster Lab Use

But Parking is a Concern

By Jason Bouffard
COHASSET MARINER

Cohasset may be on the verge of finding out a whole lot more about lobsters.

The Hagerty Committee, charged with finding a use for the coastal 2.2 acre site, voted 5-4 last week to give their blessing to local oceanographer Kevin Ulmer's proposal to use the Victorian house on the property as a scientific research facility.

Selectmen will have the final say on what happens to the former showroom of Cohasset Colonials. They planned to take the matter up at their meeting last night (after the Mariner went to press).

Hagerty Committee chairman Al Moore was outspoken in his belief that the project is a worthwhile one.

"In the last couple of years, we've been searching for a really good use for that house, but no one has really come up with anything.

"If somebody has a short-term use for it, that's great. That's what we're looking for," he said.

Ulmer said even if the lab does not work out long-term, the Hagerty house would have been refurbished to accommodate the lab.

Moore said that he would be troubled by the prospect of a tenant that could jeopardize the surrounding area, but did not feel that Ulmer's lab presents such a risk.

"This isn't a terrible risk to take," Moore said. "This really has no down side, just that if it doesn't work out, we're back to where we are right now in a few years."

Some members were concerned that the lab may present parking problems in the area. In the event that the building's parking lot filled, cars would have to be left along Parker Avenue. Ulmer reasoned that the seasonal usage of the parking lot would complement the lab-related use. After the summer passes, the lot is predominantly unused, he said. High school students, representing the majority of the traffic coming into the lab, would likely come more frequently during the school year, after the summer traffic has subsided.

"If somebody has a short-term use for it, that's great. That's what we're looking for."
— Al Moore, chairman of the Hagerty Committee.

Also, there was concern that if the lab receives federal grant money, townspeople might lose their right to park on the premises. The adjacent lot is currently used in the summer by boat launchers, but committee members were unsure if federal grant would affect the parking situation.

In a press release issued Dec. 14, R. M. Campbell, president of Cohasset Lightkeepers Corporation, which wants to lease the house from the town and rent space to Ulmer for his lab, said no federal or state grants would be accepted because they would place restrictions on the town's current or future use of the property.

Ulmer also addressed criticism that the lab would not correlate strongly with the school curriculum, stressing that close ties are not necessary for success. He pointed out that science is a discipline learned best by doing. Students coming to the lab would learn about science even if the nature of the studies did not match up formally with the school curriculum.

While he did say that the studies performed at the lab would be geared specifically to high school students, the lab would be open to field trips for all grade levels from schools within and outside the town. He also hopes that the facility, which is to include an aquarium and research library, will attract people of all ages.

"The hope is to make it inclusive, not exclusive. I'd want it to be as broad as possible," Ulmer said.

While he doubts if adults would be attracted to the lab's research faculty, he is optimistic that the aquarium and periodic lectures would interest a broad audience.

Ulmer stressed that the project would not impose any costs to the town, rather, it would be funded by grant money, as well as donations. The Cohasset Lightkeepers Corporation has voted to invest $10,000 in the project.

While no other funding has been actively sought, plans are to begin the search as soon as the proposal is approved.

Ulmer said that the lab study could not be carried out as planned at an inland site.

"To do the study inland changes the focus," he said.

Moore said it was time to move ahead.

"If somebody can do something with the property and not really limit our options for the future, then let's do it," Moore said.

Water Resources Grant Clears First Hurdle

The grant application filed by the Cohasset Water Resources Protection Committee with the Mass. Environmental Trust for a $15,000 public education project has cleared the first hurdle, approval by the Trust of the Committee's Letter of Inquiry for the grant.

"Only about one-third of all letters of inquiry received were approved by the Trust," said John McNabb, committee chairman. "We now need to complete a full application of the January 10 deadline, and expect to get a decision by March 10."

The grant proposal is to fund the Aaron River/Lily Pond Watershed Protection and Public Education Project, said McNabb, which would include a first-time ever public information mailing to all residents of the watershed, which lies in Cohasset, Hingham, Norwell and Scituate, and an update of information and mapping of the watershed area.

McNabb also stated that the Committee will be meeting on Jan. 8 to discuss potential articles for the warrant of the March 29 Annual Town Meeting. One of these will be a proposed drainage control bylaw.

"Flooding has been a continual problem in Cohasset," said McNabb. "Since flooding and inadequate drainage control threatens water quality as well as property damage, it is appropriate for the Water Resources Protection committee to explore potential solutions to this problem."

The Committee is also looking for an interested citizen to fill an existing vacancy. Please call chairman John McNabb at 383-6202 if you are interested.

town can increase its tax levy without a successful override vote.

Worley says, for example, the recreation department didn't charge for its popular summer playground program until 1980.

"From no fee to $12 was hard to swallow," he says.

"But today no one assumes anything is free anymore," Worley says. "Now the program is $140 for seven weeks and it's still a bargain."

He explained that over the years, fees have been kept down by offering more programs and contracting the summer sports camps out which saves on staffing costs.

"We are fortunate that there is not much overhead," he says about the department and praises the many volunteers who have multiplied ten fold over the years.

Worley explained that after Prop. 2-1/2, Cohasset adopted a state provision to establish "revolving account," a financial mechanism to enable the department to be self-supporting so revenue collected goes back to the general fund to offset the cost to the taxpayer.

Before coming to Cohasset, Worley served for three years as Marshfield's first full-time recreation director.

Worley applied for the Cohasset position because Cohasset was more like Catamet (near Bourne) where he grew up.

He got into recreation after studying business for a year after which he spent four years in the service, including a tour in Vietnam, and then started all over again in recreation management at Northeastern University.

Worley recalls that after he came to Cohasset he expected to get the program rolling and move on.

"But then I realized I enjoyed it here and certainly wanted to stay," he says. "Now I think of Cohasset as more my community. I have to ask my neighbors what's happening in Marshfield."

Recreation Department director Jack Worley stands outside Cohasset Town Hall.

Questions on Sewer Project Aired

Following an overview of the planned central Cohasset sewer system Monday, several residents had questions about the estimated $12 million project.

John Chapman, 25 Virginia Lane, asked if residents on private ways would have pay additionally for the service and was told private ways are covered.

However, the sewer department will look for easements from abutters, project manager Daniel Coughlin said.

Carol McDonald, 44/46 Summer St., asked if state funding was assured.

Sewer commission chairman Ted Guild said the town has a commitment from the state in writing that it will subsidize the project.

Ed Goff, 4 Ledgewood Dr., and Nan Roth, 7 Highland Ave., were concerned at how the "Equivalent Dwelling Units" (EDUs) are determined

Guild explained that apartments with two or more bedrooms are considered "EDUs" and the landlord would have to pay betterment charges as if they were separate houses. Operating and maintenance costs would be based on usage. In other words, an apartment building with two, two-bedroom units would pay double the betterments under the current plan.

Asking why a six-bedroom home is one EDU and three, two bedroom apartments are three EDUs, Goff called the EDU system "ludicrous."

But Coughlin said apartments, which have their own kitchens, bathrooms and washing machines, can generate as much waste water as separate homes.

"I think that's discriminatory," Goff said.

Guild explained how the EDUs are determined can be defined differently. He said perhaps a two-bedroom apartment could be 3/4 an EDU.

"Maybe we can taper it more as we go," he said.

Coughlin pointed out that the betterment strategy is a long way off and can't be assigned until after the sewer system is constructed.

"I can't vote for something if I don't know what it will cost me," Goff replied.

In response to another question, Guild said that new homes in central Cohasset built after the sewer goes in will be able to connect. In north Cohasset there is less flexibility, he said, because the town is restricted on how much wastewater can go to the Hull treatment plant. Homes in north Cohasset will be connected via a sewer main to Hull; those in central Cohasset will be hooked up to the town's treatment plant on Elm Street.

Joe McElroy, 59 Windy Hill Rd., asked if there was any way to tie the subsidy for north and central Cohasset projects and on-site septic system improvements together into a single override question in the spring.

Guild said "it is our objective to have a single override question."

He said if the on-site program, which is being developed by the board of health, fails at town meeting, the sewer projects will still proceed.

Coughlin also explained that some homes would have the gravity system and others, where there is a lot of ledge, would have a pressurized system with a pumping unit installed below ground. When there is a lot of ledge going deep with the gravity system is too expensive.

Russ Bonetti, Parker Ave., asked what would happen in an extended power outage and the pumps couldn't operate.

Coughlin explained that the tank holds 40 gallons. But the town will have portable standby generators available.

He said construction on the central Cohasset system should begin in the spring of 1998.

Assuming there is no health problem, Guild said those homes, which have failing septic systems but will get sewers, can be given a waiver from making Title V repairs from the board of health.

project.

An override is needed because the cost of the subsidizing the project cannot be absorbed within the existing tax base.

These amounts do not include maintenance and operating costs or the cost of about $40 per foot of bringing the sewer line in from the street to the house, expenses which will be borne entirely by the user.

Last spring town meeting voters approved a $6.2 million sewer project for about 345 homes in north Cohasset. A subsequent override to share the cost with all taxpayers narrowly failed at the ballot box on April 6.

Selectmen said they will combine subsidizing both the north and central Cohasset projects in an override this spring and think with two sections of town affected, the override has a better chance of passing.

If the combined override passes, a taxpayer with an average home would see a tax increase of about $150 a year. Existing sewer users in central Cohasset would pay an additional $110 a year, and new users would pay an additional $475.

North Cohasset residents would also benefit. As it stands now, homeowners in north Cohasset are faced with paying 100 percent of the cost of sewering, amounting to about $870 a year in betterment charges —costs that would be cut approximately in half with the override.

Once the projects are completed, about 40 percent of the town will be on sewers.

At this time, it is not clear if officials will also seek taxpayer subsidy for septic system improvements for homeowners in non-sewered areas of town. Under Title V, the state environmental code, the board of health is working on a septic management plan to identify and upgrade problem septic systems.

Those facing Title V repairs could get relief through low-interest loans, grants and possible further subsidy from the town through an override.

The town is under a court order to solve its sewer woes and could face steep fines if it doesn't move forward. The north Cohasset or "Straits Pond" project is part of an inter-municipai agreement with Hull which pressured Cohasset to expedite the project. Cohasset has been blamed for contributing to the pollution of Straits Pond, an area of critical environmental concern.

The central Cohasset project includes upgrading the existing waste water treatment plant with discharge into Cohasset harbor and adding sewer service to about 45 streets in the central part of town and the Deer Hill and new Osgood School.

Cable TV Rates

cents per month. Later in the year, it will be offered in a package that includes Sci-Fi Channel, Comedy Central, Bravo, Cartoon Network, fxMovies, and Classic Sports Network for about $3 per month.

Continental Cablevision serves 5,722 households, which is 72 per cent of the households in Hingham, and 2,138 households, or 69 per cent, in Cohasset.

Both Jim Morrison and Rob Hillman, chairmen, respectively, of the Hingham and Cohasset cable TV committees, said this week that the towns have no control over cable television rates, which are regulated by the state Cable Television Commission and the Federal Communications Commission, through a formula or process which Morrison called "arcane and mysterious."

"It's more mysterious than the IRS Code," he said.

In addition, the rates cannot be a factor in the towns' license renewal processes, they said.

Both towns cable television licenses expire in 1999 and negotiations on the renewals have begun.

Short of cancelling service cable television subscribers have few alternatives at this time, but that is changing, Morrison said.

The Cohasset cable TV committee plans to survey subscribers to see what kinds of programming they want. Cohasset cable subscribers will also be asked about the quality of service from Continental Cablevision.

Small digital satellite dishes can bring more than 100 channels into viewers' homes, at a cost that is comparable to Continental Cablevision's service. He explained the small satellite dish is mounted on the south side of the house, and is linked to a descrambler box for which the customer pays a monthly fee.

While digital satellite dishes can provide more channels and more choices for viewers, Morrison said, it does not receive the local broadcast outlets. Viewers may receive CNN from Atlanta, but not Channel 5 in Boston. To do that, the viewer would switch off the satellite system and use the antenna for the local station.

Morrison noted that beyond satellite dishes, NYNEX is building an antenna for wireless cable television service. The antenna in Needham has a range of a 35-mile radius and could ultimately be in competition for cable television subscribers.

But some cable TV subscribers do not want more stations, just different ones than are currently being offered.

Hillman said the Cohasset cable TV committee plans to survey subscribers to see what kinds of programming they want. The local cable committees cannot regulate programming, and cannot specify a channel but can request a category. For example, the committee cannot ask for CNN but can request a 24-hour all-news station; it can ask for a local sports channel, but not NESN.

In addition, Cohasset cable subscribers will also be asked about the quality of service from Continental Cablevision, he said.

There are no plans to survey Hingham cable subscribers, Morrison said.

Hillman said his committee has received few complaints about Continental Cablevision, and he believes Cohasset residents are satisfied with the PEG (public, education, and government) service provided, which includes televising selectmen's and other town government meetings.

From his counterparts in other towns, he has learned that more people are believed to watch selectmen's meetings than was expected when these meetings were first televised. Some have noted that "the selectmen dress better."

Continental Cablevision does not televise selectmen's meetings in Hingham, and Russo said there are no plans to do so at this time, unless the selectmen request this service. She noted that any residents who wish to volunteer to do this will be trained. Recently Hingham selectman Martin Crane said he has no objection to televising the meetings, but chairman Iris Daigle was not enthusiastic.

Town administrator Charles Cristello said the Hingham selectmen will send a letter of complaint to Continental Cablevision over the rate increase. Since the federal government deregulated cable service, Cristello said, the rates should be going down.

He is particularly unhappy with Continental Cablevision's failure to complete the institutional network--or I-Net--which will link the computer systems at the town office building, schools, public library, police and fire stations.

CANCER TALK WITH TANIA LINGOS, M.D.

TREATING PROSTATE CANCER

Prostate cancer is treatable. Moreover, the control rate for the disease is high. This is especially so if the cancer is caught before it has spread beyond the prostate and into surrounding tissue or bone. Indeed, according to the American Cancer Society, 85% of prostate cancer patients who find out in time survive. The benefits of early and regular testing for the disease cannot be overstated.

Deciding on the appropriate treatment, however, frequently presents the individual with the dilemma of choice. Each treatment option must be balanced not only against the age and general health of the patient, but also against how far the cancer has advanced. Furthermore, defeating prostate cancer takes a toll. Few patients escape experiencing some bowel changes, usually temporary.

Nevertheless, the medical profession is constantly refining the available treatment options. We are also finding new ways to minimize their side effects. At present, the most common treatment options are surgery, radiation and hormone therapy.

Surgery, or radical prostatectomy as it is formally called, is the surgical removal of the entire prostate gland. A major and invasive procedure, radical prostatectomy usually requires a week in the hospital followed by months of recuperation at home. Surgery works best when the cancer is not advanced and if the patient is younger and in good health.

Radiation therapy offers two options — external and internal radiation treatment. With external radiation, the cancerous area is targeted by high-energy x-ray beams five times a week over a seven to eight week period. An out-patient procedure, external beam radiation takes a few minutes each day. It deals effectively with cancers that are confined to the prostate, and in shrinking larger tumors.

With internal radiation, tiny radioactive seeds are implanted within the prostate gland. The procedure requires a hospital stay of about two days. The radioactive seeds do not cause discomfort and remain in place permanently. More recently, temporary implants have been developed. Over a period of six to nine months, the seeds emit radiation which destroys the prostate's cancer cells.

Radiation is sometimes used in conjunction with surgery or systemic therapy. Radiation targets the affected area of the prostate in a direct fashion. As such, radiation is a localized treatment option, as is surgery. If, however, the cancer has spread beyond the prostate, a more system-wide treatment option such as hormone therapy may be required. Hormone therapy eliminates a man's natural supply of testosterone, which fuels prostate cancer.

Of course, this is not a complete guide to prostate cancer treatments. There are other options such as cryosurgery whereby liquid nitrogen is used to freeze and destroy the cancer. In addition, occasionally, it might be advisable to adopt a policy of "watchful waiting" whereby the cancer is monitored.

As you and your physician decide on the appropriate treatment option for you, be sure to remain informed about all options.

Next week, we will focus on breast cancer, which strikes 200,000 women every year.

Readers Respond to Planners' Letter on Station

Results of Reader Call-in Survey Question for Dec.12.

Selectmen are angry that the planning board sent a letter to state officials, pressing for a commuter rail station in Cohasset Village, after the selectmen voted for a station site on Route 3A.

Which of the following statements most closely reflects your position on this subject?

1 The planning board has statutory authority and therefore should make the final decision on the train station location.

19 The selectmen speak for the town, and the planning board was wrong to usurp that authority.

5 Selectmen and the planning board are both independently elected boards and are well within their rights to notify state officials of their recommendations on this subject.

Your comments:

Put it on the ballot and let the people decide.

I don't think we've furthered our options with the boat- game, along with the bus. The tracks are already there. It would cost less and make a central station available to many, many people on the South Shore. I think the selectmen from all the towns are by-passing the issue.

I applaud the planning board for doing what they're charged to do. They've shown leadership that the selectmen haven't shown. It seems the selectmen will pander to any minority group that shows up at a meeting, and will disregard the desires and best interests of the town as a whole.

I think this bickering between the selectmen and the planning board distracts from the real point which is that the Town of Cohasset needs professional planning help to help our boards make a decision on where the train station should be located, as well expressed by Dan Cotton in his two letters to your paper.

The planning board was 100 per cent out of line in usurping the power of the selectmen. The selectmen were correct in listening to what the people wanted. The people of the town were educated on the issue and those who were concerned made the effort to vote.

My feeling is that the planning board is better equipped to make a decision, versus the selectmen.

I'm in favor of the selectmen speaking for the town. It's very obvious to me that the planning board represents business and business only. The selectmen have paid attention to the poll and listened to the people. Obviously the people don't want the train station in the middle of the town.

The planning board job description makes it more fitting to choose the station site.

I think it's important that the selectmen and the planning board work together, but several of the other town boards, too. This is a critical issue for the town's future. It's essential that they work together, based on facts and information and put some money towards research and answering questions. Although they're both independent, they need to work in concert with each other as well as with other town boards which can offer expertise and guidance.

"It's a major deficiency," he said.

The cable committee in Hingham will become more visible in the coming year, Morrison noted, as it negotiates the license renewal with Continental Cablevision. Vacancies on the committee have been filled and include two attorneys and two telecommunications engineers.

While some subscribers will be unhappy with the rate increase, he noted, Continental Cablevision is upgrading its system and is now replacing coaxial cable with fiber-optic. This will allow more and faster service, including long distance telephone and internet access.

Hillman likened the change-over to the difference between "the Holland Tunnel and a drinking straw": more information can travel through the fiber-optic.

Morrison speculated--and Russo confirmed--that Continental will be able to "bundle" cable television service with internet access and long distance telephone services, perhaps offering the latter at a discount for its television subscribers.

Chamber Pitches in for Cohasset Food Pantry

We begin by extending kudos to Cohasset Chamber of Commerce — they held their annual holiday party recently and invited members, friends and coworkers. Each partygoer paid $12, and all proceeds benefit Cohasset Food Pantry. Isn't that a great way to support a worthwhile cause? We think so!

Have you seen the Minot Light Christmas ornament that Flemings is featuring this year? It is so special and features highly detailed designs done in 24-karat gold plate. And did you know Flemings is going to donate $2 to Cohasset Historical Society for each ornament they sell? Definitely makes everyone a winner! Another great gift idea!

Must say it really is nice to see our downtown windows so festively adorned! And the Common, with all the houses with their candles in the windows lit; the trees downtown; and the window boxes, Cohasset Hardware window looks so festive, and be sure to check out Tina's talents when you go b! In fact, don't just go by, go into all the stores and give them your support and business! That will make everyone happy!

Speaking of downtown and stores, we were really saddened to see Ceres Market close — we thought the St. Onges did a super job of making the storefront attractive and appealing and hope they have a wonderful future in whatever they choose to do next. Also hope that we can benefit from their advice to have something done about the parking problem downtown.

News comes our way from Bowdoin College. Seventh-seven students from Massachusetts have been designated James Bowdoin Scholars at the school, and Cohasset's own Johanna R. Horn, Class of '98, is among them. She was among 343 undergraduates accorded recognition by the college for distinguishing themselves in scholarship.

The designation as James Bowdoin Scholar honors James Bowdoin III, who was the earliest patron of the college and instrumental in its founding in 1794.

We're proud of you, Johanna!

Here is a story that will make you think Christmas! A lady in our town purchased a "Tickle Me Elmo" doll and a Barbie holiday doll. For anyone who knows about the wish list of many kiddos, these are at the top!

Anyway, this same wonderful gal donated the dolls to her church to be auctioned off, with proceeds benefitting the church! More than $200 was raised. Congratulations to that fine lady!

The following is a list of students from our town who are featured in the 30th annual edition of "Who's Who Among American High School Students": Justin P. Buckley; Lauren A. DeVito; Lilian V. Faulhaber; Karen D. Niessink; Angela R. Parisi; Caitlin Walsh Connolly; Caroline DeLima; Robert Meehan; Kelley O'Donnell and Julie Smith.

We applaud Todd C. Harrington, son of Mrs. Cherylann Harrington, and Matthew K. Lewis, son of Mr. and Mrs. Kevin F. Lewis, who made the honor roll at Xaverian Brothers High School for the first marking period. Todd earned Ryken honors (90 percent and above) and Matthew achieved first honors (85 percent and above).

If you are wondering why you didn't see Rebecca L. Golden "around town" this fall, it is for a great reason! Becky, a junior at Colby College, Waterville, Maine, is spending the fall semester in Spain as a matriculating student at University of Madrid under the auspices of the Hamilton College in Madrid program.

Rebecca, the daughter of Steven and Amy Golden, is majoring in international studies at Colby. In fact, her mom, Amy, had the pleasure of a visit with Becky in Spain when she traveled there this fall. They had a wonderful time! Hopefully we will get lots more details from Becky upon her return!

Did you know that two teachers from Cohasset Jr./Sr. High School, Maureen M. Duffy and Corinne Suzan Hughes, are honored by their former students in the fourth edition of "Who's Who Among America's Teachers, 1996"? All the teachers being honored were selected by their former students who are listed in "Who's Who Among American High School Students" or "The National Dean's List." The students were requested to nominate teachers who "made a difference in their lives" by helping to shape their values, inspiring interest in a particular subject and/or challenging them to strive for excellence.

According to an announcement by Dean Francis L. Donelan, Joanna M. Larrabee, daughter of Joseph and Joan Larrabee of Hammond Avenue, has been named to the honor roll at Newman Preparatory School, Boston.

To qualify for this honor, a student must maintain an average of 85 or higher in each major subject for the first half of an academic semester. If Joanna continues this excellence in achievement for the fall semester, Sept. 9 to Jan. 17, she will be appointed to the dean's list! Good work, Joanna!

We wish Steve Leighton a very happy 80th birthday. His big day will take place Dec. 25! Hope it's the best one yet!

That brings this week's column to a close. 'Tis the season for lots of news, so please let us hear all about you and yours! Give me a jingle!

EDITORIALS & OPINIONS

When the Holidays Hurt

Holidays can hurt. For many families, social gatherings, gift-giving and reunions during the holiday season are a source of joy and happiness. For others, however, financial difficulties, painful childhood memories and family tensions lead to exhaustion and ragged nerves. Extra demands on parents' time, energy and pocketbooks make coping with children especially difficult for those mothers and fathers who are already under stress.

When the holidays hurt, what can parents do?

First, we must try to leave painful childhood memories in the past. It's important to remember that we can't make up for things that went wrong in the past, whether the situation was created by us or others. This is anew year, and we have the opportunity to create our own new traditions and memories.

Secondly, we can learn to have realistic expectations. The Brady Bunch and the Cosbys do not exist. We can remind ourselves that TV Christmas specials represent entertainment, not reality. Our real-life holiday may include sick children, tired adults and loud relatives. If our expectations for happiness are realistic, our chances for disillusionment will be less.

Also, we can make sure that holiday planning and parties fit into our regular work and play schedule. It isn't necessary that we go to every party to which we are invited, or that we have extravagant decorations or menus. We can remember that all this frantic activity is for a 24-hour time span. Just one day.

Most of all, we need to be with people during the holidays who are good for us — not toxic. Spending time with people who nurture us is a special part of the holidays, and is one of the ways we can take care of ourselves, now and throughout the rest of the year.

During this holiday season — and all year round — Parents Anonymous is just a phone call away, offering free services to families through its telephone hotline and its support group network. For information about a chapter near you, or just for a friendly chat, call 1-800-882-1250.

Parents Anonymous is at 140 Clarendon St., Boston.

Pupils' Comments Disheartening

To the Editor:

I was disheartened to read in the Dec. 5 Mariner "What Christmas and Hanukkah Mean to Me," written by Cohasset children.

The answer according to these young ones is not much. Their ignorance equalled only by their self-centered replies is a sad commentary on their knowledge of what Christmas and Hanukkah really are.

'Nerd' is a Compliment

To the Editor:

Would it help those who seem to be embarrassed by the term "nerd" to be told the word may come from the Inuit language? According to Eskimo legend, Nerd was a hunter of superior skill. Because he used his brain a little more than other hunters, he caught more seals, lived in better igloos, and was extremely popular at the communal snuggle parties. Other hunters, some of them stronger, were happy to pull his sled, because he had a deeper understanding of the environment, animal psychology and many other things and thus could best lead them to good hunting and away from bad ice.

Eskimos don't ever punish children, rather they encourage development of self-worth. They teach by setting good example, and by telling stories about role-model Nerd and his equally smart sister.

Actually, it's a very recent legend.

Army Corps Wants Answers

Asks About Rail Alternatives

By Alice C. Coyle
COHASSET MARINER

After reviewing the draft Supplemental Environmental Impact Report (dSEIR) on the Greenbush Project, the Army Corps of Engineers said the MBTA may have to go back to the drawing board.

As the lead federal agency reviewing the project, the corps has raised several concerns about the report's findings especially on rail alternatives such as commuter boats, the guided busway and the Hingham Square tunnel option.

Hingham's Greenbush coordinator Alexander Macmillan, who said he is pleased the army corps is making sure the MBTA dots its "i's and crosses its "t's," is happy to see alternatives like the tunnel being put back on the table.

Macmillan and many rail opponents have criticized the MBTA for not giving a fair or accurate assessment of non-rail transit options in their environmental impact studies.

"One of the problems I've had with the MBTA's consideration of alternatives is that they've outlined them in ways that cripples them from the outset," Macmillan said.

And in a letter to MBTA Manager of Environmental Affairs Andrew Brennan, District Engineer Lt. Colonel J. Michael Bradbury seemed equally skeptical.

Based on the information in the draft report, Bradbury said the army corps was "unable concur at this time" with the MBTA's dismissal of several of the transit alternatives to commuter rail.

"This gives legitimacy to our argument that alternatives including the tunnel were not given adequate consideration," Macmillan said. "Now the MBTA has to come up with the answers to questions they haven't so far answered."

If the corps questions cannot be satisfactorily answered, further environmental review, including another environmental impact statement could be required, Bradbury said.

But Brennan, who met with army corps representatives Tuesday, said that a report being prepared will address the concerns raised. And should the corps require another environmental impact statement, Brennan said he is confident the project will stand up against any scrutiny.

"If it's required then so be it," Brennan said. "We can get this through any federal environmental review."

Macmillan remains unconvinced and maintained that the MBTA underestimated the army corps review of the project.

"It may have been a miscalculation on their part that the army corps would not take their responsibility as seriously as they have decided to do," Macmillan said. "They're looking at more than wetlands and the crossing of navigable waters."

Macmillan has long maintained that MBTA officials decided to forego federal funding on the Greenbush spur of the Old Colony rail restoration project and cover the costs with state money in order to evade tougher federal environmental review. He said that would have forced them to look more closely at and possibly choose an alternative to surface rail in Hingham. That segmentation of the project is the basis for Hingham's lawsuit against the MBTA.

Alexander Macmillan maintains that had the MBTA put the tunnel in the project five years ago when it was first suggested, the Greenbush line would have already been built and at a substantially lower cost.

"The army corps is giving the project the scrutiny that we think it deserves and I'm still hopeful that we might reach an agreement on one or more of these alternatives," Macmillan said.

A long-time tunnel proponent, Macmillan continues to suggest the tunnel might be an affordable mitigation measure when the impacts on Hingham's historic district are added up.

"I think they've overstated the cost of the tunnel,' said Macmillan, who maintained that had the MBTA put the tunnel in the project five years ago when it was first suggested, the Greenbush line would have already been built and at a substantially lower cost.

But according to state transportation officials, the tunnel's high price tag eliminated it as an alternative more than a year ago.

"We're talking about a $26,000 per foot tunnel, that's very expensive," said Brennan, who noted that while it would eliminate some of the visual and noise impacts it would create many impacts of its own including damaging buildings without foundations.

"It's an incredibly expensive way to avoid a few impacts," he said.

The guided busway option, which would involve running articulated buses along the Greenbush right of way is another commuter rail alternative on which the corps requested more information. Vastly unpopular by both rail opponents and proponents when first floated by the MBTA, Brennan said the busway's ridership would not meet clean air quality standards being mandated by the state.

At best, Brennan said the busway would have about half as many riders as projected for commuter rail. At worst, the number would be more like 20 percent, he said. Visual, noise

Septic System Upgrade Approved

The health board approved an upgrade of a septic system over the concerns of the abutter who said the plan should have further study.

Judge Hiller Zobel has sold his home at 294 Jerusalem Rd. and is replacing the septic system there.

Robert Sturdy, a neighbor at 270 Jerusalem Rd., who is also the chairman of the planning board, said the new system could exacerbate existing drainage problems in the area.

Water traveling through old underground drains, the high water table, and the amount of ledge in the are keep parts of the property "too wet for walking."

A large pine tree in his yard, near the Zobel's property line, fell over because the roots had rotted from the damp ground, he added.

"I suspect that the situation that is bad today will get worse."

Sturdy also questioned the plan that called for running the new pipe to a barn on the Zobel property where the prospective owners want to install a bathroom. This, Sturdy said, raises the possibility that it will become a two-dwelling property. With the barn connected to the septic system, it could easily be converted into an apartment, possibly without obtaining the necessary building permits.

Engineer Philip Spath the proposed location for the new septic system is the best site on the property for it. He added that any renovations to the barn to make a new bedroom there will require a reduction of one bedroom in the house, and therefore will not increase the amount of waste water discharged from the property.

Health Agent Dr. Joseph Godzik agreed that the proposed septic system site is the best location for it. There was no reason to test other areas due to ledge and steep slopes elsewhere on the property.

But the board said the septic system connection to the barn could wait until such time as the new owners make renovations to it. The pipe would be run under an unpaved section of driveway so there would be no additional work later to dig up new pavement.

Army

and traffic impacts locally would be greater and more frequent with 85 buses running through Greenbush grade crossings instead of 24 trains each day, he said. And once the buses merge with traffic on the expressway, Brennan said there is no counting on getting to work on time, as snarled traffic, accidents and snow storms will halt not only cars but the buses as well.

"On a bad accident day, you're going to sit in traffic," he said.

Brennan said answers like these and others should clear up any concerns the Army Corps of Engineers has and he is hoping for a finding of no significant impact (FONSI) on Greenbush allowing the MBTA to move ahead in the permitting process.

Macmillan on the other hand hopes the army corps' concerns will get the attention of state Secretary of Environmental Affairs Trudy Coxe.

"It's important to give Trudy Coxe a chance to direct this thing under the umbrella of MEPA," said Macmillan, who would like to see more scoping sessions and public hearings on alternatives in addition to another environmental impact statement. MEPA is the state Environmental Protection Act.

The final environmental impact report on the $215 million Greenbush line is due out late in the spring of 1997 and MBTA officials are still shooting for late 1999 for trains to start rolling on the 17.7-mile rail line. Work continues on both the Middleboro and Plymouth lines which will open for service next September, Brennan said.

Treasures Offered at Consignment Shop

Avoid the traffic and overwhelming crowds and come to Cohasset Consignment Shop off Route 3A in Cushing Plaza. The shop is open Monday through Saturday from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Come view the designer black cape embroidered dramatically in the back with yellow flowers, an Oscar de la Renta ball gown and numerous mink Andazurene fur coats and jackets. There are also handmade sweaters for Tiny Tim, scarves and bells for the Seven Dwarfs and handknit mittens for the Three Little Kittens.

Also featured are William Adams plates copied from a 1780 Chinese pattern and one of the first of its style produced in English pottery, along with an array of music boxes, stuffed toys, eclectic cookbooks, designer jewelry, beaded evening and leather bags, tuxedos and tweed jackets.

Shoppers will help support a variety of programs offered by the Social Service League, which serves Hingham, Hull, Norwell, Scituate and Cohasset.

Gender Gap in Views of Stadium Plan

By Steve Adams
COHASSET MARINER

When it comes to local legislators' views on the latest Boston football stadium proposal, it matters less which side of the party aisle you're on, than which side of the gender gap.

"If Bob Kraft wants to build a stadium, he ought to raise the money privately," asserted Rep. Janet O'Brien, D-Hanover. "I really don't see any need for the public to provide any money for a facility which has only private benefits, including benefits to multi-millionaires."

But three male South Shore legislators say if Patriots' owner Robert Kraft is willing to privately finance the construction of the stadium itself, they're leaning in favor of taxpayers chipping in $65 million in road and utility improvements to the surrounding area.

"It seems to me that basically Mr. Kraft is willing to finance the thing privately and what he's looking to the government for is road improvements. It seems to me that's our function," said Rep. Fran Marini, R-Hanson.

O'Brien, Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray, R-Cohasset, and Rep.-elect Kathy Teahan, D-Whitman, all said they oppose the use of any taxpayer funds to support Kraft's stadium plan.

According to published reports, Kraft wants to lease Massport-owned land along the South Boston waterfront and build a 70,000-seat stadium with a $200,000 loan from BankBoston.

State Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, likes the stadium plan better than previous proposals for a convention center in South Boston, just north of the proposed stadium site. Hedlund was the only senator to vote against a $1 million study of a Megaplex proposal in the past session.

"What I know of Kraft's proposal so far, and my colleagues aren't saying this, may make more sense than the rough plan I've heard on the convention center," said Hedlund. "I like neither, but if the taxpayers have to foot the bill, the stadium makes less nonsense than what I'm hearing on a convention center."

Hedlund said he is wary of the possibility that the convention center might be run by the Massachusetts Convention Center Authority, "the same people who have mismanaged the Hynes Convention Center."

Hedlund, Marini and state Rep. Frank Hynes, D-Marshfield, agreed that government may have a responsibility to provide improvements such as parking, road construction in the form of a direct route from the Central Artery and possibly an MBTA stop near the stadium.

"There may be a legitimate role for the state to play in infrastructure improvements," said Hedlund.

"I think it's come a long way from the discussions we've had the last couple of years," said Hynes. "I've been a supporter of a convention center provided it is funded by the private sector, largely hotel and entertainment taxes. I think it's reasonable to suggest (public financing of infrastructure improvements) because not simply the stadium but the convention center itself would require more direct access to keep it off neighborhood roadways.

> "If the taxpayers have to foot the bill, the stadium makes less nonsense than what I'm hearing on a convention center."
> State Sen. Robert Hedlund

"Both the stadium and the convention center would generate high volumes requiring a direct route in and out. It seems to me that's an appropriate government function," he said.

Hynes did express reservations about the implications of tax dollars being used to indirectly subsidize "ever-increasing disproportionate contracts of prized athletes."

Another drawback of the stadium plan, Hynes noted, is the fear that Kraft might move the Patriots out of Boston in a few years anyway, if he can find a more attractive facility in another city.

Marini does not see that as a problem.

"So what?" he asked. "They're not going to take the stadium with them. So if someone is willing to spend $200 million of their own money to build a facility in the capital city of Massachusetts, in exchange for maybe a 'T' stop and some access to the Central Artery, and they leave in five years, you've still got the stadium."

Marini said he did not understand South Boston residents' opposition to the stadium, noting that the parcel is located more than a mile from the nearest residential neighborhood. He questioned why Patriots' fans would want to use local streets in South Boston if a direct access from the Central Artery were provided.

But Murray said she would respect the wishes of the neighborhood residents.

"I don't think the people of South Boston want it there," she said. "I'm a very strong Home Rule type of person. If my district doesn't want something, I don't want it, and the same goes for other districts."

Legislators also disagree on whether the stadium would generate off-site economic development.

"If the arguments can be made it will generate jobs, and make Massachusetts more attractive as a place where people will come and tourism dollars will be spent, yes, I think you will see some reception for that," said Hynes.

O'Brien said unlike a convention center, a football stadium has no spillover benefit on the surrounding community.

"I just think a convention center provides a lot of benefits a sports stadium does not provide, as far as tourism and business," O'Brien added. "People who go to games drive to the stadium, park, leave the game and drive home."

Murray echoed O'Brien's comments.

Crisis Center Seeks Donations

Quincy Crisis Center is planning Christmas dinner for needy families on the South Shore who cannot afford to purchase a traditional meal or gifts for their children.

Donations of turkeys, stuffing, gravy, fresh produce, rolls and homemade desserts are needed, along with new toys and children's clothing, which will be distributed with the holiday dinners.

Financial donations are also welcome. A $10 contribution will purchase a turkey, and $25 will cover the cost of an entire meal for a needy family. Tax-deductible contributions may be mailed to Quincy Crisis Center, P.O. Box 31, Wollaston 02170.

Food and gift donations may be brought to Quincy Crisis Center. For directions and details, call 471-7075.

Stadium

have been built around the country have proven to be a boon," Murray said. "When they talk about people coming into Boston, avid football fans, they fly in and fly right out again. They don't frequent restaurants anyway."

Teahan, whose husband Bob is a former Patriots' scout, would rather see money spent on programs that benefit the South Shore.

"I just feel it's too much of a risk and there are other priorities for people's tax dollars," said Teahan. "The consensus around here when I ran in 1995 (in a special election) was we needed to use our money for other things, to encourage economic growth."

State Sen. Michael Morrissey, D-Quincy, said he hasn't received enough information to form a strong opinion.

"I don't think there's real strong support for financing a stadium," said Morrissey. "I think you might find support for infrastructure improvements. But $65 million seems pretty high."

He noted that the state allocated millions in transportation bond bill improvements to the Foxboro Stadium area a few years ago.

Regardless of whether local lawmakers are supportive of Kraft's proposal, Marini said Boston legislators may decide the fate of the plan. Hedlund said the support of Mayor Thomas Menino will also be key. Menino last week urged Kraft to abandon South Boston and consider putting the stadium in another neighborhood.

"If the mayor and the rep.'s in that part of town can get behind something, I think you'll see tremendous momentum," Hedlund predicted. "The governor didn't want to get out front and create the perception he was trying to ram something down the throat of the neighborhood. They really have the power, I think, to prevent this from happening."

DPW Budget is Presented

DPW Supt. Harold Litchfield jokingly asked selectmen to "go easy" because it's his first budget for the combined highway, tree & park and Recycling Transfer Facility (RTF) departments, a merger that was approved at the 1995 annual town meeting.

Litchfield submitted a $825,635 fiscal 1998 budget up from the $790,442 appropriated for this year. Selectmen approved the budget request last week.

The budget includes money for the DPW operating budget, cleaning brooks and streams, and capital budget items.

Litchfield said he put in a $5,000 line item this year for cleaning up James Brook near Smith Place. The money will be used to rent an excavator and hire an operator for 64 hours, he said. The DPW is concerned about damming caused by debris build up in James Brook. In October, the town flooded when James Brook overflowed after a heavy rainstorm.

Litchfield would also like to buy a 20 horsepower leaf vacuum for $4,299 which will be used to pick up leaves between walls and the street.

Selectman Nan Roth likened the leaf vacuum which will suck leaves up into the back of a truck to "an anteater."

Selectman Michael Sullivan said the vacuum was a "great idea."

Litchfield will submit a separate article covering the cost of tearing down the highway garage in the town parking lot. The garage will no longer be needed once the new one at the town landfill is completed.

"The day we move in, we should tear it down," Roth said.

Litchfield requested $395,393 in salaries, up from $380,755 and $117,795 in general expenses.

MARINER'S GALLEY

Visions of Sugarplums

By Carole B. Carroll
COHASSET MARINER

I love to give (and receive) delicious, homemade, calorie-laden confections. They make perfect hostess gifts and are warmly received by co-workers as well. Recycle large glass jars, cover the jar lids with decorative foil or wrapping paper rounds and tie with shiny ribbon and a holly sprig. For a more home-spun look, use small rounds of scrap fabric for the jar lids and tie with raffia or yarn, tucking in a small candy cane. Buy small, inexpensive baskets and line with pretty paper, a small piece of fabric or a festive cloth napkin. Garnish the goodies with sprigs of fresh greens and baby's breath tied with ribbon. Here are some ideas for gift-giving from the heart of your home ... confections from your kitchen.

This is so easy and so delicious ... similar in appearance to a divinity.

WHITE CHOCOLATE PECAN "BARK"

Yield 1-1/4 pounds

1 lb. top-quality white chocolate, finely chopped
1 Tbsp. unsalted butter
1 Tbsp. vegetable oil
1 cup toasted pecans, coarsely chopped

Line a baking sheet with aluminum foil. Using a double boiler, melt the chocolate with the butter and oil over hot, but not boiling, water, stirring constantly until the chocolate is melted and smooth. Remove the top part of the double boiler from the pan and stir in the pecans. Pour the chocolate mixture onto the prepared cookie sheet. Spread out to desired thickness; mixture does not have to cover entire surface. Refrigerate until set. Slide a metal spatula under the chocolate to loosen from the foil. Break into uneven pieces and place in a foil-lined decorative container. (If not ready for gift-giving right away, store in an airtight container in the refrigerator up to one week).

This is such a festive-looking cookie. My holiday baking would seem incomplete without a batch.

SHORTBREAD STARS with CHOCOLATE GLAZE

Yield 4 dozen

Shortbread:

1-1/2 cups salted butter, softened
1 cup powdered sugar
1 Tbsp. vanilla extract
3 cups all-purpose flour

Preheat oven to 325 degrees. Using an electric mixer at medium speed, blend butter until smooth in large mixing bowl. Slowly blend in powdered sugar. Scrape down sides of bowl and add vanilla; combine thoroughly. Add flour and combine at slow speed until well-blended. Divide dough into two equal portions. Flatten into a disk and wrap in plastic wrap. Refrigerate until firm, 1-1/2 to 2 hours. On a floured surface using a floured rolling pin, roll out each disk to 1/8-inch thickness. Turn dough if necessary to prevent sticking. Cut cookies with a 2-inch star-shaped cookie cutter (dip cookie cutter in flour occasionally). Bake on an ungreased cookie sheet for 15 to 18 minutes; do not let cookies brown. Transfer cookies immediately to a cooling rack.

Chocolate glaze:

1/4 cup heavy cream
1 cup semisweet chocolate chips
2 tsp. light corn syrup

Heat cream in small saucepan until scalded, then remove from heat. Stir in chocolate chips and corn syrup; cover and let stand for 15 minutes. With a wire whisk or wooden spoon, gently mix glaze until smooth. Dip half of each cookie into glaze and transfer to a wax-paper-lined cookie sheet. Chill dipped cookies in refrigerator until chocolate is set.

This is an addictive sauce. Serve it over vanilla ice cream topped with crushed Reese's Pieces and a chocolate-glazed shortbread star (recipe above) tucked on the side.

MILK CHOCOLATE PEANUT BUTTER SAUCE

Yield 1-1/4 cups

1 Tbsp. unsalted butter
1 Tbsp. packed light brown sugar
1 Tbsp. light corn syrup
1/4 cup smooth peanut butter
1/2 cup half-and-half
4-1/2 oz. milk chocolate, chopped pinch of salt
2 Tbsp. water

In a heavy saucepan, melt the butter, brown sugar and corn syrup over moderate heat. Stirring constantly, whisk in the peanut butter and the half-and-half; bring the mixture to a simmer. Add the chocolate and salt and whisk until smooth; whisk in the water. Cool and then refrigerate up to a week until gift-giving time. To present as a gift, pour into a glass jar, cover jar top with a decorative fabric round, and tie with your favorite ribbon. Reheating instructions: Heat in microwave or double boiler until warm.

This was my friend Reggie's signature hostess gift. It's no wonder she received so many invitations!

Continuing its long-standing tradition of helping people, PINE STREET INN volunteers have been seeking donations at Independence Mall in Kingston again this year. They will be in front of the Gap this weekend, December 20-22. You can find them Friday evenings and all day Saturday and Sunday. The volunteers are working hard on the Inn's "GOOD NIGHT CAMPAIGN." For a $10 donation, which provides someone with a hot meal and a warm bed for the night, you'll receive a beautiful hand-painted ornament.

These beautiful ornaments are great stocking stuffers and hostess gifts. Pick up one or two for yourself (you can give one to the person who surprised you with an unexpected gift). They really add something special to your holiday decor. In addition, knowing the donation goes to a very worthy cause adds to the spirit of the season.

Stop by Independence Mall and see the PINE STREET INN pushcart in front of the Gap this weekend.

Christmas Meal Program for Elders

South Shore Elder Services, Inc., will be coordinating a Christmas meal program for homebound elders in South Shore towns, including Hingham and Cohasset.

The organization will coordinate families who would like to share part of their holiday meal with an elder in their town. Local hospitals and nursing homes will help with the preparation of the meals, which will be delivered by volunteers.

Anyone willing to share a meal from their home or deliver meals provided by SSEE's nutrition program is asked to call the Susan Lambropoulos at the agency's main office at 848-3910.

Watch Out for Scams

As the holiday season approaches, scam artists kick into high gear. Realizing this, Cohasset Elder Affairs hosted a presentation on fraud and financial exploitation. Brian Lelio, investigator for the Plymouth Country District Attorney's office senior protection team, conducted the session and included the following tips in his presentation:

• Be wary of telemarketers who state you have won a prize. In order to obtain the prize, you must first send money to cover postage and handling. You may receive an inferior prize or no prize at all. In addition, the telemarketers then sell the names to another company, which, upon realizing the senior was willing to send in money to obtain a prize, will hound the individual. To receive legitimate prizes, no money should have to be sent.

• Never give out credit card or social security numbers over the telephone unless placing a mail order. With the advent of computers, even individuals with unlisted telephone numbers are not immune to being contacted by these organizations. Those obtaining unlisted numbers then sell the list, which is more valuable since the numbers are unlisted.

• When contacted by telephone, be polite but hang up. If interested in making a donation to the organization or receiving a prize, investigate before sending money. Once the money has been sent, it is almost impossible to get it back.

• Other scams include installations of driveways. Residents are contacted at their homes and convinced they can get a good deal. The materials are often inferior and not appropriate for repaving driveways. With the first heavy rain, the driveways wash away, resulting in a hazardous waste situation. Use extreme caution when approached.

• Only deal with reputable contractors. Information on registered contractors may be obtained from the Attorney General's office, which keeps track of, and documents complaints against, registered contractors.

During the past year these contributions have been significant, enabling the library to make purchases and increase services which would have been impossible within the library budget. Donations to the Friends made it possible to:

• Install lighting in the rotunda, thanks to a special gift from Shirley and Jim Marten, to highlight the McIvor Reddie murals which were restored last year with a gift from the Pilgrim Cooperative Bank;

• Purchase an Apple computer and printer for the children's room;

• Begin a CD Rom collection for children;

• Purchase a table for the reference computer;

• Increase a book collection;

• Design and purchase bookmarks for adults and children;

• Fund a summer reading program and puzzle club to improve children's reading skills;

• Renew family passes to The New England Aquarium, The Museum of Fine Arts, The Museum of Science and The Children's Museum and provide a new pass to The Computer Museum.

In addition, the Friends help organize the annual fundraising book sale, host receptions for talented artists and authors, as well as for the many volunteers who donate their time at the Library.

Now the Friends of the Cohasset Library ask for donations from the community to aid in funding projects for the coming year. Please send your tax-deductible contribution to Friends of the Cohasset Library, 106 South Main St.

The very best books and toys for the children on your list are only 10 minutes from home!

Happy Holidays

Salvation Army Women's Auxiliary Angel Tree at Independence Mall

The Women's Auxiliary of The Salvation Army, Plymouth, MA has placed "Angels" at the Independence Mall, Kingston for individuals and families to adopt.

The "Angels" are children whose families have applied for Christmas help this year. More than 200 children will be assisted through the Angel Tree this Christmas.

Lt. Shaffer, Commanding Officer, noted that, "It is through the cooperation of the Women's Auxiliary and the Independence Mall that many children will be able to have a happier holiday, because a gift will be there on Christmas Day".

The Angel Tree runs from December 11-17, 1996.

Kate Schroeder

Local Dancer in 'Nutcracker'

Kate Schroeder of Cohasset is performing in "The Nutcracker" as Cavalry this year. She has been a soldier and candy cane in the past. Kate, who is a student at Boston Ballet School's Norwell studio, joins 13 other Cohasset ballerinas, who were featured in the Cohasset Mariner Nov. 21. They are part of a cast of more than 450 young dancers from the Greater Boston area who perform the roles of toy soldiers, angels, cherubs, dolls, baby mice, reindeer, lambs, polichinelles and party children in Boston Ballet's production of "The Nutcracker" at the Wang Center for the Performing Arts through Jan. 5.

Performing in full-length ballet exposes students to aspects of ballet life they don't experience in regular ballet class. The students learn about the hard work, rigors and enjoyment that goes into every facet of a live ballet performance.

Tickets for "The Nutcracker" are available by calling Ticketmaster at 931-ARTS or in person at the Wang Center box office, 270 Tremont St., Boston.

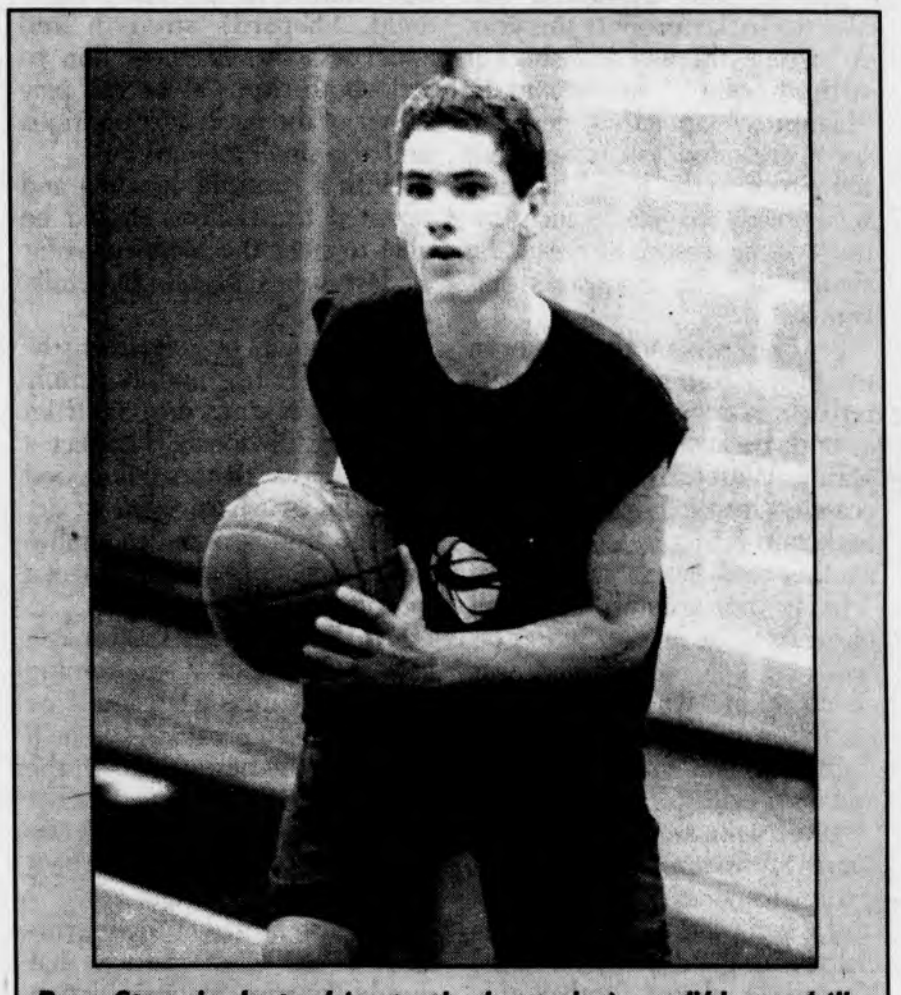
Hoopsters Drop Norwell, 60-51, in OT

Skippers Punch in for Overtime



Ryan Story looks to drive to the hoop during a JV hoop drill.

By Jim O'Sullivan
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

In its first game of the season, the Cohasset Skippers basketball team squeezed out a tough victory over a talented Norwell squad. Led by junior Paul-Michael Quintin's 24 points and senior Ryan Bishop's 15 rebounds, the Skippers had to go to overtime in a Noisy Norwell gym to beat the Clippers 60-51, despite trailing 27-20 at the half.

Quintin started the game, and the season, with a lay-up off the glass, but it soon became the J.L. Williams Show. The senior forward knocked down a three pointer and hit two free throws on the next possession. Jamie Buick snaked his way under the hoop for a lay-up and Williams pulled the trigger from the corner. Williams' defense and rebounding set up Quintin, who hit the trey, pulling the Skippers within two after a Norwell run. Bishop hit a free throw and Williams hit a pair, making it 23-17, Clippers. Quintin's three at the half gave Cohasset 20.

Cohasset came back in the second half, starting off with Bishop, who picked up two buckets. In transition for most of the second half, the Skippers collected many of their points on the run. Pat Hurley fired to Quintin for the lay-up. Burke Davis spotted up and netted a three and Hurley sank two free throws. Williams grabbed an offensive board and put it back, pulling the visitors within two. Quintin's three pointer edged them ahead and the Boys in Blue would not trail again. Buick hit a lefty lay-up and Quintin nailed another three, this one from the corner, giving Cohasset an eight-point lead and charging up the sparse Skipper crowd. Buick picked up two more and Bishop hit a clutch free throw. Norwell tied it at 47. Cohasset, however, couldn't hit two free throws and the game went into OT.

Bishop tore down an offensive board and kicked it out to Quintin, who tossed in another three. Davis took and sank a technical free throw and hit another from the line, putting Cohasset ahead by three. Buick, Quintin and Davis all nailed a pair of foul shots and the game was over.

Head coach Ron Ford was pleased with the effort.

"I'm very proud of my kids," he said. "They won that game because they expected to win it. If we expect to win and the game is tied with five minutes left, we're going to win. We got two huge efforts tonight from two junior rookies; Hurley and Buick. They were both unbelievable.

"My coaching staff, Mark Hall and Mike Cohen, both made adjustments in the second half. We went to the zone defense so we could collapse down on (senior center Matt) Lewis. That made the difference."

Seventh Graders Shine in Gymnastics Win

By Joe Reardon
COHASSET MARINER

The first mark the Cohasset High gymnastics team wanted to reach this season was a score of 121.

It took the Lady Skippers one whole meet to reach it as Cohasset swept two events to easily defeat Duxbury, 122.5 — 105.15.

Tara Hettstrom took first place on the bars with a score of 7.35 as Erica Hettstrom and up-and-coming, seventh-grader Caitlin Flint finished in a tie for second (7.15), and seventh-grader Carlie Carter was third (6.95).

It should come as no surprise with the strong performances in the first meet. Head coach Erin Sutherland was pleased with the condition the girls were in during the preseason and the four-night, 2-1/2-hour practices per week only increased their strength.

"I can't believe how in shape they are," Sutherland said. "These girls are very healt conscious.

The seventh graders have the coaches excited as well.

Assistant coach Ruthann Ardizzoni said both Flint and Carter should contribute enormously to the team this season, but there is little pressure on either of them.

"They're just having fun," Ardizzoni said. "They're going out there and having a ball."

"They bring a lot of depth to the team," Sutherland said. "They're working hard and are very valuable to the team."

Cohasset's best performances came on the balance beam with Flint's scintillating 8.3. Jodi Colwill and Kristin Sheerin were right behind at 8.2 and Erica Hettstrom's 8.0 was good for third.

Kate Collins was the lone Duxbury winner, taking both the vault and floor with 8.2 scores. Colwill was second on the vault (7.85) and Kristen Reynolds rounded out the top three with her 7.55.

Tara and Erica Hettstrom were second and third on the floor exercise with an 8.1 and 8.05, respectively. Erica Hettstrom beat out Colwill in the all around, 30.7 to 29.9.

"It's going to be a good season," Sutherland said, "but it's going to take a lot of hard work."

Junior Kristen Reynolds executes a wolf jump on the balance beam with great amplitude.

Cohasset High gymnastic captains will be the team members to set the lead for head coach Erin Sutherland's (third from left) squad. The captains include Jodi Colwill, Megan Pratt and Erica Hettstrom.

Hoopsters Look to the 'Promised Land'

By Jim O'Sullivan
SPECIAL TO THE COHASSET MARINER

Coming off an 18-7 basketball campaign last year, the Cohasset varsity basketball team continues its quest for a state title. The Division 3 South Sectional champs and EMass finalists for two years running, the Skippers are looking to reach the promised land. Under head coach Ron Ford, a pack of hungry seniors is ready to do some South Shore League damage.

Senior center Ryan Bishop is a three-year varsity player who blossomed into a star last year with his tremendous work on the boards. Bishop upped his game at tourney time and helped carry the Skippers to the Division 3 EMass finals. In the Skippers' dramatic upset win over SSL champs Scituate, "Bish" dove on the floor in crunch time, exemplifying his will and commitment to winning.

Ford calls senior point guard Burke Davis "fundamentally, the best defensive player in the program." Davis's tenacious defense allows him to cover the opposition's best guard. However, this captain's game isn't limited to defense. Possessing a lethal three-point shot that can stymie opponents, not to mention his ballhandling skills, Davis serves as a multi-talented floor general.

J.L. Williams is another senior who should loom lard in the SSL this season. A power forward and deadly three-point marksman, Williams cleans the boards as well. Last year, his specialty was grabbing an offensive board in traffic and putting it back up for two points. Combine these talents with quiet hustle, a blue-collar work ethic and determination, and Williams spells trouble for Cohasset's foes.

Brian Kilroy, another senior forward, didn't waste his offseason. Kilroy hit the weight room, bulking up and getting ready for another season on the hardcourt. Kilroy has emerged bigger and stronger, prepared to bang bodies with the front-court heavies for rebounds. His fierce work ethic can only enhance his pretty jump shot and stifling defense, giving Ford another weapon with which to work.

Senior captain Matt Belson brings a hard-nosed demeanor to the Skippers. Coming off a football season where he was voted a SSL All-Star, Belson should see time as both a guard and forward. Also, the lead singer for the Skippers' a cappella quartet "The Fab Four" Belson's wit loosens the team's mood, but he never loses focus on the victory. Belson should prove to be a worthy captain this year.

Senior Grant Emde also comes off an outstanding autumn on the gridiron. Emde, a speedy guard who seems to chalk up a steal every time he's on the floor, can make things happen. Perfect for an up-tempo game, he seems to draw on a seemingly limitless supply of energy to keep going. Emde's towel-waving intensity will help ignite the Skippers when they need it most this year.

Paul-Michael Quintin is spending his second year on varsity this season. Unlike most sophomores, who spend their rookie season on the bench, Quintin filled a starting role last year and consistently pumped three-pointers. This year, Quintin's job will be even bigger as he completes the backcourt duo with Davis. More scoring responsibility will rest on Quintin this year, but he appears ready.

Justin McNamara also saw time on varsity last season. A point guard with excellent ball control and quick feet, Mac's rookie year earned him a glimpse at the big time and he handled the pressure well. This season, he joins a corps of talented juniors who should not only help out the Skippers, but help guide them to a state championship.

Junior Andy Hamilton will also see backcourt duty this year. A strong three-point shooter with solid fundamentals, "Hammer" appeared destined for a great football season, but fell victim to the injury bug and was unable to play much for most of the season. However, he should aid the hoopsters this winter.

Pat Hurley is another junior in this group. Also the varsity quarterback, Hurley should see time at both backcourt positions this season. With textbook form and ceaseless hustle, Hurley will be a backcourt leader in Cohasset for another two years.

Jamie Buick, another football player, was the leading scorer on last year's JV squad and was added, along with Hurley and Hamilton, to the tourney roster. A great athlete with fluid moves and superb leaping ability, "Snake" will start in the front-court this season.

John Kasameyer also excelled on JV last year. A rebound specialist with good defensive skills, Kasameyer played football this fall, starting on the offensive line. Hopefully, Kasameyer will contribute to a winning season for Cohasset.

Sophomore Jamie DeMichele, a running and defensive back this autumn, stepped into JV last year as a freshman and proceeded to raise his game until he won the starting role. With great quickness and jumping ability, DeMichele has an incredible knack for finding the bottom of the net.

Both DeMichele and sophomore Raheem Shepard will see time on both JV and the parent club this season. Shepard is another football player and he, too, starred in this year's backfield. Shepard's strength and quickness should allow him to help both teams as he can play either of the backcourt positions and also small forward.

With a versatile, hustling and talented team, Ford should be able to steer the Skippers as far as last year's squad, hopefully beyond.

"We should be solid this season," said Ford, "and, hopefully there won't be any drop off from last year. Obviously, I expect a lot out of our seniors. It's a good team, but we have work to do. I'm getting good leadership from my seniors and we expect a lot this year."

Ford pointed out Bishop as a key. "He's 6-foot-9 and coming off a great tourney last year," he said. "Ryan's a great kid and he'll be one of the best players in the league. Burke Davis is another important player for us. He's our point guard and captain and he'll be big this year."

Ford also hinted at "new wrinkles" in the team strategy that should surprise Skipper Nation this year. An interesting, fun season lies ahead and it remains to be seen whether this year's edition will reach its potential.

Ford's Hoop Clinic On Tap

The Cohasset Recreation Department, in conjunction with the Cohasset Basketball Boosters Club will offer Cohasset High basketball coach Ron Ford's Holiday Vacation Basketball Shooting Clinic for girls and boys, grades 4-8. The 1996 clinic will be held at Cohasset High School's Sullivan Gym, starting Thursday, Dec. 26 to Saturday, Dec. 28, from 9 a.m. to noon each day.

The three-day clinic, directed by Ford, will focus on the development of fundamental offensive skills, designed specifically for grade 4-8 players. Students will receive instruction in ball handling, shooting, balancing, positioning skills, etc., helping make participants better offensive players.

To register, complete registration forms that were handed out at basketball registration, or pick up a registration form at the recreation office, first floor, town hall, and return it to the recreation department as soon as possible as space is limited.

The fee for this unique opportunity is $60 per participant, which includes a clinic T-shirt. Checks should be made payable to Cohasset Basketball Boosters Club. This is the fifth year the Winter Shooting Clinic has been offered through the sponsorships of the Good Sport Sporting Goods Store, Route 3A, Cohasset, the Basketball Boosters Club and the recreation department.

Astronomical Society to Meet

The South Shore Astronomical Society is a family-oriented club established in 1958 and is open to any family or individual with an interest in astronomy. The club is currently undergoing a reorganizing effort to better serve the interest and assure that the club will continue to do so for many years to come.

The club's 1997 season is hoped to be particularly interesting and exciting, with the arrival of the very bright comet Hale Bopp. Everyone is welcome to become involved in the club.

The society meets on the first Wednesday of each month at 7 p.m. at the Council on Aging, 293 Pine St., Norwell. The club also holds viewing sessions twice each month, weather permitting.

For information and observing times, call Louis A. Gentile at 545-7067 or 447-2744 for a recorded message.

Christmas Services at St. Stephen's

Christmas services at Saint Stephen's Episcopal Church, 16 Highland Ave., will feature a variety of worship celebrating Christ's birth. The Christmas Eve Family Holy Communion service will be held Tuesday, Dec. 24, at 5 p.m. The Cherub and Saint Gregory Children's Choirs will sing, and junior high youth will present a dramatic reading of the Christmas story.

The Festal holy Communion Service of Christmas Eve will begin at 11 p.m., preceded by a special program of Christmas music beginning at 10:30 p.m. The Saint Stephen's adult choir with Music Director Fredrick Guzasky will offer music, which will include the 16th-century French carol, "Ding Dong! Merrily on High" and "All My Heart This Night Rejoices" by Johann Ebeling. The traditional story from the Gospel of Luke will be read from the King James Bible, and candlelight will illumine the singing of "Silent Night." The bells of the church carillon will ring out the music of Christmas.

Worship on Christmas Day, Dec. 25, will be at 10 a.m. Sunday worship will be held at the regular times, 8 and 10 a.m. New Year's Day celebrates the Holy Name of our Lord with worship Jan. 1 at 9:30 a.m.

The church school is busy preparing an Epiphany Pageant to take place Sunday, Jan. 12, at 5:30 p.m., celebrating the appearance of Jesus to the three Magi representing all the world. Children will portray angels, shepherds hurrying to Bethlehem, Joseph and Mary with baby, and the three Magi. The pageant concludes with the lighting of candles, which represent taking the light of Christ out into the world.

Computer Classes Offered

South Shore Community Center still has a few openings in the Computer Kids classes, which are held Tuesdays or Thursdays.

Adult computer training, "Computer for the Novice Re-entering the Work Place," will be offered beginning Wednesday, Jan. 8, from noon to 2 p.m. for 10 weeks ($190/members; $199/non-members).

An Excel course will begin Wednesday, Jan. 8, running for four weeks from 6 to 8 p.m. The cost is $90 for members, $98 for non-members.

Class size is limited to five students to ensure individual attention.

For more information or to register for a class, call 383-0088.

Book Angel Program

In the spirit of sharing holiday happiness, Buttonwood Books & Toys in Cohasset and Buttonwood for Kids in Hingham will give a 15 percent discount on books purchased through their Book Angel Program.

Books selected at Buttonwood in Cohasset will go to children and adults served by Wellspring in Hull. Books purchased at Buttonwood in Hingham will be gifts for children served by Hingham Interfaith Food Pantry, Mary Martha Learning Center and the South Shore Educational Collaborative Teen Parent Program.

The Book Angel Program provides an opportunity for children to understand the deeper meaning of the holidays. For further information, call Buttonwood at 383-2665 or 749-2665.

Carousel of Light

The first lights of the Friends of the Paragon Carousel Carousel of Light have been turned on and are shining brightly. They were lit Dec. 5 and will shine through Jan. 6. The Carousel of Light offers all lovers of the former Paragon Park Carousel a way to show their support this holiday season.

For every $5 donation, the Friends will light another bulb on one of the 20 strands encircling the carousel.

The event was begun last year as part of ongoing fundraising efforts to save the 68-year-old Paragon Carousel. The Carousel of Light is designed to again help ensure a secure future for the carousel as the Friends work toward raising nearly $500,000 by June 1998. If successful in their drive, the Friends will receive a $100,000 challenge grant set aside by Massachusetts Historical Commission for the carousel. Combined, the two will retire all outstanding mortgages just three years after the agreement to purchase the carousel was signed.

Sponsorship of a light or lights may be made in the donor's name or in the name of a loved one. All donors or honorees will be published in a carousel donors list at the end of the year.

Donations should be sent to Friends of Paragon Carousel, Carousel of Light, P.O. Box 100, Hull 02045.

New Year's Day Cruise

On January 1, Friends of Boston Harbor Islands is sponsoring its annual New Year's Day trip to Thompson Island for a quiet day of walking along the shoreline or exploring the 157 acres of woods, marsh and fields there. Guides will offer tours. Walkers should dress warmly and bring food and a camera.

The group will sail on MV Outward Bound, departing from the street side of Black Falcon Pier in the Marine Industrial Park off Summer Street, South Boston. Parking is available.

Private bus service is also available. The boat departs at noon and returns at 4:30 p.m. Tickets are $10, $9 for seniors and $6 for children ages 4-12. Tickets are available dockside on a first come, first served basis or in advance by calling (617) 740-4290.

For transportation information or details, call the number listed above.

Meet the Directors of Cabaret

Dust off your dancing shoes, practice those scales and join the cast of the 35th annual Hingham Community Center Cabaret. Show dates are Jan. 30, 31 and Feb. 1.

A Meet the Director party is scheduled for Sunday, Jan. 5, at 3 p.m. at the community center. Open auditions will be held for anyone interested in performing a solo, specialty number or comedy spot. Interested individuals are asked to bring any materials needed, including sheet music for the pianist or special props. A cassette player will be available to play taped music. Casting and rehearsals begin Monday, Jan. 6.

For more information, call Blanche at 749-2511 or Willie at 293-7108.

Tickets will go on sale to the general public Monday, Jan. 20, at the community center. Tickets are $12 for the Thursday performance; $15 for Friday and $17.50 on Saturday. Tickets may be purchased for tables of 10 or individually.

The winner of the raffle will win a trip to Las Vegas for four days and three nights. Raffle tickets are available at several stores and at Hingham Community Center. The individual who sells the winning ticket also wins the same trip.

Environment Workshop Offered

The Children's Creativity Workshops is offering a special vacation session for boys and girls ages 8-12 Dec. 30 and 31.

Young artists will choose an environment which they will interpret in miniature with colored clays. In the first session, the setting will be constructed; in the second, the accessories will be sculpted. Many techniques of creating with the medium will be demonstrated.

For further information on the special session or about ongoing children's creativity workshops, call 749-2453.

New-home warranties suffer cracks in the foundation

Edited by Elizabeth MacDonald
WORTH MAGAZINE

Several years ago, James Blythe's $150,000 home in Warrenton, Va., began listing to port. Cracks fissured the walls; doors and windows could no longer be closed in their warped frames.

YOUR MONEY'S WORTH

Blythe took comfort in his 10-year new-home warranty, which he assumed would cover the $34,000 in damages his house had sustained. But his confidence may have been misplaced.

Home Owners Warranty Corp., in Arlington, Va., which insured Blythe's builder, went kerflooey in late 1994 after state insurance regulators discovered the company was short $45 million. The bankruptcy rocked the home warranty market, leaving homeowners adrift in confusion.

Home warranties were created in the 1970s to pay for repairs to new houses if the builder was unable to do so. To secure coverage, builders paid warrantors a premium, which was passed along to buyers. A typical warranty provides 10 years of coverage against major structural flaws and mechanical defects, and shorter periods of coverage for less-serious problems. By 1994, HOW, the largest of six national home-warranty companies, covered two million new homes with 10-year warranties, commanding half the market.

HOW wasn't the only large warrantor to experience financial difficulties, though. In 1993, the next-largest home-warranty company, Home Buyers Warranty Corp., based in Aurora, Colo., was placed under supervision by state regulators after the insurance company that backed it failed to meet a new, higher capital reserve requirement. The company resumed normal operations in September of that year, after the insurance company received an injection of new capital.

Blythe is one of about 1,500 homeowners with HOW warranties who have filed warranty claims that have yet to be settled. And because HOW is paying only 40 cents on the dollar on claims for homes built in the last decade, these people may be stuck paying for thousands of dollars in repairs. More than 1.5 million other homeowners will wind up with completely worthless warranties should the company go out of business.

This does not surprise homeowner advocates. According to Jordan Clark, president of the United Homeowners Association in Washington, D.C., the purpose of warranties is less to indemnify new-home buyers than to provide cheap protection for developers. For example, warrantors often charge builders just $600 for a 10-year policy on a $300,000 home, leaving themselves vulnerable to big losses. And though home warranties are supposed to cover all major structural damage, many warrantors try to avoid payment by including a clause stipulating that a house must be unsafe, uninhabitable, or unsanitary to qualify for a claim. According to R. Jean Fischer, founder of the Ridgemere Institute, a home-warranty consumer group in Nashville, this practice violates insurance laws.

"Warranties are deceptive and give the homeowner a false sense of security," says D. Brent Lemon, a Dallas attorney who has filed

'Warranties are deceptive and give the homeowner a false sense of security.'

D. Brent Lemon
Attorney

dozens of cases against HOW. They may even limit a buyer's rights.

For example, in Texas, homeowners by law get four years' worth of protection against construction defects, while the average 10-year warranty provides two-year coverage. If Texas homeowners accept the builder's warranty, they lose the more extensive state-mandated protection.

In an effort to protect themselves, warrantors have begun to clarify their contracts. Residential Warranty Corp., for example, "now makes a point of writing 'limited' continuously throughout its warranty," says Tom Bothell, a company spokesman.

Federal and state oversight of this business is lax, so it's up to home buyers to protect themselves. Read the warranty carefully and be sure you understand the extent of its coverage. Most warranties cover only defects in manufacturing and materials for one year, and don't cover such nonstructural damage as flooring or furniture ruined by flooding. However, a home insurance policy can be used to fill in those gaps.

Anyone signing a contract on a new home should check the builder's references, licenses, and insurance. Fischer recommends that home buyers review floor plans and code inspection reports, talk to architects and local inspectors, and pay an independent soil engineer the few hundred dollars it costs to determine if the home is built on solid ground.

Homeowners should also hire an independent engineer to inspect the house. It's not cheap — anywhere from $500 to $1,500 — but "considering your house is likely to be the biggest investment you'll make," says Fischer, "it's worth the money."

Working from home? Be sure to check on the different insurance possibilities

By Caron Golden
COPLEY NEWS SERVICE

When it comes to insurance, most new home-based business owners have a hard time figuring out where their personal life ends and their professional one begins. The list of necessary coverage can be overwhelming for someone used to having an employer make the tough decisions for them. And those who have been working at home for years may mistakenly believe that their homeowner's coverage is sufficient, or neglect to make changes as their circumstances alter.

Grace W. Weinstein, author of the handbook, "Financial Savvy For the Self-Employed" (Henry Holt), has some terrific suggestions for evaluating everything from health and disability insurance to property insurance, with special recommendations for home-based business owners.

"Just as you need homeowner's insurance to protect you against the hazards that can damage or destroy your home, so do you need insurance against the perils that can damage or destroy your business," she writes.

"If your office is in your home, you need both — and the two should be integrated to eliminate gaps and duplication."

Surprisingly, most self-employed people rank property and liability insurance very low on their list of priorities. But home-based business owners should ask themselves how much risk they stand to face if disaster struck. In most cases, it's a wise idea to invest in insurance.

Check with different insurers to find out how their rates match up against the competition. Services such as InsuranceQuote, (800) 972-1104; SelectQuote, (800) 343-1985; and TermQuote, (800) 444-8376, can help.

Regardless of the type of insurance you choose, before committing to a policy, check with your state insurance department to make sure that the insurer is licensed in your state and check its ratings from A.M. Best, Standard & Poor's, and Moody's.

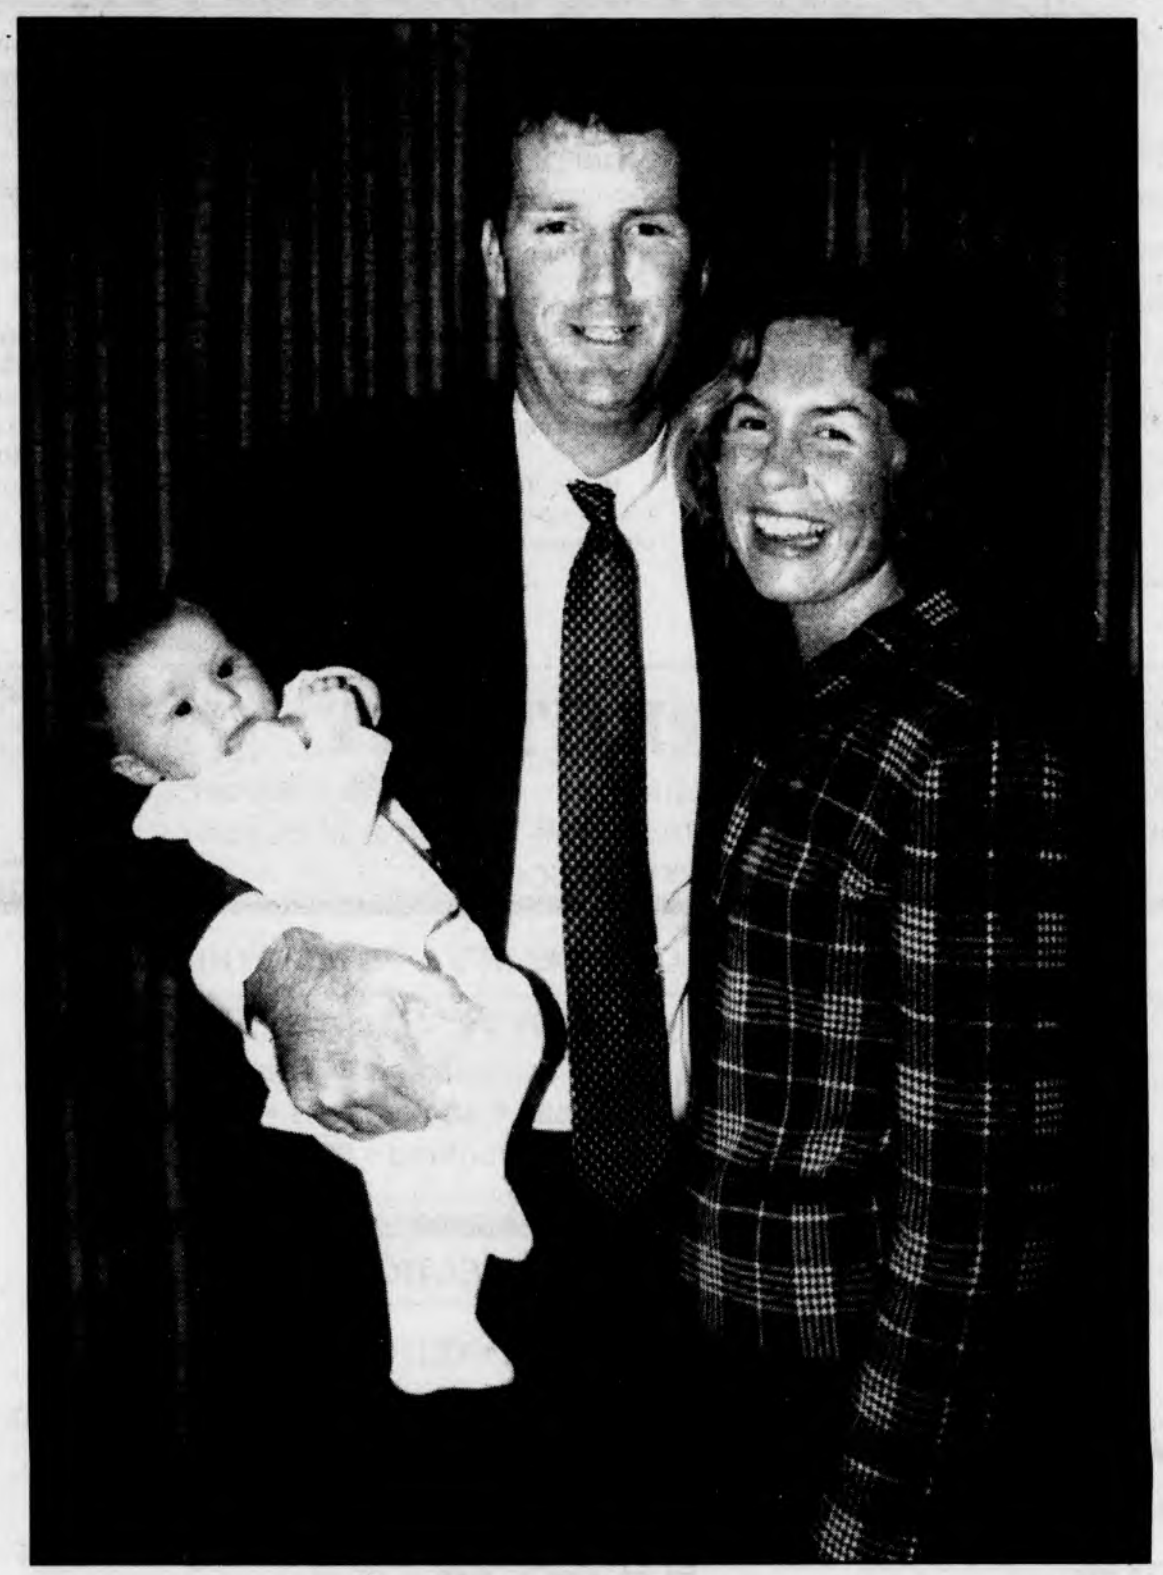
Business Notes



Cohasset's Paul Hart, CEO and principal of Lantana Function Facility, with his wife, Trish, and daughter, Cailey, at the South Shore Chamber of Commerce Business Expo at Lantana.

Lantana Hosts Business Expo

Lantana, the largest meeting facility on the South Shore, hosted one of the area's largest local business events, South Shore Chamber of Commerce 1996 Business Expo, Oct. 22.

Although Lantana has been the site of the Expo for many years, this is the first year Cohasset's Paul Hart, as new owner, hosted the major business event. There were 97 booths and more than 3,000 people at the Expo. A special lunch and hors d'oeuvre menu was served.

Paul and his wife, Trish, attended a "Business After Hours" meeting, which included a question and answer session focusing on Lantana's history.

The toughest question proved to be where the name "Lantana" came from. The name originated from a resort in Bermuda of the same name, where Paul's parents had vacationed many years ago.

The event included guest speakers Joe Malone and Ed Teague, the then- Republican nominee for Massachusetts 10th Congressional District. Free educational seminars were also offered.

Hart made a full-time commitment to the family business upon his graduation from Boston College, serving as the facility's assistant night manager, night manager and general manager. He purchased Lantana on July 1, 1996. The function facility has 14 meeting/function rooms, and more than 120,000 meals are served annually.

Fourteen Arrests in November

In his monthly status report to selectmen, Police Chief Brian Noonan said the department made 14 arrests including five for outstanding warrants, five for protective custody, and one each for assault and batter (domestic), rape of a child, operating a motor vehicle while under the influence of alcohol, and one for operating a motor vehicle after licence revocation.

During the month, the emergency dispatch center received 88, 9-1-1 calls, Noonan said.

"There were three breaking and enterings reported in November, two were businesses and one residence," he said.

Noonan said two of the town's recently hired officers are currently attending the 18-week Massachusetts Criminal Justice Training Academy. Recruit William Quigley is attending the MCJTC in Canton and is due to graduate Feb. 21. Recruit Garrett Hunt is attending the MCJTC in Plymouth and is due to graduate March 21.

"Having these men on board prior to the spring of 1997 will be of great help and will bring our manning levels up to full complement," Noonan said.

Six Injured in Accident

Six people sustained minor injuries in a two-car accident Saturday afternoon on Chief Justice Cushing Highway near Woolworth's, police said.

Michelle L. Thistle, 19, of 60 Hughey Rd., Scituate was issued a warning for following too closely, Officer Lisa Matos said.

Matos said it appears that as the traffic was flowing south on Route 3A, the 1994 Maxima driven by Robert Wenmark, 49, of 27 Riverview Dr., Cohasset, was rear-ended at about 1:50 p.m. by the 1986 Cougar driven by Thistle.

Matos explained there were four cars involved but two, which apparently avoided the collision, left the area before police arrived.

There were no witnesses in the area other than the people driving, she said.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS
THE TRIAL COURT
THE PROBATE AND FAMILY COURT
NORFOLK DIVISION
DOCKET NO. 96P2940E1

Estate of CHARLES J. O'MALLEY late of COHASSET In the County of NORFOLK

NOTICE

A petition has been presented in the above-captioned matter praying that the last will of said decedent be proved and allowed and that KATHLEEN L. O'MALLEY of COHASSET in the County of NORFOLK be appointed executrix named in the will without surety on the bond.

If you desire to object to the allowance of said petition, you or your attorney should file a written appearance in said Court at Dedham on or before 10:00 in the forenoon on January 22, 1997.

In addition you should file a written statement of objections to the petition, giving the specific grounds therefore, within thirty (30) days after the return day (or such other time as the Court, on motion with notice to the petitioner, may allow) in accordance with Probate Rule 16A.

Witness, David H. Kopelman, Esquire, First Justice of said Court at Dedham, this eleventh day of November, one thousand nine hundred and ninety-six.

Reilly Elected Class President

Sr. Barbara Barry, SND, principal of Notre Dame Academy, has announced Courtney Reilly of Hingham has been elected president of the Class of 2000.

Meghan Corry of Cohasset is vice president; Lindsay Todd of Abington is secretary; and Nell Mone of Scituate was elected as treasurer.

Students Receive Coaches' Awards

Eight students at Derby Academy received coaches' awards for fall sports at a recent morning assembly. One member of each team and grade is selected for "contributions benefiting all who take part in athletics." The students were praised for their selflessness, skill, thoughtfulness, daily endeavor, attitude and genuine love of the game.

The recipients for boys soccer were ninth-grader Jamie Simons of Cohasset; brothers Jackson and Daniel Shafer of Duxbury for eighth and sixth grades respectively; and Gardner Loring, also of Duxbury, for grade seven.

Award recipients for field hockey were ninth-grader Beatrice Ghita of Weymouth; eighth-grader Corinna Noering of Cohasset; seventh-grader Pam Wessling and sixth-grader Leigh Ann Gardiner, both of Hingham.

Paper Prayers on Exhibit

Several students of Cohasset High School art teacher Tom Sippel have contributed work to an exhibit of "Paper Prayers," at the Howard Yezerski Gallery, to benefit the Boston Pediatric and Family AIDS Project.

Each anonymously donated prayer is a 4x12" strip of paper on which the numerous artists (some budding, some very famous) have created a painting, drawing, or calligraphy. For only a few dollars, visitors to the gallery exhibit can buy a "prayer" and thus contribute to the project, which provides care to hundreds of children, women and families who are affected by H.I.V.

Everyone is encouraged to view this dramatic, touching exhibit and to participate in this worthwhile effort.

The prayers will be on display at the Howard Yezerski Gallery, 11 Newbury St., until Dec. 21 (Tues.-Sat., 10 a.m. to 5:30 p.m.).

Multicultural Cookbooks for Sale

The Cohasset PSO Diversity Committee is selling multicultural cookbook this holiday season. The cookbook, which costs $8.95, contains recipes for cooking up an international feast and makes a good gift for family members and friends.

The cookbooks may be [illegible] cial ordered by Catherine Davis at 383-2[illegible].

Derby Students Star in Musical

The Hingham campus of Derby Academy was bustling as students from grades 4-6 gave the evening performance of this year's middle school musical "How to Eat Like a Child (and Other Lessons in Not Being Grownup!)" The musical, based on a book of the same title by Delia Ephron, contained a series of vignettes on familiar topics such as "How to Stay Home from School," "How to Wait," "How to Eat," "How to Have a Sleep-over" and "How to Practice a Violin." While mostly humorous, the musical had poignant moments, such as "The Birthday Song" by sixth-grader Jane Mellors of Hingham. During the number, a young girl sings of how special her birthday is because her parents tell her they are so glad she was born.

More than 80 students from Derby's middle school took part in the musical. There was a cameo appearance by Headmaster Ed Foley, who played the father in the fifth-grade number "We Refuse to Fall Asleep." Sixth-grade students playing lead roles included Kate Lewis, Carrie Pierson, Peter Roy and Nate Wilcox, all of Cohasset.

The musical was directed by drama teacher Thalia McMillion and music teacher Bonnie Harrison, with assistance from Alice McWilliams, Nancie Beasley, Sarah Gregg and Ken Winslow of the art department.

Plan to Avert Flooding Reaches Grant Stage

Federal Money Sought for Improvements

By Jason Bouffard and Mary Ford

COHASSET MARINER

Widespread flooding following record rainfall in October caused a nightmare selectmen don't want to have again.

So last week, selectmen inked a grant application asking for help in paying for upwards of $1.3 million for flood control measures in the James Brook basin.

The Federal Emergency Management Agency could pay for 75 percent of the costs of recommended improvements because in the aftermath of the storm, the town was part of a federally declared "disaster area."

Selectman Peter Pratt said in talks with MBTA environmental affairs manager Andrew Brennan, he learned the T might share some of the projected costs of the project.

The MBTA plans to restore train service along the Greenbush right of way which bisects the James Brook basin.

Pratt, who is heading the grant seeking effort, detailed the scope of the plan, drawn up by Tutela Engineering, to his fellow board members Wednesday.

A record-breaking nor'easter dumped more than 8-1/2 inches in town Oct. 20 damaging 50 to 60 homes, a disas-

Towns Want Answers on Disputing Water Bills

By Alice C. Coyle

THE HINGHAM JOURNAL

Soaked by their rising water rates, many Massachusetts American Water Company customers are gearing up to dispute their bills. But before plunging into a fight with the water company, town officials in Hingham, Hull and Cohasset want to make sure residents know all the facts so they're not left high and dry.

In June, Mass-American put a 155 percent rate hike, approved by the Department of Public Utilities (DPU), into effect to help recoup the cost of building its $40 million water treatment plant in Hingham.

'There is a great deal of interest in this issue in the communities of Hull, Hingham and Cohasset.'

— Phil Lemnios.

Since the increase went into effect, there has been a steady stream of complaints from the company's more than 10,500 customers in Hingham, Hull and North Cohasset.

"We're trying to get the DPU to tell us what is disputable and how it is done," said Hull Town Manager Phil Lemnios.

Lemnios wrote to Department of Public Utilities Director of Consumer Affairs Claudine Langlois requesting a policy statement that will address what the process is to dispute a bill, what is and isn't disputable, and who should be contacted with questions, complaints or concerns.

"There is a great deal of interest in this issue in the communities of Hull,

Cohasset's Week

More Mitigators Wanted

At member Dean Rizzo's request last week, selectmen agreed to appoint additional members to the Greenbush Mitigation Committee.

They suggested that Rizzo seek members from the Design Review Board, the Greenbush Citizens' Advisory Committee, the Citizens' Mitigation Committee, which recently submitted its report to selectmen, as well as an attorney who could offer expertise in municipal law.

Equal Treatment Wanted

Selectmen plan to hold discussions with town counsel and the water commission to discuss how the maintenance of water mains is handled on private ways.

According to residents David Calhoun and Jerry O'Callahan of Sheldon Road, the water commission refused to repair a water main leak on a private way.

Calhoun said that the main was installed by the town, and was at one time maintained by the town. He wants to know when the transfer of responsibility between the town and residents occurred, and also is concerned over the lack of information provided about maintenance.

Selectman Peter Pratt admitted that there is a tremendous public information deficit with regard to private ways.

Thirty percent of the town's roads are classified as private ways.

Top Students are Recognized

Schools Supt. Stephen Hart parted ways with the usual practice of awarding just one Superintendent's Certificate of Academic Excellence this year.

The award, given annually to the top ranking graduating student, was awarded to senior Ely Kahn, as well as graduating junior Chris Laas.

"This represents quite an achievement over a long period of time," Hart said. "Once you get to the top, everybody tries to knock you off."

Laas, who plans to attend MIT in the fall, said he won't be happy to miss his senior year, but made the decision to enter college a year early after weighing his options.

Kahn will attend Harvard University.

"The question I really want to ask is, 'Would they have passed the GED test?' " Hart joked.

Town Election is May 3

Selectmen have set the town election for 8 a.m. to 6 p.m., Saturday, May 3. Under a town by-law passed in 1995, selectmen have the right to schedule the election within 35 days following town meeting. In the spring, selectmen expect a debt exclusion override for the sewer project and an operating budget override to be on the ballot.

Extending the time between the election and town meeting will allow more time to prepare the overrides, Town Clerk Marion Douglas said, and eliminate the need for separate override elections. Town meeting is March 29. Under the old by-law, the town election was held on the Saturday following town meeting.

Town Meeting Articles Needed

Selectmen noted that articles for the March 29 annual town meeting must be submitted by Jan. 13. Citizens petition articles for the annual town meeting require signatures of ten registered voters while those on the special town meeting warrant require 100 signatures.

Casey Cavanaro, Kara Wilcox and Tessa Leahy rehearse for their part as Santa's reindeer in Mrs. Collins' second-grade winter pageant at the Osgood School.

Selectmen Cool to Request for More Radios

Fire Budget Nearly Level Funded

By Jason Bouffard

COHASSET MARINER

Fire Chief Roger Lincoln made a pitch for six more portable radios for the fire department last week.

But three selectmen are cool to the idea.

At October's special town meeting, on the recommendation of the advisory committee, voters appropriated $6,000 for six new two-way radios.

But the chief, who had asked for 12 radios, hasn't given up.

Lincoln presented the $6,000 request for more radios this week as part of his proposed budget for fiscal year 1998, which begins July 1.

Selectmen Merle Brown and Michael Sullivan said Monday they were not convinced the additional radios are necessary.

The department currently has 15 radios, which cost about $1,000 each. The radios, stored in chargers at the station, are picked up along with other fire-fighting equipment by fire-fighters en route to calls.

While Lincoln said there has never been an incident in which the department was short on radios, he stressed that more radios used in rotation would increase the life span of the devices. He explained that his expenses for radio repairs could be reduced if more were purchased.

But Sullivan did not see the situation as desperate.

"It just seems like we're over-purchasing for the need," he said.

Selectman Ronnie McMorris said the board should not interfere with management of the fire department. Lincoln should be allowed to make decisions about issues which would improve the effectiveness of the fire department, she said.

"I don't understand why we delve into a management role with the fire department," she said. "We don't do it with the police, we don't do it with the DPW."

But Selectman Nan Roth said purchasing the radios can be put off.

"This is an item which would be very nice to have, but is not 100 percent essential," she said, suggesting the line item for the radios be flagged so it could be easily cut if necessary.

In a 3-2 vote, selectmen approved the fire department's proposed $1.2 million budget under the condition that the radios would be stricken from the budget if necessary. Lincoln's budget request is up just .007 percent over this year's budget.

DPW is Ready for Winter

By Charlene Vandini

COHASSET MARINER

Winter officially started last weekend and the Cohasset public works department is ready for whatever the stormy season may bring.

DPW Supt. Harold Litchfield said his department has in its stockpile 110 tons of salt and 175 tons of sand.

Although Cohasset was buried last year under a record 100-plus inches of snow, Litchfield said the usual preparations are being made this year.

"As long as we can go into deficit spending, I don't have a problem," he said, explaining that the DPW is allowed to over-spend its $45,000 budget for snow removal, with additional funds transferred as needed throughout the winter.

In comparison to past years, Litchfield said he returned almost $5,000 at the end of the relatively dry winter of 1993-94. With last year's record accumulation, the final snow removal budget was $135,000.

Litchfield noted that this year, for the first time, he purchased the road salt through the Plymouth County cooperative at $31 per ton, $8 less than the price he paid last year.

He also has approximately 25 tons of sand-salt mix leftover from the winter of 1995-96.

The warmer water off the coast seems to be keeping precipitation as rain in eastern Massachusetts, while the western part of the state has already had two snowstorms.

"They can handle it out there," he said, and noted that last year at this time, Cohasset had already seen four snowstorms.

Middle School is Topic

At a recent school committee meeting, Cohasset High School principal Curtis Collins summarized a presentation given by the Robert Spehr, executive director of New England Middle Schools, at a recent seminar.

According to Collins, the speaker discussed the notion that educators much understand the characteristics of middle school students in order to adequately teach them and that a lack of rigidity is important to children of middle-school age.

"Teachers must be flexible to accommodate the kids," quoted Collins. "We don't learn in 45-minute time slots," he said, alluding to flexible scheduling.

Collins also reported on the need to connect curriculum and to emphasize exploratory learning.

"At the middle school level, you don't worry about covering curriculum, you worry about uncovering the curriculum," he said.

The discussion of the seminar came in light of the planned conversion of the junior high to a middle school in September. Collins is confident that the shift in focus will benefit the students.

"We'll be a work in progress for a while, but we're going to have a very good middle school in September," he said.

Cohasset Christmas, 1946

1946 had been a good year. Gone were wartime blackouts, air raid drills, bond sales and scrap drives. Gas, food, toys — things which had been rationed or unavailable during the war — were again available.

Joel Pratt in the third grade.

By Joel Pratt
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Each Christmas should be special. Children expect it will be. Parents try hard to make it so. And — almost always — it is.

By Christmas 1946, my ninth, I knew pretty much all there was to know about Christmas. I knew that the Santa Claus at McGaw's hardware was really old Mrs. Collier. And that our neighbors, the Eatons, could be counted upon for a great present. I knew all the places our parents hid presents, thanks to some help from my older sister, Cindy. And I knew I could expect many of the requests on my list to appear under the tree.

1946 had been a good year. Gone were wartime blackouts, air raid drills, bond sales and scrap drives. Gas, food, toys — things which had been rationed or unavailable during the war — were again available.

After spending much of the war on blocks in the garage, our big old 1931 La Salle was back on the road. By midyear, all of my uncles had come home. Uncle Burt had even given me some really neat German insignia patches.

That fall, our old house on Ripley Road was on the front page of the local paper, with a canoe entering the front door. I took the picture to school to show my third-grade classmates: Mrs. Dixon said I could put it on the bulletin board.

As Christmas approached, the sign with 'NOEL' in lights went up on the town hall, and a brightly lit tree appeared at the intersection of Elm and Main streets. And we acquired a new aunt. Uncle Edwin, our youngest Pratt uncle, married Eileen Andrews right after Thanksgiving.

That Christmas I wanted a bicycle. I had even picked it out: a red Schwinn with a battery-powered horn and a basket. I didn't do the 'letter to Santa' bit anymore, but I made sure everyone knew what was at the top of my list. Subtle hints, like leaving the Sears catalog open to the bicycle pages. Talking about which kids in my class already had bikes. Casually suggesting if I had a bike I could ride downtown to get things at the First National store. I could sort of wobble on my sister's bike, but she didn't want me to use it. Besides, it was a girl's bike — and no way was I going to be seen riding a girl's bike.

For weeks I looked around in the garage, the cellar and under the porch, hoping to see the bike, but found nothing. Regular checks of mom's hiding places drew a blank — they were empty! Bummer — either there weren't any presents — an unthinkable idea — or they were in places I hadn't found. Last year the presents I had found were wrapped. I hadn't dared to unwrap them — but by shaking them I could guess at the contents. Now I didn't even have that satisfaction.

Things didn't get better. I peeked and poked right up until the day before Christmas but found nothing. That afternoon Eddy and Eileen came by. Maybe our new aunt would bring presents for her new niece and nephew! But they arrived empty-handed. Instead, Eileen announced that she was going to kiss me. I headed for the door, but she was right behind me! Around the table, into the den, up the front stairs and down the back to the kitchen. She wouldn't give up! And finally she cornered me and planted a big buss on my squirming cheek.

Every Christmas Eve my sister and I begged to be allowed to open 'just one present, just one!' before bed. This year we tried again, although at 13 Cindy was kind of big for that old trick. As in past years, we wore our parents down until they relented — but they picked the gifts we could open from the few already under the tree.

Mrs. Ebbets had come by with things for us. We walked past her house on Highland Court every day on our way to school and she babysat for us when we were smaller. She looked old (when you are 8, all adults look old) but probably was 60ish. Hers were the gifts we were given to open. Mine was a small box which rattled as mother passed it to me. Off with the ribbon, off with the paper and there was — oh, no! A box of giant crayons! Six of them — red, green, yellow, blue, purple, and orange — kindergarten crayons! Little kids' crayons that were safe to eat! Yuck!

This Christmas was going nowhere fast.

I went to bed convinced that my luck would change. After all, it was Christmas. And finally, despite the excitement and anticipation, I fell asleep. But not for long. 1 was wakened by voices and singing from downstairs. It was still dark. There was no clock in my room, so I had no idea what time it was. By the sounds, there were lots of people down there. The laughter and occasional gleeful whoops could not be ignored: I got out of bed and snuck down the first two or three steps of the front stairs. There were lots of people there. From the stairs, I could hear clanking and banging sounds too. My fear of being caught was stronger than my curiosity. Since I couldn't see the living room from my perch anyway, I went back to bed. Soon bits of Christmas carols drifted up the stairs, with our neighbor Esther Bates' unmistakable soprano soaring above the other voices.

Joel Pratt trying out the skis he received for Christmas in 1946.

Before dawn I went quietly down the stairs. There by the tree was a bike! My bike! And a pair of skis. Whoops, maybe those were for Cindy: they looked really big. But the bike had to be mine — it was a boy's bike! I grabbed my stocking from the mantle and went back up to bed to wait for daylight and for mom and pop to get up. When I finally heard them stirring, I went back downstairs again. Now that it was light I could see the bike clearly. It wasn't a Schwinn! It was a Columbia! A big, used Columbia with no basket and no horn. The red and cream paint was faded and dull and there was

CANCER TALK WITH TANIA LINGOS, M.D.

BREAST CANCER ALERT

Breast Cancer strikes one woman in nine. With so many women affected by breast cancer, we cannot be complacent about this health hazard which packs such a physical and emotional impact.

While research has yet to explain what causes breast cancer, we are able to detect the disease in its early stages. This is our best defense against breast cancer. If detected early, the disease is usually curable and patients have a better choice of treatment options.

Early detection, however, requires active participation in your own health care. All women should commit to giving themselves a monthly Breast Self Exam. You should get into this habit of examining your breasts for lumps and other suspicious changes.

The fact that most breast cancers are found by women themselves attests to the critical importance of monthly Breast Self Exams. For literature on how to do so, contact your gynecologists, local hospital, SSOC, or the American Cancer Society.

Women between the ages of 20 and 40 should also have a Clinical Breast Exam every three years at the very least. Women 40 and older should have an annual Clinical Breast Exam.

At 35, women should ask their doctor about an annual Mammogram or breast x-ray. A baseline Mammogram at that age is highly recommended, especially for women with a family history of breast cancer. Recent studies suggest that women over 40 should have an annual Mammogram. Mammograms can identify cancers that are too small to be detected by a Breast Self Exam or a Clinical Breast Exam, and this leads to improved cure rates and survival.

Please note, no one method of screening – Breast Self Exam, Clinical Breast Exam, or Mammography – is perfect. Therefore, in the fight against breast cancer, all three methods of screening are recommended. Ideally, the different screening methods should complement each other as they increase your chances of early detection.

In its early stages, breast cancer is often painless and symptomless; hence, once again, the importance of constantly being alert to subtle changes in your breasts. According to the American Cancer Society, the following signs, which do not necessarily indicate cancer, should be checked by your doctor:

- A change in the size or shape of the breast;
- A discharge from the nipple;
- A lump or thickening in or near the breast or in underarm area; or
- A change in the color or feel of the skin of breast, areola, or nipple.

Every women in America is vulnerable to breast cancer, as are 1% of the male population. Remember, staying alert is your best defense. We will continue to look at breast cancer next week.

a tear in the seat. Oh, no! No! NO!

I waited impatiently for the rest of the family. Finally everyone was up: it was time for presents. My lack of enthusiasm must have shown when I said thank you for the bike. Pop explained that it had belonged the Bates' son Jack and that it was practically new and he would help me learn to ride and we could wax it to make it shiny and he would buy a new seat. Later, I overheard mom telling pop it was too big and of course he was disappointed with a used one. I wasn't supposed to hear that part.

But the skis were for me! Once again, Chuck and Charlotte Eaton had given me something that no one else would ever have thought of. No other kid I knew had skis. There were poles — long ones — and a box of bindings. Pop hadn't the slightest idea how bindings worked, but he figured out how to screw all of the parts onto each ski. They were old-fashioned bindings with a big loop of coiled spring to go in a groove on the back of your ski boots. But I didn't have ski boots. I pulled my galoshes over my leather shoes and pop fussed and fiddled trying to make the bindings fit.

I was really excited at the idea of skiing. There was some snow on the ground, so I announced I was going to ski to the Eatons to thank them. The skis were huge. My galoshes kept falling out of the bindings. I found I could kind of shuffle ahead by pushing with the poles. Visions of speeding down mountains were evaporating fast. But the Eatons were pleased that I had come. Chuck explained that the skis were the best, made of hickory wood which would last a long time, and that he had bought adult size because I would grow into them. We went into their back yard where they took my picture on the skis. And I shuffled home.

Pop had decided that it was time for a riding lesson. So we took the bike out to the driveway. Pop got on and rode up and down the driveway hill. Then I tried it with Pop holding the bike. I was a smallish 8-year-old and this was a 26-inch adult-sized bike. Pop fussed to lower the seat and adjust the handlebars, but in my heart I knew neither this nor anything else was going to help - and I think he did too. Maybe he was also thinking that bikes lasted a long time and I would grow into it.

So that was my Christmas. Kindergarten crayons. Giant skis I couldn't control. A used bike that was too big. There were other gifts, but these are the ones I remember.

The bike sat in the cellar for two more years. At 10, I was finally able to ride it. The hardest part was learning to stop and dismount. My feet still didn't reach the ground, so I had to perform a kind of controlled crash, leaping off at the last moment. Eventually I added a basket, a horn and a light. Pop built me a neat little wagon that hitched on behind. I was very proud of my bike, and rode it many, many miles.

Four winters later, Cindy went skiing in New Hampshire. While there, the ski shop remounted the bindings the way they should have been. She learned to wax the skis and she bought real ski boots which fit the bindings. The skis became hers and she used them for many winters.

Years later, Mom and Pop told me about the crashing and whooping that had awakened me on Christmas Eve, 1946. After the midnight service at St. Stephens, Esther Bates invited the choir to her house. As they walked up the lane, they found Pop and Mr. Bates wheeling the bicycle down the Bates' back steps. It had sat for years accumulating dust in the Bates' barn: they had just finished cleaning it up. Pop decided he should take a test ride on the way to our house. Some of the others thought this was a good idea and that they too should help to test it. The cold soon bought an end to outdoor testing and they moved into our house and commenced taking indoor test rides around our living room! I'm told that even quiet, reserved John Bates was persuaded to do a loop around the dining room table.

ter which prompted officials to address the town's drainage problems in their entirety.

The rain was too much for James Brook which extends from Scituate Hill at Cohasset Heights Landfill off Route 3A to the harbor. The excess water backed up into the village onto Ripley Road, Sohier Street, Smith Place and the James Lane and Pleasant Street neighborhoods.

The severity of the situation caused the town to seek a full-blown engineering study on drainage to develop a comprehensive plan to correct problems and protect property and public health.

The plan is structured under the "ideal situation" assumption of unlimited funding, and is aimed at combating the effects of a "100-year storm," Pratt said.

In a telephone interview, town engineer Domenic Tutela said the plan incorporates the following:

• For $450,000 either adding a 60-in. pipe to the two existing 48-in. pipes where James Brook meets the harbor and rebuilding the cross culvert and channel that feeds the three pipes that drain Jacobs Meadow to alleviate flooding along Summer and Border streets;

Or building a pumping station to serve the same area that would pump out the meadow at the rate of 40 gallons per minute at high tide.

• For about $150,000, rebuilding the drainage and channel system in the village area. Some of the pipes may be too small or may have collapsed; and open channels may have to be "opened" up;

• $100,000 to install a 1,500-2,000 ft-long closed conduit under the village area to relieve flooding in the central village area by giving the water some-place else to go;

• $100,000 to replace the 48-in. in diameter corrugated metal James Brook conduit from Smith Place to Pleasant Street with a 60-in. in diameter concrete pipe;

• $500,000 to build a d[illegible] across James Brook between Sanctuary Pond and Smith Place to create a very large retention area to relieve the entire watershed from flooding.

Water Bills

Hingham and Cohasset. Unfortunately there is a also a great deal of misinformation regarding the process and reasons that one may dispute a bill," Lemnios wrote.

Lemnios, who met with DPU officials earlier this month said not only would a policy statement help customers, grappling with their bills, it would also cut down the number of complaint calls the department receives.

"It's to their benefit to provide a good description of the process," Lemnios said.

Hingham Town Administrator Charles Cristello, who noted that the selectmen's office continues to get complaint calls from residents, said a clear policy statement for rate payers considering disputing their bills is a good idea.

"We don't want people — out of anger — taking actions that will hurt them later on," said Cristello, who is concerned that people who refuse to pay their bills could have their service shut off.

According to Mass-American Operations Manager Eileen Commane customers whose service is shut-off due to non-payment are required to not only pay their outstanding bills but must also pay a $15 fee for restoation of service. To have water service restored after business hours, Commane said the charge is $195. Commane said the company has made efforts to explain bills to customers to avoid non-payment problems and service shut offs.

Those efforts are not enough for one Mass-American customer who says he's still looking for answers about his bills.

Cohasset resident James "Russ" Lennon said he's paying for his water usage only, until Mass-American officials explain to him fully all of the charges on his bill. Lennon disputed an estimated bill of $365 this month and demanded to have an actual reading. A new bill for the same period arrived in the amount of $202 followed by another bill of $225. Lennon said he was assured by water company officials that Mass-American President James Perry would personally address his billing concerns and explain each charge - including a meter charge that Lennon claims the company has buried in the usage fee.

"I want it spelled out — exactly what they're charging me," Lennon said.

A DPU policy statement on how to dispute his bill is of little interest to Lennon, who is already waging his own personal battle against the water company.

"I'm more interested in getting Mass-American to admit the truth on what they are charging, because they are ripping the public off, totally," he said.

It's been two weeks since the company last contacted Lennon, and he said he will continue to pay only for the water he's using until he gets some answers. Lennon has received one late notice from Mass-American but no indication that his service is in danger of being shut off.

In Hull, Lemnios said he's talked to several residents who have begun "escrowing," rather than paying the portion of their bills they feel is unreasonable including the charge for the treatment facility in Hingham — an issue that DPU officials say is not disputable.

"It's very important that people know not only how but why they can dispute a bill," Lemnios said.

Complaints about the approved rate increases are being addressed in the appeal launched by the towns of Hingham and Hull, Langlois said. Unless the rate case is reversed in supreme judicial court, residents are obligated to pay their bills, she said.

Langlois, who plans to have a policy statement completed by next week for distribution in local newspapers and town halls, explained the process and some of the issues consumers can dispute.

Customers are told to first try to resolve their complaints with the water company, Langlois said. If attempts to settle disputes with Mass-American fail, Langlois said consumers can bring complaints to the DPU if they feel their bill is inaccurate.

For instance, Langlois said if customers have received a long series of consecutive estimated bills, that is something that the DPU will look at and discuss with the water company.

Rate payers with concerns about consumption charges can also bring their case to the DPU, but Langlois cautions customers that often times leaky pipes can be the source of higher than usual usage charges.

The DPU will also address computation errors in bills or cases in which consumers feel that the company has not followed DPU rules and regulations.

Ski 93 offers mountains of fun activities

By Joanne M. Coletta-Levine

A winter wonderland awaits the skier who travels to New Hampshire's White Mountains region.

Connected by Interstate Route 93 and the Ski 93 Association, the Bretton Woods, Cannon Mountain, Loon Mountain, and Waterville Valley ski areas offer fun for the whole family only 2-1/2 hours away from Greater Boston.

Ski 93, founded in 1966, is the oldest and largest ski association in New England and provides ski area, lodging, dining, and business information and discounts to its 250 members. The Ski 93 area extends from New Hampshire's Lakes Region northwest through the Baker and Pemigewasset valleys to Lancaster and Whitefield.

Bretton Woods, located in the middle of the White Mountains, is known for its beautiful scenery, low-key atmosphere, family environment, and excellent terrain.

"We're really known as a medium-size ski area with a majority of our terrain geared toward beginning or intermediate skiers," said Ben Wilcox, marketing director for Bretton Woods. "People come to Bretton Woods because it is a comfortable ski experience without the pressure and crowding of the larger ski areas."

He said Bretton Woods is in an ideal location to benefit from Mother Nature's bounty of snow. "It is also always an ideal temperature to make snow if there isn't enough naturally," said Wilcox.

Bretton Woods, still independently run, is also known for its commitment to family activities. "It's a good place to bring the family. We have an excellent ski school, programs, and events especially for the children," Wilcox said.

Bretton Woods also has magnificent views of Mt. Washington. "We even have a mountaintop restaurant that looks right at Mt. Washington, it's just beautiful," said Wilcox.

While some ski areas opt to have limited special events during the holiday vacation week, Bretton Woods offers a full slate. Said Wilcox, "A lot of areas take the opinion that they are going to tone down their activities during the holiday week because they are just too busy, and we take the opposite approach by offering many great activities."

He said that Dec. 26-30, Bretton Woods celebrates Kids Nights, which include different themes, snow sculptures, pizza parties, and group night skiing. Bretton Woods will be holding a Kids Holiday Race Dec. 27, and Demonstration Days Dec. 28 and 29.

"The biggest comment I get is that people like Bretton Woods because it is not like they are in a rat race, it's relaxed and user-friendly ... more low-key," said Wilcox.

Cannon Mountain, located in Franconia, is a self-described "great place for families" and offers a winter full of events.

Amy Bassett, marketing and sales coordinator for Cannon Mountain, noted some of this season's highlights. "There are different extreme events happening at Cannon this year, and on Dec. 27 kids under 10 can go on free dogsled rides," said Bassett. Visitors can also cross-country ski, snow board, skate, snowshoe, and other activities.

The town of Lincoln is home to Loon Mountain, a ski area that offers not only great skiing, but innovative programs and events for the young and young-at-heart, both skiers and non-skiers.

"Loon's children's programs are pretty extensive," said Lesley Parker, public relations coordinator for Loon Mountain. "They have become very popular." Loon Mountain's

> 'People come to Bretton Woods because it is a comfortable ski experience without the pressure and crowding of the larger ski areas.'
> Ben Wilcox, Marketing director

Children's Theater and Wildlife Theater each offer programs throughout the season.

Parker said, "Our Children's Theater offers programs on weekends and during the holidays which are very enjoyable. This season the theater group is performing 'Yallerly Brown,' a play about the mishaps of one particular character named Wajowid."

At the Wildlife Theater, guests are introduced to animals of the wild, including cougars, ferrets, snakes, parrots, hawks, and two mountain lions recently purchased by Loon Mountain.

Snow-filled activities include skiing one of Loon's many trails, snow tubing, snow boarding, and cross-country skiing. "We have evening snow tubing and a learning center for snow tubing," said Parker.

Events at Loon Mountain this season include the 15th annual Firefighter's Ski Muster Jan. 19, the ski area's 30th anniversary Jan. 18-20, the Snow Carnival Jan. 24-26, and the Grandparent/Grandchild Fun Race February 19.

"The Grandparent/Grandchild Fun Race is a great event where families can ski with each other," said Parker.

Located in the town of Waterville Valley, the Waterville Valley ski area is featuring new innovations in snow boarding this year.

The area, known for its great skiing, also features spectacular events and programs throughout the season. "We're always trying to come up with new programs for skiers and snow boarders," said Debbie Moore, marketing manager for Waterville Valley.

Moore said that a new snow board mini-park recently opened at the ski area. "The mini-park is a place where snow boarders can practice their tricks and maneuvers all winter long," she said. She said snow boarders have several competitions in which they can participate during the season.

The Firefighters Ski Muster is always a popular event at Loon Mountain.

Waterville Valley offers programs for almost every visitor, including cross-country skiing, skating, snowshoeing, and children's programs.

One standout event this season is the Ski Fest '97 Celebration Jan. 12. "There will be a variety of cross-country events, skating demonstrations, evening bonfires, and other happenings throughout the week ... it should be great fun," said Moore.

Bretton Woods, Cannon Mountain, Loon Mountain, and Waterville Valley all participate in Ski New Hampshire's 9th annual "Free Intro to Skiing and Snow Boarding" that began Dec. 11 and runs through Dec. 20.

The event is geared toward encouraging first-time alpine and cross-country skiers and snow boarders to hit the slopes and trails by offering free novice lift tickets or trail passes, and beginner lessons.

AROUND TOWN/Sallyann Chatterton

A First Cohasset Christmas for a New Arrival!

Let's begin with happy holiday news. There is a brand-new baby girl who will have her very first Cohasset Christmas. Madison Whitney, daughter of Mike and Heather (Ludlow) Jones, was born Dec. 11. Her grandparents are Marsha and Jeff Ludlow and Cliff and Suzanne Jones.

What a happy holiday season they all will have. Can't you just see it all now? We certainly extend the welcome mat to Madison and cannot wait to see her!

Speaking of celebrations, we understand that friends of Laura Atherton held a birthday bash to hep her celebrate a memorable one. Happy birthday greetings from all of us to you, Laura. You are a special person indeed.

We take pleasure in announcing that one of Cohasset's finest young men has been elected a football captain for Milton Academy next year. Ted Reardon is the name. He's the son of Tom and Sue Reardon of Red Gate Lane. That is really quite an honor, and you should be proud that your fellow teammates think you will be up to the task! Congratulations!

Sam Roth thinks of another toy he wants during a visit to Santa at the Village Fair held earlier this month.

While we are passing out kudos, let's mention Cohasset Post Office. This writer mailed a package to Maine on Monday morning, and the recipient got it Tuesday morning during the busiest week of the year! Great going, folks!

Speaking of Spain, Holly Pompeo spent the a week there this month, visiting her host family she lived with when she was an exchange student during her days at Bowdoin. It is amazing the ties that remain long after students are back home in their routines. In Holly's case, she has been out of Bowdoin for some years now, yet she still keeps in constant touch with her family there. Hope you got to see what you missed last time there, Holly!

Cornelia "Neely" Wakeman has been elected captain of her field hockey team for the 1997 Holderness School in Plymouth, N.H. This year her team went undefeated and was the "Prep-Private" Lakes Region champion.

Neely, a sophomore tri-varsity captain, is the daughter of Sam and Linda Wakeman of Atlantic Avenue, and you know everyone is extremely proud of her!

Awards were presented Nov. 24 at Notre Dame Academy's 17th annual All-School Drama Festival, which featured four separate plays acted and directed by the four classes as the academy.

Meghan Corry of Cohasset was a freshman all-star cast member, so watch for her name in lights some day in the future!

Bishop John McCormack celebrated a Thanksgiving liturgy at Notre Dame Academy Nov. 27 at which 16 juniors and seniors were commissioned as Eucharist ministers for NDA for one year.

LOSING THAT OLD SPARK

▶ According to tests, mistimed ignition and improperly gapped or defective spark plugs cause a significant decrease in automobile fuel efficiency. Tests conducted in automotive laboratories indicate that the loss in fuel economy resulting from out-of-specification tune-up factors, such as worn spark plugs and incorrect timing adjustments, range from 9% to 12%. It should be noted that these tests were conducted with 6- and 8-cylinder engines. Fuel efficiency losses due to worn plugs and bad timing in 4-cylinder engines is even greater (14% to 25%) due to the fact that a bad spark plug in a smaller engine wastes a greater percentage of fuel than one in a larger engine. These differences aside, the clear conclusion is that maximum fuel economy can be attained by keeping the timing set to specification and keeping the spark plugs in top-notch condition.

▶ Following the maintenance schedule for your car means fewer breakdowns, greater safety, and less hassle overall. At SOUTH SHORE CHEVROLET-GEO, we combine knowledge, expertise, personal attention, and vehicle know-how. We set standards for excellence in all that we do, whether it's customer service, technical expertise, or offering consistent value for your investment of time and money with us. 'Citizen of Year' Nominations Due Dec. 31

Nominations are now being accepted for the Cohasset Mariner's annual Citizen of the Year Award. This is a continuation of the award begun in 1993 to recognize an individual for outstanding service to the community or for a special achievement.

Once again, the Cohasset Mariner invites our readers to take this opportunity to nominate a person who has made a significant contribution to our community. This is a community award: The Mariner is the means by which we are able to recognize, thank and honor those around us who make the quiet, generous contributions that make Cohasset a wonderful place to call our home.

The deadline for nominations for the 1996 Citizen of the Year is 5 p.m., Dec. 31. Please see nomination form on page 11.

Following the close of nominations, a selection panel will review the names submitted and select the 1996 Citizen of the Year, who will be named in January, 1997.

Nominees may be someone in elected office, a member of an appointed town committee, teacher or school administrator, clergy member, fire-fighter, police officer, or other municipal worker, a person in the business community, sports figure or an "unsung"neighbor or friend who has given freely of his or her time and energy to a worthy Cohasset project or cause.

AROUND TOWN/Sallyann Chatterton

Jennifer Cellucci received a letter of recommendation from their pastor and participated in a four-hour training program. They have agreed to integrate the Gospel values into their daily living.

Well, Cohasset's loss is Abington's gain! Greg Doyon is going there to be that town's new executive secretary after being ours for eight years! Greg will be leaving within a couple of weeks, and we thank him for all he has done for the town and wish him good luck in his new venture. His shoes will be big ones to fill, that's for sure!

Congratulations go to Stan Bernstein, who was recently appointed to serve a 14-year term as a U.S. bankruptcy judge for the eastern district of New York. His first assignment will be at the court in Westbury, located on Long Island.

Don't forget, if you have that last-minute gift to purchase and don't have any ideas, a brick on the sidewalk at Alumni Field with that person's name on it will be much appreciated. Bricks are still available — memorialize any person, achievement, club, business or milestone and have it last forever! Plus you will be part of putting the finishing touches on the field!

Speaking of that, did you see the garden that Mrs. Stone planted in front of the field with the letters CHS in the middle of it? It's great! And a wonderful thing to do. We all thank her!

Don't forget to nominate your "Citizen of the Year" before the Dec. 31 deadline. Nomination forms are available in the Mariner, or fax yours to (617) 740-8955. Just state the name and why you believe your nominee deserves the award.

That's the news from here. In closing, I would like to wish you and yours the happiest of holidays! Create many memories and then tell us all about them! Or let us hear about a tradition that you have in your family that you would like to share!

Happy, healthy holidays to all!

Understanding Elmo

I decided to find out for myself what the fuss surrounding the "Tickle Me Elmo" doll was all about.

I had seen news reports from the front lines, where determined camps of desperate parents were keeping 'round-the-clock vigils at department stores, each hoping one of the plush phantoms might somehow tumble into their grasp.

Their dedication mystified me. I could understand the demand for the rarer-than-diamonds Nintendo 64 video game system (it wasn't that long ago I was begging Santas in every mall for an Atari). Yet while I've enjoyed watching Elmo on television from time to time, I've never felt the desire to tickle him, or any of the other Muppets, except possibly Beaker.

In search of enlightenment, therefore, I traveled to the top-secret Vault of Unspeakably Rare Toys, located miles beneath the polar ice cap and Santa's Village. (One is afforded many privileges as a reporter for a major metropolitan newspaper). There, in a room filled with Cabbage Patch dolls and Ferrari Testarossas, I found the small, scarlet, eminently ticklable cherub, seated Buddha-like on his cardboard throne.

He was happy to see me.

"Merry Christmas!" said Elmo. (This was an extraordinarily rare model, the "Sentient Tickle Me Elmo," already a big hit in Japan).

"Merry Christmas?" I asked. "How can you be merry, when people out there are fighting and killing each other for the right to purchase you?"

Elmo thought about this for a while, his large, limpid eyes contracted with concern.

"Elmo doesn't like fighting and killing," Elmo said. (For those who do not watch "Sesame Street," Elmo speaks like a more charismatic version of Bob Dole). "Elmo wants people to be happy and smile."

"Be happy and smile?" I asked. "Don't you read the papers? There's arson and corruption, criminals lurking behind every corner, financial disaster on the horizon, violence on television and banality in the movies? What's to smile about?"

"Elmo can't read," Elmo said. "But Elmo thinks people should be happy and smile, because it's Christmas."

I was about to correct the obvious flaws in his logic when it occurred to me that perhaps the puppet had a point.

There is something that happens at least once every year in the weeks between Thanksgiving and New Year's, when I forget (briefly) the driving need to write holiday letters, doctor batches of eggnog and shop the four corners of the civilized world. It is a moment when I remember what it was like to be a single-digit age child waiting for Christmas, my soul caught up in escalating waves of unreasonable happiness.

In the last few weeks I have seen and read and heard about children who have collected donations or made posters or given away money they won in a raffle so that other children would have food, clothes and toys for the holidays. I don't believe that any of them expect to solve the problems of the world through their actions. They are instead naive, or perhaps wise enough, to believe everyone can and should be happy and smile once a year.

Christmas is a time of year when we celebrate the arrival not of a savior, a mentor, or even a jolly old elf, but a child. By looking at the world through the eyes of a child it is possible, for a moment, to put aside all of the perfectly good reasons why we should not be happy. We can let go, believe and smile, as wise children do.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Dedication Provided Sense of Closure

To the Editor:

Sunday, Nov. 10, I attended the dedication ceremony the town held for the Cohasset men who made the ultimate sacrifice in Korea and Vietnam. I have struggled to find the words to express the wonder of that ceremony. I have only been able to come up with a simple phrase that could never adequately describe my feelings; Thank You.

Specifically, I attended the dedication for my cousin R. Edward Maree. I was four years old when Eddie died and my recollection of him is a blur. The only clear memory I have is the brilliance of his smile. I was fortunate enough to spend the summers of my youth on Parker Avenue. Over the years my aunt would share stories of my cousins' escapades with me as we took our evening strolls or when we took her dingy to Bassings Beach. As time passed, I knew the stories by heart. So much so that on occasion, I could almost catch a glimpse of Eddie in his boat with his brother Bob or splashing water at his sister Ann. As if the tide were just right, and if I could only turn fast enough, I would see him row in beaming, carefree in his youth. With those stories came the knowledge of the pain that would fill my aunt's eyes after her reminiscent smile faded.

My throat tightens with pride even now as I recall the dedication ceremony. Not only for the fact of the location of Eddie's plaque at a place that was so much a part of him but also for the vision of the men and women in uniform who marched and the band that played. All of them marching down Parker Avenue will forever be etched in my mind and heart. The event itself could not have been any more meaningful. It was well-planned and organized. It was truly magical.

I would like to give special thanks to the following sponsors: George H. Healy Post 118, Sons of American Legion Squadron 118, VFW Post 9146, American Legion Auxiliary 118, Cohasset Rotary Club, Cohasset Elder Affairs, Leo J. in order to make this happen.

The dedication has provided a sense of closure.

My deepest thanks for giving my aunt a monument in honor of the son she so tragically lost and for giving my cousins Bob and Ann a memorial of their lost brother. Cohasset has acknowledged their tragedy and has shown support for their sorrow. The town and its people helped form and shape these men. How fitting that they would remember their lost sons with such dignity.

All of you who participated accomplished something greater than you can imagine. Perhaps, in a way, you have enabled all of the involved families the opportunity to finally bring a small piece of their sons home.

For lack of a more profound way to express it; Thank You all!

Common is a Neighborhood at Night

To the Editor:

Today I know what Bill Buckner once felt. When I die, will I only be remembered for my connection to the lights on the Common at Christmas? I hope not. There are certainly far more important things in all our lives.

But I have always taught my children and my students to stand up for what they believe, even if it is not easy. That is what I have done.

I went before the Board of Selectmen last week and asked that they turn off the lights on the three trees at the duck pond. I talked about what a public place the Common is. It bustles with activity — elections, craft fairs, the road race, Art Center exhibit, concerts, sightseeing tours, weddings and even movies. It is a wonderful place to live. I am grateful for every day here.

But at night, we are a neighborhood, just like everywhere else in town. The light issue is not new. It was resolved several years ago when the Selectmen received more letters opposing the lights than supporting them. A compromise was reached at that time. One tree would be lit throughout the holiday season, and the trees around the pond could be lit for special events. The article adopted at the March 1995 Town Meeting made the latter a bylaw.

I left the Selectmen's meeting fully aware that there will be an attempt to amend that law. Before leaving, I gave each of the Selectmen a copy of a poem I wrote a few years ago. I claim no great literary talent; it was merely to show I have a true passion for the Common, and I quote a few lines:

"Would I have walked the Common then
And known as I now do
The promise in the seasons' change
When Hope says, Start anew?
Or felt the joy of constancy
In houses old and proud
Within whose walls, life ebbs and flows,
As young grow old and bowed?"
"I know not what the future holds.
I would not if I could.
But — for today I wake each day
With beauty at my door.
And treasure each unfolding gift
Of nature more and more.
It may be lilacs in the Spring,
Or summer's bouquet bright,
Or Autumn's gold and titan glow,
Or Winter's quilt of white."
That passion was the reason for placing myself in the midst of this controversy once again. I love the Common in every season. But I was not prepared the first Christmas I lived here for how incredibly beautiful it would be.

In the midst of the hectic pace of this season, take a few moments one evening to walk around the Common. It is to step back to a simpler time. There is a real sense of peace. Perhaps it is a gift from those who walked there before us, a real Christmas gift.

Lobster Lab is Supported

To the Editor:

The South Weekly section of the Dec. 15 Boston Sunday Globe features an article by Alexander Reid on the importance of homework and other outside activities to student achievement. It also has three charts of 39 South Shore towns that rate their 8th- and 10th-grade students on reading, math and science, the amount of homework done each day and the number of reports turned in. Cohasset comes off very well on all the charts. It is rated number one in 10th-grade science against other towns.

This article is very timely since the Selectmen and several town boards and committees are trying to decide whether or not to support a proposal which, if implemented, can only enhance an already outstanding quality in our town by adding to the fine work of our schools. This is the proposal to establish a student-focused marine biology on the Hagerty property at the harbor. The Globe article and the laboratory proposal could hardly come together at a better time.

Living a fruitful and successful life in today's rapidly changing world is increasingly dependent on the quality of one's educational background. We can make no better decisions than those which give our schoolchildren every possible opportunity to make their lives and careers successful. Establishing the marine biology laboratory in Cohasset's harbor is certainly one of those opportunities.

Lobsters on Ice While Board Looks for Details

By Jason Bouffard
COHASSET MARINER

Selectmen want answers to a variety of questions before making a decision on the fate of the Hagerty house.

At last week's selectmen's meeting, the Hagerty Committee reported its vote in favor of local oceanographer Kevin Ulmer's proposal to use the former Cohasset Colonials' showroom and office as a lobster research center.

But selectmen will seek more details before moving forward.

"I'd like to see a lot more depth," Selectman Michael Sullivan said.

They voted unanimously to have Sullivan draft a list of questions to send to Ulmer as well as town counsel and the school department. The board hopes to have the answers by mid-January.

Sullivan was not convinced that the existing structure could house all Ulmer's plans, such as a research lab, library, classroom and holding tanks.

The proposal is also supported by Cohasset Lightkeepers Corporation, a non-profit group, that has offered to refurbish the house which has been vacant since the Cohasset Colonials, a furniture kit manufacturer, moved to Hingham nearly four years ago.

The town bought the Hagerty property nearly four years ago with the understanding it would be turned into a passive recreational area available for all town citizens to use. The town later removed and demolished some of the factory buildings at the site but left the showroom, cutting room and antique boat house. The boat house is being renovated by Cohasset Maritime Institute, a school-based organization, for use as a rowing center. The cutting room is being used for town storage and the parking lot is being used to store Yacht Club floats for the winter.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Library Hours Continued from page 11

School Library Hours and Needs

To the Editor:

At the last Cohasset PSO meeting, the role of the library was discussed between Dr. Joseph Angelo, coordinator of library, media and technology for grades K-12 and the PSO board. Realizing the function of a library is rapidly changing, I attended this meeting to better understand the goals and priorities of Cohasset School's library.

During the meeting, Dr. Angelo explained the importance of updating the school's computer system and providing a trained staff to implement these changes to the school's curriculum. He also painstakingly reviewed the arduous and seemingly unobtainable method by which public schools receive state monies to fund these improvements. Dr. Angelo spoke of measures needed to safeguard against computer obsolescence while achieving a model library media program for Cohasset Public Schools. In short, Dr. Angelo wants to ensure each student has the best available method to access information.

Unfortunately, the students at Cohasset High School have access to only three working computers connected to the Internet and a library not open on a full-time basis. Even more disconcerting is that while the library is open, there is not a trained librarian to act as a resource guide or monitor students' behavior. Instead, a patchwork of school personnel and a core of volunteers have been asked to fill this role. It is unrealistic to ask the school personnel, volunteers or Dr. Angelo to meet these responsibilities. And yet there still exists the need for CHS students to have access to the printed word and the privilege to study in a library.

Ironically, this letter was penned in the Paul Pratt Library. It has been my educational experience to value the silence of a library and to learn to respect the knowledge contained within its walls. While at Paul Pratt Library, I spoke with Sue Terry, the town librarian. I was dismayed to learn our town's librarians have had a particularly trying year. It seems a stream of CHS students have been coming to the public library in search of books.

According to Sue Terry: "We don't have the books in our library to support the CHS curriculum. We cannot give them what they want. The CHS library should be open full-time."

Lobster Lab — Right Direction, Wrong Process

The following letter was sent by Kevin Ulmer to the Cohasset Selectmen.

To the Editor:

I am encouraged by last night's discussions that the pendulum has finally started to swing in the right direction, towards the adoption of our proposal for the Lobster Lab, and away from demolition or removal of the building.

However, I believe that the process which was adopted on Nan Roth's motion was both inappropriate and highly inefficient. The way in which the town will exercise its ultimate control over what goes on at the lab will be through the lease agreement.

It is inappropriate to involve Town Counsel at this stage, because all he will tell you is what you have already heard, that it all depends on the specifics of the lease agreement. Rather than spend precious town resources on legal opinions at this stage, reserve those funds for the drafting and negotiation of the lease.

Instead, draft the RFP for the lab immediately; get back a formal proposal; and make your award. During that time, continue to collect your questions and concerns so that they will all be properly covered and addressed in the details of the lease.

You might also wish to take up a suggestion of R. Murray Campbell, president of Cohasset Lightkeepers Corporation, and consider holding a public hearing on the project to gain broader input into the process.

Also, please continue to gain a better understanding of the project through further dialogue with the relevant organizations and individuals, but do not hold the project hostage at this stage in a futile attempt to have "all the answers" before issuing the RFP.

I would further suggest the Selectmen not try to "micromanage" the project, because you have neither the time nor the relevant charter to do so. After all, the CLC has a board of responsible adults who are willing to devote themselves to the project. Every organization involved in education in town (School Committee, Education Foundation and PSO) has enthusiastically endorsed the project and indicated a willingness to cooperate with and participate in the creation of the lab. The Selectmen should leave it to them to work out.

Finally, all the time, effort, energy and enthusiasm that is being expended by interested citizens in simply trying to convince the board to "give it a try" would be far better directed into serious find raising and program building.

As pointed out by Al Moore, chairman of the Hagerty Committee (Mariner, Dec. 19), there is everything to gain and nothing to lose in this proposal, so please get on with it as expediently as possible.

Dear Del Manor Nursing Home Staff,

I wish to thank and congratulate you for your dedication and loyalty to the residents you serve.

Patient services play a significant role in today's nursing facilities and the newly assembled team has shown unity in establishing many innovative programs. Great advances have been made in empowering the residents to make decisions in a climate of harmony. You have served as a model in conforming to state regulations and continue to provide outstanding care. You have made the residents aware of their importance and the vital role they play in the close knit Rockland community.

It has been an honor for me to work with all of you this year and I extend best wishes for a joy filled holiday season.

Sincerely,
Maryann T. Sullivan

Gymnasts Step up in Hanover Win

Lady Skippers Improve on Opening-Meet Score

By Joe Reardon
COHASSET MARINER

Assistant Cohasset High gymnastics coach Ruthann Ardizzoni wasn't able to attend last week's 123.5 — 117.3 victory over Hanover, but the videotape of the meet she was later able to watch gave her an overall view of how the Lady Skippers performed.

They're improving at a consistent rate.

"They went up a point from the first meet and improved on three of the events," said Ardizzoni, who judged her first gymnastics meet the night of the Cohasset/Hanover showdown. The squad "improved greatly on the vault," with improved form and crisper dismounts.

"We're just hoping to go up from there."

Tara Hettstrom was the lone winner for the Lady Skippers, placing first on the floor exercise with a solid 8.3. Her sister, Erica, finished a close third in 8.1.

Cohasset has a deeper team than Hanover, which boasts two of the best gymnasts in the South Shore League in Kim Richardson and Renee George, and it was evident as the Lady Skippers took several second and third-place finishes.

Erica Hettstrom finished behind both Richardson and George in third with a 30.8 all-around score. She was also second (7.5) on the bars to go along with her floor exercise.

Kristin Sheerin continued to impress Ardizzoni and head coach Erin Sutherland. The tiny seventh-grader took third on the bars and beam with a 7.4 and 7.9 respectively. Another seventh-grader, Caitlin Flint, made her debut in the all-around and wound up with a very commendable 29.5 for fourth.

Jodi Colwill also had a strong meet. Colwill, who along with Erica Hettstrom and Megan Pratt, captains the team, performed well enough to score an 8.0 on the beam to take second and then vaulted to a third-place finish for a 7.9 score.

The Lady Skippers have their feel-good-meet-of-the-season on Jan. 3 against Notre Dame Academy. The Hingham-based school has three former Cohasset High gymnasts, Julie Smith, Kerry Dwyer and Caroline DeRose, competing on the team.

"We really look forward to that meet," she said.

A Very Wishful Christmas: The Column

Some aspects of sports and the people involved make me feel more like the Grinch than that little elf who really wanted to be a dentist. So to get my sports wishes out before old Kris Kringle arrives, I decided to put together a list for the big guy in red. I hope they all come true.

• Athletic Director Clark Chatterton: That he won't have to spend his work hours re-scheduling all the winter sporting events because the South Shore gets buried with snow.

• Mike Greenwell: That the former Red Sox outfielder finds his new team in Japan stays loyal to him — and he stays there.

• Anonymous phone call to the Sports Dept.: Here's hoping you get backbones for Christmas. It must be tough walking around spineless every day. Weasels.

• Spring track teams: Here's to many happy laps around your new all-weather track.

• Dr. Jack Kevorkian: Here's an open invitation to "adopt" the dogs who are taken for walks on Alumni Field by their arrogant owners.

• The Cohasset High basketball team: That it doesn't hit traffic heading into the FleetCenter come March.

• The seventh-grade gymnasts: That people realize the future of Cohasset High gymnastics is currently working out four times a week and a big part of this year's squad.

• Roger Clemens: That he fattens up even more during the offseason and is nicknamed "Refrigerator" by the Toronto fans.

• The Cohasset High football program: That the teams continue to improve every year and continue to frighten Hull High head coach John Anderson.

• To overbearing youth league coaches: That they lighten up before they take all the fun out of sports for the kids.

• To overbearing youth league coaches who continue to be overbearing youth league coaches: That the 6-foot-4, 250-pound parent of a kid uses the coach to sweep off home plate with.

• To the Cohasset High varsity hockey team: That it finishes above the .500 mark to earn a trip to the Division 3 South Sectional tourney.

• To the runners in the Cohasset Roadrace-By-the-Sea 10K: Train on rolling hills, get used to running in the wind and be prepared for any kind of weather.

• To rollerbladers in the Cohasset Roadrace-By-the-Sea 10K: Rusty ball bearings on race day.

• To the Cohasset High lacrosse team: Here's to Ken Ekberg's squad qualifying for yet another tournament.

• To Marcus Camby: That his points-per-game average is higher than his UMass GPA.

And finally...that the athletes, who get injured during games or practice, recover quickly and completely. The Skippers need you!

Seventh-grader Kristin Sheerin looks to be a strong force for the Cohasset High gymnastics team this winter. Sheerin finished third on the vault with a 7.4 in the Lady Skippers' win over Hanover last Thursday.

The yield curve: oracle of the bond market

By the editors of
WORTH MAGAZINE

What's the best move for an investor who wants to buy a bond? Is it better to snap up bonds that offer higher yields but mature over longer horizons? Or would it be smarter to settle for a lower rate on one that pays you back faster?

You could ask your broker or money manager for help in answering this question. Or you could do as the pros do and decide where to stash your cash yourself with the help of the yield curve. Learning how to read the all-important yield curve and how it works can help you make the best choice in buying bonds — one that provides the optimum combination of yield and maturity.

Those who know how to look at the curve and read its meaning also can glean information important to all investors. For the yield curve is the bond market's oracle: It tells how the bond market views the future at any given moment.

The yield curve is actually the name for a simple line on a graph that plots the interest rate paid by bonds of similar types but different maturities. There are many yield curves, but the most widely followed is the one for Treasury debt, which lists three-month bills to 30-year bonds. The horizontal axis of the graph measures the length of time until each bond matures. The vertical axis, meanwhile, measures the yield of each bond. The higher the points on the line, the greater the interest paid by the bond.

Normally, the line slopes upward. That's because longer-term investments (the ones plotted on the right side of the graph) carry more risk and thus must pay higher rates of interest as compensation. In the case of Treasuries, which are guaranteed by the U.S. government, the primary risk is inflation, which reduces the worth of a bond's coupon payments as well as its eventual redemption value.

Occasionally, the curve slopes downward and is said to be inverted. Such an event took place in 1981, when short-term yields approached 20 percent but 30-year bonds yielded only 14 percent. This inversion occurred primarily because the market believed the long-term risk of inflation was much less than the short-term threat. The last time this happened was 1989.

When both short- and long-term interest rates are roughly the same, the curve is said to be flat. That is how most of the line looked in the beginning of 1995. Two-year Treasuries yielded 7.63 percent, 30-year bonds 7.86 percent. That's a tiny spread, and it means that the market currently sees little difference between the short- and the long-term risks of inflation. So investors who buy longer-term bonds currently receive only a slight premium.

In 1994, the spread between the two-year note and the 30-year bond was more than two full percentage points, or 200 basis points. The spread between the three-month bill and the 30-year bond exceeded 300 basis points. Thus, the yield curve looked much different: sloping more steeply.

But then an overheated economy and inflation fears caused Federal Reserve chairman Alan Greenspan to become alarmed. To cool things down, the Fed moved to increase short-term interest rates, making borrowing more expensive for consumers and businesses. The Fed hiked rates six times in 1994, starting in February. Yields on the three-month Treasury bill jumped to 6 percent from 3.03 percent, and the long bond went from 6.23 percent to around 7.86 percent in a year. This is what gave us the predominantly flat curve we had in January.

The Jan. 1995 yield curve has a bend between the two- and three-year maturity mark. This is called a shoulder, the place where the curve turns from steep to flat. Typically, the shoulder is where investors can find the ideal combination of the highest yield with the least maturity. "The curve is cheap just now for short maturities," said Rich Suttmeier, yield strategist at Smith Barney, earlier this year. Two-year and three-year notes were thus smart buys.

The curve changes daily, of course, as investors trade billions of dollars worth of Treasuries. What will the curve resemble in the coming months? That depends largely on the prospects for inflation.

When the curve is mostly flat, as it is now, another effective strategy is to buy at both ends of the line. "It's the barbell effect — heavy on two ends," says Ashok Varikooty, Treasury strategist at First Boston. The effect allows for what essentially is a hedging tactic. By buying both of the ends, short and long, investors can ensure that their total bond holdings will remain balanced, whatever happens with interest rates in the future.

The yield curve can be especially valuable for longer-term investors. Those with shorter time horizons should place more emphasis on their own needs. For instance, someone who plans to cash in a bond in three years for a down payment on a home should buy one with an equivalent maturity. That way, the home buyer will know exactly what to expect upon redemption of the bond.

The other option, buying a bond with the intention of selling it on the open market prior to redemption, carries an additional level of risk — the threat that interest rates will rise and undercut the underlying value of the bond. Of course, rates could drop and produce a nifty profit. But such speculation is chancy. The bond markets are probably the most efficient in the world — meaning that at any given moment the probability that rates will rise or fall are equal.

The yield curve is published every day in Investor's Business Daily and The Wall Street Journal. Buy Treasuries through a mutual fund, a broker, a bank, or a commission-free government program called Treasury Direct. For information, call (202) 874-4000, or write Department of the Treasury, Bureau of the Public Debt, Washington, D.C., 20239. An account will be opened in your name, and you'll be given an auction schedule.

Taking the mystery out of bond ratings

By Bradd L. Cuppels

Most investors know that risk is an integral factor to be considered in any investment decision. Naturally, the prudent investor tries to minimize his or her risk while maximizing returns.

One of the proven tools used to minimize risk when purchasing corporate and municipal bonds are bond ratings. Neither infallible nor permanent, these objective evaluations prepared by independent rating agencies can serve as a guide, for both you and your broker, as to the current financial stability of bond issuers.

The principal rating agencies are Moody's Investor Service and Standard & Poor's. Their analysts assess a number of factors, after which they assign a letter rating to each bond. Under the Moody's system, investment grade bonds, that is, issues which may be suitable for purchase by conservative investors, are rated Aaa, Aa, A, and Baa. S&P rates this same category as AAA, AA, A, and BBB.

Conveniently, the two rating agencies' systems are comparable (at least for the A and B categories). So, for example, a bond rated Aaa by Moody's is as safe as one rated AAA ("triple A") by S&P. In both cases, bonds carrying these respective ratings are judged to be of the highest quality, with the smallest degree of credit risk.

Christmas Services at St. Stephen's

Christmas services at Saint Stephen's Episcopal Church, 16 Highland Ave., will feature a variety of worship celebrating Christ's birth. The Christmas Eve Family Holy Communion service will be held Tuesday, Dec. 24, at 5 p.m. The Cherub and Saint Gregory Children's Choirs will sing, and junior high youth will present a dramatic reading of the Christmas story.

The Festal holy Communion Service of Christmas Eve will begin at 11 p.m., preceded by a special program of Christmas music beginning at 10:30 p.m. The Saint Stephen's adult choir with Music Director Fredrick Guzasky will offer music, which will include the 16th-century French carol, "Ding Dong! Merrily on High" and "All My Heart This Night Rejoices" by Johann Ebeling. The traditional story from the Gospel of Luke will be read from the King James Bible, and candlelight will illumine the singing of "Silent Night." The bells of the church carillon will ring out the music of Christmas.

Worship on Christmas Day, Dec. 25, will be at 10 a.m. Sunday worship will be held at the regular times, 8 and 10 a.m. New Year's Day celebrates the Holy Name of our Lord with worship Jan. 1 at 9:30 a.m.

The church school is busy preparing an Epiphany Pageant to take place Sunday, Jan. 12, at 5:30 p.m., celebrating the appearance of Jesus to the three Magi representing all the world. Children will portray angels, shepherds hurrying to Bethlehem, Joseph and Mary with baby, and the three Magi. The pageant concludes with the lighting of candles, which represent taking the light of Christ out into the world.
